A LUMINOUS SLATE.—One of the most curious adaptations of Balmmain's luminous paint is a magic slate, supplied by Messrs. Wolf & Son, which can be written upon in the dark with an ordinary leadpencil. The writing or drawing appears as so many lines of darkness surrounded by a background of light. Under many circumstances such a slate may be found very useful, but it cannot fail to be a source of much amusement. No phosphorus or other inflammable material is employed in the manufacture of the slate, its luminous properties being derived solely from its power of giving out light absorbed during the day. The writing or drawing on the slate can be easily removed by a moist rag or sponge, and the slate itself cannot be worn out, its luminous powers being re-excited by exposure to light from day to day. As a writing-tablet for desk or office the luminous slate may also be used, resembling, as it does, in color and form, the ordinary porcelain slate.

THE UTILIZATION OF SMOKE.—A company at Elk Rapids, Mich., which manufactures fifty tons of charcoal iron a day, formerly allowed the smoke made in burning the coal to go to waste. Now the smoke, as it is formed, is delivered into stills charged with lime and surrounded by cold water, the result of the condensation being first, acetate of lime; second, alcohol; third, tar; the fourth part produces gas, which is consumed under the boilers. A thousand cords of wood are converted into charcoal daily, yielding 2,800,000 cubic feet of smoke, from which are obtained 12,000 pounds of acetate of lime, 200 gallons of alcohol, and twenty-five pounds of tar. The alcohol has been contracted to a firm in Buffalo, N. Y., the Trade Review says, for five years, they furnishing the packages and receiving it at the works at eighty cents per gallon.

AMERICAN ENGINEERING.—The story is told that, twenty years ago, one of our New England railroad companies did not dare to adopt the plans of its chief engineer for an iron bridge until they had been sent over to England and approved by experts there. Last year one of the leading English engineers designed a bridge in which there were two spans of 1,700 feet each, or 100 feet more than that of the East River bridge. This design has been most severely attacked by the Astronomer Royal, and a good deal of capital made out of it. The engineer, Mr. Baker, in replying to it says: "As a sample of foreign opinion, I would quote that of Mr. T. C. Clarke, the eminent American engineer and contractor, who has built more big bridges himself than are to be found in the whole of this country," and who has just completed a viaduct of 301 feet in height, by far the tallest in the world. Referring to the proposed bridge, he writes: "If my opinion is of any value, I wish to say that a more thoroughly practical and well considered design I have never seen." I need hardly say that the opinion of such a man has far more weight than that of an army of amateurs." This, as the Railroad Gazette says, is a very gratifying evidence that American engineering is growing in its reputation abroad.

THE TEHAUATEPEC SHIP-RAILWAY. Capt. James B. Eades has resigned his position in the Government River Commission, to devote his attention exclusively to his ship-railway project. It appears that complete arrangements have been made in England for the necessary capital to complete the work, and inside of five years the railway will be carrying ships weighing, with their cargoes, 5,000 gross tons from the Gulf to the Pacific and from the Pacific to the Gulf. The construction of this railway will shorten the distance between New Orleans and San Francisco by fully 2,200 miles—making a saving of 4,400 miles on the round trip.

Important to A. O. U. W.

We occasionally send complimentary sample copies of the WATCHMAN to the various officers and members of the A. O. U. W. We ask as a special favor of those receiving them, and all interested in the success of the various Lodges will lend us a helping hand in increasing our circulation. Nothing contributes more to the successful working of the A. O. U. W. than the circulation of general Fraternity news, and the best way to secure this is through the WATCHMAN, which is an able and faithful advocate. It is to the interest of the A. O. U. W. that the WATCHMAN be placed in the hands of every Workman, and to accomplish this we must rely in a large measure upon the voluntary efforts and subscriptions.

Liberal inducements will be offered to active and reliable members who will canvass for subscriptions. Sample copies will be mailed free to Workmen on application, all of whom are invited to endeavor to assist in extending the circulation of the WATCHMAN.

Let every Workman into whose hands this notice may come, if not already a subscriber, fill out the subscription blank below, enclose two dollars, and send it to us for a year's subscription.

Provoking Temptation.

Last week a lady had her pocket picked of $90, on Market street. Her purse was rather prominently displayed, and the sneak-thief took it. It was no trick, he could take it so easily. This sort of robbery is almost a daily occurrence on the thronged, shopping thoroughfares of this city. The petty outrages are rarely mentioned in the papers, for the losers do not care to speak of the matter beyond the circle of the family and a few friends.

But this incident starts the inquiry, how far these sufferers are accountable for the misdoings of the long-fingered, predatory class. The edict has gone forth from the despot of fashion that no lady is respectably dressed who has pockets where they ought to be. The receptacle for the purse and handkerchief must be placed precisely where it is most inconvenient to use and protect. The moccasin bag carried in the hand is but little better. Not long ago a lady had her bag snatched from her as she descended from an Oakland car. In hurrying crowd there is very little danger of an expert pick-pocket being caught. The present style of dress, the prominent way that watches and purses are displayed on the street, seem almost a diabolical contrivance to tempt petty thieves. To say the least, it is time to urge the moral, place not temptation in the way of those who are easily tempted.

We have no quarrel with the life insurance companies. They are doing a legitimate work and ought not to fail, and when they cheaper, safer and better than they can offer. When asked where is our reserve fund, we answer in the pockets of 117,000 honest men.

Hope and Memory.

The three favorite words inscribed on our banner are Charity, Hope and Protection. Charity, with its warm heart of love and sympathy and open hand of benevolence, and Hope, rosy-faced, musical-voiced Hope, that carries sunlight and encouragement wherever it goes.

But the word Protection embodies a domestic idea, that fills with the most precious fragrance that charmed spot we call home.

We present our readers on this page with a bouquet of flowers, fresh and dewy in the dawn, for the lesson it may suggest. Memory will carry the reader back to the long ago, when he was one of a cluster of happy, innocent childhood, guileless and ignorant of the great world and its temptations. It will remind you of that little Eden whose roof-tree was a father's protection, and whose light was a mother's love. We hope this picture may cause the reader to appreciate the significance of that home which has burgeoned from the heart of wedded love. Look at this group of happy children! The impressions that fall upon their budding minds, though falling as softly as the leaves fall on the ground, may leave an imprint lasting as the immortality of the soul. Think, parents, you may teach the filial instinct that clings so fondly and trustingly to your love to grow as the vine

Fifty Years Together.*

(H. S. P. S. S. S.)

Let us talk of the years that are past, with
Of the fifty that we are wed;
And backward dream of the past life
As if we dream of the dead,
Of that best day of our lifetime
The sweetest we ever knew.
When we were caught up into heaven
While the world was made over anew.

When the yoke that was put upon us
Was made easy by helpful care,
And the burden that was laid upon it
Each helped the other to bear.
Ah! the flails of our faults have thrashed us
Till we heeded their chastening pain,
And the wind of our follies hath winnowed
The chaff from the golden grain.

Yet no day ever brought us a trouble,
But night spread her mantle of peace;
No grief ever came to our pillow
But the sting of the sorrow would cease,
How few of the hopes that we planted
Ever sprang to the blade and the leaf,
How few grew on through the summer
And came to the sickle and sheaf.

How many we've seen in our wedlock
Of the young, the fair and the brave,
Devoutly clasp hands at the altar
And unclasp again, at the grave.
How many that were loved tokens
And smiled on the world most fair,
That starved on vows that were broken
And lived a death of despair.

But to-day we forget all the others,
We may pity but cannot undo;
None come to their golden wedding
But the faithful, the good and the true.
Though our heads, like the hills in winter,
Are crowned with a wreath of snow,
Our hearts are singing of spring-time
Like birds in the valleys below.

Then lean on the breast of your lover,
Old sweetheart, and dream of rest
At the foot of the path we shall follow
Away to the gleaming west.
Our holiday comes in the morning,
Out of doors, it shall be to all sorrow;
And the golden glow of the evening
Gives promise of a bright to-morrow.

In a Swing.

H.

Each daisy underneath your feet
Would count itself thrice happy, sweet,
Each purple trodden clover head
Should think, even when 'twas dead,
How blest is every twisted strand
Of rope encircled by your hand—
Now up a little; faster, so!
While through the soft June air we go.
I wish that I might always stay
Below you, as I am to-day,
Keeping you far above all care
That other women have to bear;
And, high in air though you might be,
You always must come back to me.

SHE.

Dear heart, if June stayed all year long,
If twisted ropes were always strong,
If daisy bloom, and clover head
Were never brown and withered;
If every robin on the tree
Did not look down and wink at me,
And say—"That creature tried to fly,
But knows not how to soar on high";
If I could bring these things to pass,
Then you should stand upon the grass
And I above your head would sing—
But life is quite another thing,
Since one of us on earth must bide,
The other should not leave his side.

The Golden Gate.

W. C. M. H. C.

The picture is done. Roy Fielding stands before it with clasped hands and quickly coming breath. Into that canvas he has wrought the one great passion of his life, and his face is flushed with alternate hope and fear as he looks upon it. Is it worthy of his art?—will it make him famous?—or will the cold, critical eyes of the public look upon it feeling no thrill of the rapture he has felt, no echo of the inspiration which has come to him in heart throbs?

He turns away, and going to the window, stands there for a moment looking upon the distant mountains flushed with the crimson and gold of the sunset. The quiet bay is set in a halo of radiant glory and the whole city seems aglow. The quiet calm rests him, and the cool air blowing upon his face takes away its fevered flush. He grows pale and calm again, but there is a tired look in his handsome eyes as he folds his arms and leans upon the window-sill wearily.

A foot-step on the stairs rouses him and he goes to the picture, draping it calmly, reverently, as though it were some treasured thing too sacred for the world to gaze upon.

A gentle hand is laid upon his arm and his mother's voice sounds in his ears:
"Dear Roy, let me see the picture."

"No, no," he starts back laying his hands upon the draperies, as though he could not bear the thought of even his mother's eyes gazing upon it—at least not yet. But catching sight of the grieved expression on her kindly face as she turns away, he clasps her in his arms and kisses again and again the brown hair streaked with silver, and the calm brow so white and placid.

"Forgive me, mother—how unkind I was—but look!" and he draws aside the covering again, turning away with a pained expression in his eyes, for it was as though he had said: "Look upon my heart, for there it lies quivering in its sorrow."

For a few moments she stands in front of the painting, awed and silent; and when she turns to him again there is almost a sob in her voice. Her mother heart has understood it all.

"Dear Roy," she goes to the window where he is standing; "this picture will bring you fame. I know it will, for he who puts his heart upon canvas as you have done must win the sympathy and applause of the multitude."

He answers her nothing, for his thoughts are far away, and she steals from the room softly, leaving him alone with his reveries.

He is not looking upon the picture now, but he sees it all—the living picture that has haunted him day and night, giving him no rest until his hands have wrought it out upon the glowing canvas.

In the foreground is a yellow beach, a long stretch of sand and rocks, where the crested waves break in white foam as they meet the shore. Through the "Golden Gate" the broad Pacific is sweeping in a sunlit glory, and far away the purple peak of Tamalpais rises like a sentinel guarding the golden portals, and down its blue slope is a silver streak that marks the line of the trail. Over all the foothills, and the sea, and the distant coast-range is that indescribable glory of warmth and color—that blending of marvellous tints that one sees only in Californian sunsets. And the artist has caught it all—embodied it in living form—all this glory of sea and clouds. But lovelier than all, is the fair face of a young girl who stands in the foreground, her slender form outlined against the sky.

Her dusky eyes are fixed on the blue waters of the wide Pacific, as they roll at her feet. The rude sea breeze has deepened the flush on her fair young face and tossed her gold-brown hair into a careless splendor. She has borrowed no beauty from the languid lily, nor the pale Narcissus, but the crimson heart of the red rose has brushed her cheek and left its blushes there. The very breath of the sea is in her face and she seems a part of its radiant, sunlit glory. Involuntarily one catches the refrain:

"Her golden hair fell on the wall of gold
Like the delicate gossamer tangles spun
On the burnished disk of the marigold;
Or the sunflower turning to meet the sun
When the gloom of the jealous night is done
And the spear of the lily is aureoled."

In his dreams, Roy Fielding sees her, beautiful, radiant and smiling—with the childlike wonder in her brown eyes and the warm color coming and going on her fair face. Hers is a face that flashes upon you—grows upon you. It may be the wonderful light in the soft brown eyes—it may be the sudden smile that lights up her features—it may be the crimson flush that comes and goes, but be that as it may, he who looks upon it once longs to look upon it again. And in his dreams Roy Fielding sees that beautiful face—but he knows it is not for him, though he has wrought out its beauty in a living glory upon his canvas.

What has a poor artist to do with one who is so rich and proud and beautiful? Nothing. He knows it, yet he has dared to paint that face in his picture—dared to think of her by day and dream of her by night.

Once she had stood beside him on the rocks with her face lifted to the sea, and he had thought no loveliness of sea or clouds could ever compare with a face so full of warm, sympathetic beauty; and she had flashed her great eyes upon him suddenly, making the blood leap to his brow and temples. In that one moment he had been mad enough to dream that some day he could wake the woman's heart that he knew was still asleep—but when the brown eyes had turned away from him to where the fretted sunshine crossed the foaming tide, and he looked again on her face, exquisite and almost perfect in its outline and coloring, he knew that such a hope were worse than madness and he had smiled at his folly.

But now all these things come back to him—he remembers every object in that picture—the white ships sailing on the golden sea, the long stretch of yellow beach and the white capped waves sweeping in from the broad ocean. Far away two children are playing on the beach, their forms outlined against the sky and their shouts and laughter mingle with the solemn thunder of the breakers among the rocks. He remembers it all—and riding home in the early twilight, he remembers her clear cut face distinctly outlined against the waning light.

And then as the white cross of Lone Mountain had risen up clear and distinct against the sky, like some grim sentinel over the silent dead, a great despair had seemed to creep over him and he knew that the hope of his heart was dead and it were folly to regret it.

And now he stands in the dying flush of the sunset, pale and motionless. There is a tired look on his clear-featured face, and he bends his head wearily.

"The picture will bring you fame," his mother had said, but what is fame to a man when the woman he loves is thousands of miles away, and an ocean lies between them—and he knows the gulf that divides their hearts is wider and deeper than the ocean. The sea is beautiful no longer, and only the face of the girl in the picture stands out clear and distinct in the pale twilight.

"The sea is flecked with bars of gray,
The dead, dull wind is out of tune,
And, like a withered leaf, the moon
Is blown across the stormy bay."

Again a gentle hand is laid upon his arm and his mother stands beside him.

"Come, dear Roy," she says, "you have been working too hard to-day, and supper is ready—come." Then he follows her into the cheery sitting-room, where a cosy repast is laid for two.

And, for the sake of his dear mother, so lovely and quaint in her old-fashioned simplicity, he smiles as of old, and laughs and jests like his own gay self, striving to hide the pain that still throbs wearily in his heart—like the echo of a dead passion. And one day in the dark future he is glad that he kept back the regrets and shadows and gave to that clear heart only the smiles and the sunshine.

New York is in the height of its gay winter season. In hundreds of palatial homes there is laughter and music and dancing, for Lent will soon be with them, and society is half mad with pleasure and folly. Beautiful women like queenly flowers are resplendent in robes of gorgeous hue, and their laughter, soft and musical, echoes the strains of haunting waltzes.

But in one of these elegant drawing-rooms a young man stands apart from the gay throng, silent and self-contained. He does not dance, and he is content to stand and watch the dancers who move so gracefully in the dreamy mazes of the waltz.

His fondest dreams have been realized. Fame and fortune are his, and he has been lionized and petted in New York society until he is almost weary of it all. Courtied by men of wealth and standing, and flattered by fair women, it would be no wonder if he had not lived for awhile in a strange dream of enchantment, but now the intoxication of society falls upon him, the very breath of the ball-room, with its perfume of flowers, stifles him, and he longs for the wild, free breath of the west, the boundless swell of the blue ocean he loves so well.

He wanders into the cool conservatory, sitting there for a while among the fragrant blossoms and foliage, wishing that he might remain there undisturbed until he can, with no disrespect to his hostess, excuse himself and hasten home. He is thinking of his mother, who has been quite ill for the last few weeks, for, though she insisted upon his coming, yet he has felt a strange uneasiness all the evening.

"Dear mother," he says to himself softly, "I believe she too longs for the dear old brown coast—and I know that the sight of the purple mountains would make her well. She is tired of the rude winds and the endless snows of this Eastern climate." And then he plans to himself—their journey home—how he will surprise her with his sudden plans, and then they will speed away over the white plains and across the snow-covered mountains to the green hills of the golden State. She will get well then and when she is strong again, he will take her to Europe, and together they will see all that is bright and beautiful and interesting in that wonder-land. He will see the treasures of art, he will study the old masters and learn from the new, and he will be worthy of the encouragement and patronage that has been so kindly bestowed upon him. And perhaps—but the thought makes him smile—in that charmed land across the ocean, in London, in Paris, in Italy, or somewhere on that broad continent he may meet again the woman he loves, the sweet girl-face that is ever in his dreams.

"Why Mr. Fielding, I have been looking for you everywhere. You have been missed sadly—a dozen charming young ladies have enquired after that 'delightful young artist,'—but I have other news for you, your aunt has just sent you a telegram. Here it is."

He takes it with trembling fingers scarcely daring to break the seal.

"I hope it is nothing serious," she says kindly. But his face whitens as he reads.

"My mother is dying"—then his voice chokes and he looks at her humbly. She is woman enough to understand, and she lets him go from the house without a word to any one.

In a few moments he is flying toward the home of his mother's sister, in a closed carriage, and he thinks horses never went so slow before, for in his sudden agony moments are hours of endless torment.

In a darkened chamber a white-haired woman lies counting the seconds that she knows are numbered for her. Her face is gray and colorless and she is praying death to wait for her—just a moment—that she may look upon her loved one's face.

"My boy!" He kneels at her side and clasps her in his arms, kissing the brow that is already cold with the dews of death.

But she says no more, for the feeble hand that strokes his brown hair, falls stiff and motionless by her side, and the soft voice is hushed forever. He has not been too late, for the last look in his mother's eyes was a benediction, and in after days its holy calm falls upon him. And now he lays the saintly head on the pillow and sobs like a child. He knows that never more in all the wide world will there be a friend like this—and the thought is desolation.

Outside, the white snow is weaving a shroud for the dead, and the world is silent as though hushed by the hand of heaven.

In the cemetery the little graves are piled high with snow, as though the cruel hand of death would bury them from sight. In the summer time the blossoms grew there, so sweet and fragrant, watched by the eyes of love; but long ago they drooped and died, and the little hearts buried beneath the snow are alone in the cold night, with only the pale moon to watch and guard them. Over the white urns are leaves of frost, and the broken shafts of marble are hung with wreaths of snow. Ah, how beautiful is death in this winter sleep. But the cold winds blow rudely over new-made graves, and hearts that must listen to the clods that fall in the open graves, long for the summer winds to blow and the flowers to grow over the heads of their loved ones.

Only the dead are happy. They have wreaths of immortelles and snow-white blossoms—and love and tenderness. What have the living when they are gone? Bitter regrets and vain reproaches, tears and sable plumes.

But when the immortelles are buried in the snow-drifts and the sacred calm falls upon the hills—when the dead by the living are forgotten, and the stainless snow hides from sight the black and shrouded pall—then the wind whispers to the sleeping dead: "It is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die."

And the heart watching in the darkened chamber hears the still, small voice, and stills its cry of agony. On the silver hair of his dead mother his tears have fallen, and he wipes them away sacredly and tenderly. And the angels in heaven come down, and gathering up the sacred gems bear them away to shine in the jeweled crown of his loved mother. Beautiful thought that the tears we shed for our dead are garnered in heaven!

In the art gallery Roy Fielding stands, watching the people who have come for the last time to look upon his picture, for to-morrow he takes it away. There it hangs, the beautiful "Golden Gate," and the eyes that look upon it are filled with admiration and wonder. But he does not heed them—though his eyes are fixed upon the throng of people in front of it—for his thoughts are far away. Once their admiration and praise would have filled him with joy—now the plaudits of the multitude have no power to thrill him. Thousands of dollars he has been offered for the picture that New York art lovers have grown wild about, but he has refused them all. He would not have sold the picture had they offered him a million. In one week he sails for Paris, and the picture goes with him.

How he watches them listlessly. His face is pale and sad, showing the traces of the great sorrow that has passed over him, and he stands in the shadow as though the sunlight gave him pain. One by one they go away. The afternoon's sun creeps lower and lower, and only a gleam of fading light shines upon the "Golden Gate."

Only one is left in the gallery beside himself—a young girl. When the others are gone she steps in front of the picture and lifts her veil.

He starts back and catches his breath. Her face and the one in the picture are the same. There is the same child-like wonder in the brown eyes—the same careless splendor of golden hair. But the flush has died out of the fair young face and it has a graver, older look. She looks at the face in the picture longingly—sadly. It were as though she were looking back upon her former self, and wondering at the laughter in the eyes and the imperious smile on the proud lips, for she knows that the careless grace of girlhood will never come back to her. She remembers, with a vague regret, the summer's day when she stood on the rocks beside him—smiling in her imperious way, with no thought of the passion that throbbed in his heart. But she has learned since—as he has learned by heart-throbs—and she knows that the man who has wrought her face into his picture for the whole world to see, must have loved her as he did his very soul. What will he think of her now! The thought brings an undefinable scorn and sadness to her lips.

She turns away slowly and there are tears in her down-cast eyes. But some one takes both her hands in his and holds them there—looking down upon her in the gathering dusk, with a proud, impetuous passion on his eager face.

The dusky eyes raised to his are full of a startled surprise. But a glad light chases the tears away.

"Dear Roy," she says, "you have grown so famous. Can you still remember me?"

"Remember you! I have prayed God to forget you sometimes, fearing my love would make me mad. But now—you shall know it all—I love you, and to you I owe my fame. I give you my love, my life, will you scorn them now?"

For answer she stands before him, her brown eyes lifted up to his, full of their olden splendor, and the warm flush coming and going in her fair face. She does not need to speak, for he understands the sudden smile flashed upon him from those proud, imperious eyes. And for the first time since he has laid his dead under the drifting snow, the glad light creeps over his pale face.

"Dear heart," he whispered, and under the shadow of the "Golden Gate" their silent troth is plighted. There is no need of words, for the holy calm of his mother's benediction has fallen upon him.

The Vain Little Girl.

Once there was a vain lit-tle girl named Kate, who thought more of her fine clothes than of a-ny-thing else. She would look in the glass a long time when-ev-er she put on her hat, and then she would turn and twist her-self this way and that, to ad-mire the bow of her wide sash-rib-bon.

Well, one day her mam-ma said: "Kate, if you will put on your hat quick-ly, you may drive with me in the Cen-tral Park. But I can wait for you on-ly two min-utes, my dear."

"Oh, yes, Mam-ma," said Kate, much de-light-ed; "I shall be read-y." So she went up-stairs and braid-ed her hair, and tied it with a rib-bon. Then she put on her best shoes, and her best dress, and her best sash. This she tied a-bout her waist in front, mak-ing a large bow; then she pushed the sash down as far as she could, and then turned it a-round so as to put the bow be-hind. But Kate did not yet feel sat-is-fied. The pink sash, she thought would, after all, look bet-ter than the blue one; so she took off the blue and put on the pink sash. Then she said she must have a pink bow on her hair to match the sash. At last she was near-ly dressed, all but the gloves—which pair should she wear? Her lace mits were pret-ty, but she felt they were too old; she put on her white silk gloves, but soon took them off, because they were too short to suit her. Then she put on her kid gloves, and felt just like cry-ing be-cause they were a little loose. Poor, fool-ish lit-tle girl! At last her gloves were on, and af-ter tak-ing her lit-tle par-a-sol from the shelf, and ad-mir-ing her-self in the glass a-gain and a-gain, she ran down-stairs.

"Mam-ma, Mam-ma!" she called. But Mam-ma did not an-swer.

Then Bridg-et, who was dust-ing the hall, said:

"Shure, Miss Ka-tie, if it's yer mam-ma ye are want-in', she's gone out rid-in' 'most an hour a-go, so she has."

Poor Kate! She sat down on the stairs and cried.

"It was all the fault of my gloves," she sobbed.

DON'T MEDDLE.—Here is an illustration of the folly of meddling with things you do not understand: While a party of scientific men were preparing to observe the recent transit of Venus in New Mexico, a powerful equatorial telescope was mounted in an observatory with a clock-work mechanism, which enabled the telescope to accurately follow the sun. Prof. Davidson was constantly watching the slow course of the planet, which, through the darkened glass, appeared like a small black spot rolling across a plate of pale, gleaming gold. A bystander was about to apply his eye directly to the end of the telescope, when Prof. Davidson snatched him away in alarm, exclaiming, "It will burn your eye out!" and he told how, for experiment, he had placed a direct object glass in the opening, and the powerfully concentrated rays had melted it almost in a flash.—Youth's Companion.

Household Hints.

Whitewashes.

There are several methods of making serviceable wash. One is made as follows: Three pecks of water lime, one peck silver sand, and half a peck of salt. This is used for old, rough fences and outbuildings. The common whitewash is made by putting quicklime into a tight barrel, pouring on water to slake it, and adding water till it is of the consistency of cream. This is used for ordinary work. But a much better whitewash, which stands weather well, is made as follows:

Put half a bushel of quicklime in a barrel and add boiling water until it is covered nearly six inches deep; cover the barrel to keep the steam in, and when the violent ebullition is over, add water enough to bring it to the consistency of cream, allowing four pounds of rice flour to each half bushel of lime, or the rice flour may be mixed with the water for slaking, mixing the flour carefully in cold water before putting it in the hot water. Stir constantly in the hot water until thoroughly set, and then pour it all over the lime, as directed.

To improve the above, add two pounds of sulphate of zinc and one pound of salt. To change the color, add yellow ochre for cream tints, raw umber and lampblack for gray tints, and umber, red and lampblack for fawn tints. The permanence of whitewash thus prepared is remarkable, and, when once tried, will be used to the exclusion of the ordinary mixture.

POTATO SOUFFLE.—Six large, smooth potatoes, half a cupful of boiling milk, one teaspoonful of butter, the whites of four eggs, salt and pepper to taste. Wash the potatoes clean, being careful not to break the skins. Bake forty-five minutes. Take the potatoes from the oven, and with a sharp knife cut them in two, lengthwise. Scoop out the potato with a spoon, and put it in a hot bowl. Mash light and fine; add the seasoning, butter and milk, and then half the whites of the eggs. Fill the skins with the mixture. Cover with the remaining white of the egg, and brown in the oven. Great care must be taken not to break the skins.

APPLE CAKE.—One cup sugar, piece of butter the size of an egg, four eggs, one cupful of flour, one half teaspoonful of baking powder, or, one half cupful each of sugar, butter and milk, two cupfuls of flour, one egg, one teaspoonful cream tartar, one half teaspoonful of soda. Bake as jelly cake, and place between a jelly made of four large apples grated, one egg, one cupful of sugar, grated rind and juice of one lemon; let it come to a boil, and when cool spread between the cakes.

BREAD GRIDDLE CAKES.—An excellent medium for utilizing stale pieces of bread is the bread griddle cake. Soak over night, in an earthen dish or pan, a pound of stale bread in sufficient milk to completely saturate it; in the morning mash fine, add three well beaten eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and flour sufficient to make a batter, and cook like ordinary griddle cakes.

COTTON ROLLS.—When your bread is ready for the pans, take off the size of one loaf, yolks of two eggs, one cup of white sugar, one teaspoonful of soda. Beat the soda in with the yolks and sugar, then a teacup of lard. Roll out until about one half an inch thick, spread it over with butter, and sugar after it is buttered. Cut with a large round cutter and fold over (half moon). Let it raise very light in pans before baking.

TOMATO TOAST.—Run a quart of stewed ripe tomatoes through a colander, place in a porcelain stew pan, season with butter, pepper and salt and sugar to taste; cut slices of bread thin, brown on both sides, butter and lay on a platter, and just before serving add a pint of good sweet cream to the stewed tomatoes, and pour them over the toast.

Health Column.

Constipation.

Constipation is the beginning of many diseases. It is the most prevalent of all affections among those not accustomed to out-door activities. It frequently commences in infancy through the neglect or ignorance of parents; and the health sometimes becomes permanently impaired, before the cause is discovered by the physician.

There should be at least one free and natural movement of the bowels every day, and when that is not the case, all proper means should be promptly employed to bring it about. Nature intends that the waste material, after digestion is completed, shall be passed out of the system within a certain time, but if that time is exceeded it commences to be absorbed, thus the blood is poisoned and the vital force is impaired; hence the body becomes an easy prey to disease.

Dyspepsia is generally the first diseased condition caused by constipation. The liver soon becomes involved as a result of indigestion, then the kidneys. It is evident that a long continued derangement of either of these important organs must result most unfortunately. All experience proves that habitual constipation is a very unsafe condition of the system, and one liable at any time to develop incurable diseases.

Various plans have been devised for the cure of this distressing complaint; but we do not believe in restricting the treatment to any one remedy. To secure success, various methods must be employed, and employed persistently. Some will after a while lose their effect, and others must be substituted; no quarter should be shown until this great enemy to health is overcome. The habit of taking purgative medicines to relieve the bowels often increases the trouble; that is, the system becomes accustomed to this remedy and there is no relief without it; the remedy debilitates, and it becomes only a question of time how long the treatment can be borne.

As in these cases there is always a torpid liver, we should commence the treatment with a mild cathartic—as two or three liver pills; and then pay especial attention to the diet. Bread made from crushed wheat or oat meal should be used; we should not restrict the patient as to other foods, except as to quantity. He should eat enough, but not overload the stomach. A tumbler of cold water with a teaspoonful of table salt dissolved in it and drank every morning half an hour before breakfast, often acts like magic in restoring the bowels to their natural condition. There are many cases of obstinate constipation, where the whole trouble exists in the lower part of the rectum, by impaction of fecal matter, due to feeble action of the muscles, and to a congested and dry condition of the mucous membrane at that point.

Regular and vigorous out-door exercise is all important. Kneading the bowels with the hands has been recommended; also, the drinking of water frequently, to which we should always add a little table salt.

The frequent use of a syringe should be avoided, for much the same reason that cathartics ought to be avoided. No harsh or very active treatment is required in these cases; but mild remedies may be employed persistently; in fact, they should never be remitted until the bowels become regular and the health is restored. We believe that a majority of cases are curable. We know of one case of great severity that lasted twenty two years, and was then cured, although the general health has never been fully restored.—Hall's Journal of Health.

SMOKING FOR HEALTH.—"Don't you know it's very wrong to smoke, my boy?" said an elderly looking lady in a railway waiting-room, to Young America, who persisted in puffing a cigarette, much to the old lady's discomfort.

"Oh, I smoke for my health," answered the boy, emitting a volume of smoke from his mouth, which almost strangled the old lady.

"But you never heard of a cure from smoking," continued the old lady when she had regained consciousness.

"Oh, yes, I did," persisted the boy, as he formed his mouth into a young Vesuvius; "that's the way they cure pigs."

"Smoke on, then," quickly replied the old lady; "there's some hope for you yet!"

HERE is a suggestion which should be borne in mind: When you have the woodwork in a room painted, it is a good plan to have about two inches of the floor painted also; have the paint the same color as that of the baseboard; then if, when changing carpets, the carpet will not come close to the wall, the little space left will not be so unsightly.

Worth Knowing.

Improved Leather for Pump Valves.

Almost every one who has had anything to do with leather valves, whether in connection with blowing engines or other machinery, says the Iron Age, knows the difficulties attendant upon the use of ordinary leather for the purpose. Various substitutes for leather have been tried, among which may be mentioned rubber in various shapes, but serious objections to all have been evident, even on slight trial, and the demand for a really good article for this purpose is widespread. The Shultz Belting Co., of St. Louis, recently introduced a peculiarly prepared article of leather for this use, which, says the Age, by its characteristics possesses many advantages for such uses. In positions where ordinary leather has in a few days broken off by the hinge-like motion to which valves are subjected, valves made of fulled leather have proven very durable. A peculiarity is that the material thus produced becomes softer the more it is bent and worked. The Cambria Iron Co., placed valves made of this material in the most severe parts of their engine, and up to a very short time since they were still in use and were working satisfactorily. The statement is made by the general manager of the company that valves made of ordinary leather in the same position only last a few days. From the fact that valves made of this material, wherever introduced, have given very great satisfaction, it would seem that the employment of leather of this kind, for the purpose, was a matter in which iron manufacturers generally are interested.

ON THE AMMONIA IN THE AIR AND IN RAIN, ETC., AT GREAT HEIGHTS.—It has long been known that the small traces of ammonia in the air are carried down to the soil by meteoric precipitates, and Schlosing has shown that it is fixed directly by the oxidizing action of the soil and leaves. In connection with these investigations he also called attention to the sea as the great reservoir which supplied the air with ammonia. He devised an ingenious method, which enabled him to operate on large quantities of air, and with it he examined the currents of the air circulating near the ground. Recently Muntz and Auber (Comptes Rendus, xcv., 788) have been estimating the amount of ammonia in the air on the top of Pic du Midi, which is 2,877 meters (nearly two miles) above the level of the sea. The tests were made morning and evening in a laboratory especially erected for the purpose. The average was 1.35 milligrammes in 100 cubic meters. These numbers, although so extremely small, do not differ perceptibly from those obtained at the earth's surface. They also made thirteen analyses of rain, seven of snow, and five of fog. In rain water they found between 0.34 and 0.80 milligramme per liter, in fog 0.19 to 0.64 milligramme, and in snow 0.06 to 0.14 milligramme of ammonia per liter.

AN INTERNAL MITE IN FOWLS.—Prof. Thos. Taylor, Microscopist of the Department of Agriculture, had occasion recently to dissect a sick chicken, and he found that all parts of the lungs, the bronchie, and the linings of the thorax and abdominal cavities were covered more or less thickly with a mite. An examination we were requested to make showed it to be in all respects identical with Cytolichus sarcopoides, Meguin. This parasite is known in Europe to inhabit the air passages of gallinaceous birds, giving the transparent and membranous linings of these passages the appearance of gold beater's skin speckled with flour. It is likewise found in the bronchial tubes and their divisions, and even in the bones with which the air sacs communicate. Meguin believes that while the mite may be extremely numerous, so as to cause mucous irritation and induce asphyxia and congestion by obstruction of the bronchie, and that birds may thus die, yet it is incapable of causing, as Gerlach and Zundel believe, enteritis or inflammation of the peritoneum.

THE STEAM ENGINE.—Taking the best types of engines of to-day as a starting point, we must depart in the following directions: We do not particularly need to increase the efficiency of the boiler as an evaporator, but we must increase its ability to withstand pressure without increasing its cost. We must decrease the friction of the engine and of the machinery of transmission to the point where the useful work is delivered. We must produce better vacuums in the condenser, and diminish its cost. We must diminish the cost of the engine. We must diminish the cost of the attendance on engines, boilers and machinery, and of lubrication. We must increase the durability of engines, boilers and machinery. Coal is too cheap even now to admit of increased economy of it at the cost of increased outlay plant and attendance.

BRASS WORK that is so dirty by smoke and heat as not to be cleaned with oxalic acid should be thoroughly washed or scrubbed with soda, or potash water, or lye. Then dip in a mixture of equal parts of nitric acid, sulphuric acid, and water; or, if it cannot be conveniently dipped, make a swab of a small piece of woolen cloth upon the end of a stick and rub the solution over the dirty or smoky parts; leave the acid on for a minute and then wash clean and polish.

OUR CITY LODGES.

Bernal, No. 19.

On Monday, the 13th of May, a small number of the faithful brethren of Bernal met in their new hall on Sixteenth St., between Mission and Valencia. There being a vacancy in the office of Guide and I. W., Deputy Lamont acting as G. M. W., installed the very worthy brethren selected for the positions in a manner that was dignified, and creditable, as he used no ritual, and was word perfect. The growth of this old pioneer has always been slow but steady. During the present term six have received the M. W. degree. There being no work on hand, after the business had been carefully dispatched, by request of the efficient Master Workman, Bro. Anderson, the foreman, Bro. Nolte, gave the secret work of the M. W. degree, and was credited with being almost perfect. The balance of a very pleasant evening was spent in sociability and fraternal speeches and reading selections. Their membership is now at the 105 mark, and it has become a settled fact that to pass the doors of Bernal Lodge as a member thereof the closest scrutiny is made, and a creditable record, morally and physically, must be the result before he can enter.

Burns, No. 68.

We made a short visit to Burns Lodge a few evenings since, in their new home in Pythian Castle, and found a good average attendance, and an enjoyable meeting was had. Bro. Jones, P. M. W. of Weaverville Lodge, Bro. Munsch, from Lodi Lodge, No. 108, Bro. Curry, from Valley, No. 30, and Brothers O'Brien, Vollmer, Duncan, Philbrook and Schroud P. M. W., made very interesting and congratulatory speeches that were well received. Gus. Pohlman, the veteran Recorder, by request sang several character songs that were highly entertaining. We take this occasion to congratulate the brethren of Burns Lodge on their very efficient staff of officers, and prosperous condition of their Lodge.

Fidelity, No. 136.

Monday evening, May 14th, the members of Fidelity Lodge gave a complimentary banquet to Bro. Charles E. Wilson, Deputy G. M. W., at the Palace Hotel. The menu was elaborate, and the occasion one of unusual enjoyment. Short, pithy, and appropriate speeches were made by Bros. Samuel B. Wiggin, J. A. Wright, T. A. Farless, Geo. R. Sanderson, F. S. Douty, J. W. Rourke, J. W. Belding, N. T. James, A. O. Carpenter, of Ukiah, and others. Singing by Bros. McGee and Mitchell greatly enlivened the entertainment. A letter was read from J. T. Rogers, G. M. W., and a telegram from Bro. E. M. Reading, at present in Portland, Oregon, all of a congratulatory character. Deputy Wilson responded in a very happy manner. It was really a superb affair.

Friendship, No. 179.

We visited this young and vigorous Lodge on May 16th, and found them as usual busy performing the work of initiating members. One was given the J. W. degree and three petitions were received for the degrees. Under the head of "Good of the Order," Dr. Jewell Bruton and several others made acceptable speeches that were pleasant and profitable. They now have a membership of 130, and the Lodge is in a prosperous condition.

Harmony, No. 9.

On Saturday evening, May 19th, this old and vigorous pioneer conferred the M. W. degree on two young men in a very efficient and commendable manner. Owing to vacancies in some of the offices Deputy Poland was on hand with our genial Bro. Harney, to install them. After the work of the Lodge had been finished a short season was spent in speeches, recitations, and suggestions for the welfare of our Order that was highly entertaining. At the close of the meeting a motion was made that at their coming installation of officers in July a fine lay-out for the inner man, as also a vote of thanks to Deputy Poland and Harney for their services as installing officers.

Magnolia, No. 41.

The evidence of thrift and prosperity is evident in this subordinate. On last Monday evening, there was a fair attendance, and the M. W. degree was conferred in a way to reflect credit on the staff of officers. One application was received. This Lodge pays sick benefits of $10 per week, and warrants for three sick brothers were ordered. The Master Workmen, Bro. G. Choyinski, is an excellent presiding officer and strictly enforces the rules of the Order without respect of persons. This Lodge is chiefly composed of young men, who are ambitious to excel in every excellency that gives dignity and impressiveness to the work, and sometime was spent after the formal close of the Lodge, in receiving instruction.

Memorial, No. 174.

A very interesting meeting was held by this subordinate, last Monday evening. The attendance was not up to the average. The M. W. degree was conferred, but we came in too late to witness the service of initiation. This Lodge or at least some of the members intend to give a banquet on the evening of the 9th inst, the place not yet designated. This Lodge is chiefly composed of young men, and is full of vigor and enterprise.

Noe Valley, No. 185.

The regular quarterly social of Noe Valley Lodge, No. 185, was given on Wednesday, May 23, 1883. There was a large attendance in their new hall, and the exercises were very instructive and entertaining. The following was the programme: Overture, concertina solo, by Mr. Robert Wilsford; song, Miss McNeil; recitation, Miss Minnie Cowen, which was finely rendered; piano solo, Harry J. Lask, President of the Board of Relief, for which he was given a hearty recall; address, Deputy Lemont, of District, No. 4, which was well received; original song, the inimitable Sam Booth, P. M. W., at the close of which he was recalled; address, John D. Thompson, P. D. D. G. M., on the aims, objects, etc., of the A. O. U. W., which was listened to with marked appreciation; solo, Miss Ella Lark, daughter of Bro. Lark, of Bernal Lodge, No. 19; violin solo, Mr. Johnson, of Johnson & Guttman's band; impersonations in costume, Mr. G. H. Vaughn and Master John Sullivan; trio, Miss Mamie Madison, Miss Edith McNeil, and Miss Nellie McClaur, accompanied on piano by Miss O'Conner; dialogue, Miss W. Dober, Miss B. Ross, Master Geo. Ross; song, Mr. Guttman; comic speech, in costume, Mr. Vaughn. This concluded the programme. The following were the committees: Reception Committee—J. J. White, W. S. Semmonds, C. V. Thompson. Committee on Arrangements—A. V. Thompson, Leon Carran, John D. Thompson. Floor Manager—Leon Carran, M. W. Floor Committee—G. M. Lawton, W. C. Dudley, Frederick Luhrs. The balance of the evening was spent in dancing, to the latest music of Johnson & Guttman's band.

Unity, No. 27.

Tuesday evening, May 22d, there was a gala meeting of this prosperous Lodge. A large number of the members were present, and a number of visitors, as it had been whispered that eight candidates would receive the M. W. degree, one of which was a city father, Deputy Danforth, who was present, took occasion to say that each officer did their work in a perfect manner. Unity, No. 27, has made a bright record in our Order by her generosity and deeds of charity to Workmen, and especially to unfortunate and needy members of their Lodge. Three petitions were received for the degrees, and an Order drawn for $300 on the Receiver in favor of the Trustees, to be deposited in bank. Under the head of the "Good of the Order" Deputy Danforth, C. W. L. Kens, P. M. W., of Gold Hill, No. 1, Nevada, and Supervisor Reichenbach made acceptable speeches.

BUTTE COUNTY.

Biggs, No. 102.

Monday, May 28th, this Lodge gave a superb ball on opening their new hall. The Chico Enterprise says: "We arrived in time to brush up and take our place in the Grand March, at the fine new hall to be dedicated. Church & Jones' band from Sacramento, was on hand discoursing the finest music to be had on such occasions. A large crowd from all the adjacent country and neighboring towns was in attendance. There were also numerous couples from Chico, Oroville, Marysville, and Sacramento. The hall is 40x100 ft. in the clear, and was beautifully decorated. At 9 o'clock the Grand March began, headed by John Shaeffer with Miss Kate Wilson, of Chico. One hundred couples followed, the long line being suddenly brought to an end by our sawed-off friend, Shorty Pence, with a handsome partner. On went the dance, and joy was unconfined until the broad daylight gave notice of time to take a rest. This was the fifth anniversary of the Order in Biggs. With such costly music and other expenses the committee finds, we are told, that their outlay amounts to about $300, and yet they expect to have about $150 clear to apply on the hall. It was a highly creditable and successful affair, and greatly enjoyed."

HUMBOLDT COUNTY.

Bay City, No. 111.

Bro. Thomas Somerville, of Harmony, No. 9, in this city, on his last trip to Eureka, Humboldt county, made a call on the brethren of Bay City; and reports to the WATCHMAN that he found a full attendance of enthusiastic Workmen. Their place of meeting in the new Odd Fellows' Hall is one of the most attractive and well-furnished halls in the State, and the very cordial reception and welcome given Bro. Somerville by the members of this Lodge, will ever remain as a pleasant "place keeper in memory." We are glad to chronicle these cheerful tidings, and hope some brother of Bay City will feel the spirit move him to keep the WATCHMAN posted, not only as to the state of affairs in this Lodge, but fraternal matters in old Humboldt.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

Santa Ana, No. 82.

The entertainment given by this Lodge May 11th, was a brilliant affair. The Santa Ana Standard says: "For several weeks past the members of the Order have labored hard, sparing neither pains nor expense to make the entertainment of last night the great success which it proved to be. Spurgeon's Opera Hall was crowded to overflowing with one of the best and most fashionable audiences that ever came together in Santa Ana. A great many persons were present from Orange, Tustin and other portions of the valley. The concert was prefaced by a few well-chosen remarks upon the principles and progress of the A. O. U. W., made by Charles E. Berry. After the concert came a tableau, emblematic of the Order, which was effective and striking. The funny farce entitled 'Slasher and Clasher,' concluded the stage programme. W. H. Marquis, as 'Sampson Slasher,' approved himself a thorough comedian, and all the participants did well. The floor was immediately cleared and those desiring to 'trip the light fantastic toe' were afforded an opportunity. Many availed themselves of it and a pleasant time was had until a late hour. Seats were provided for 700 persons and fully 100 more were forced to stand during the entertainment. The Workmen deserve great credit for this royal and wholesale entertainment of their friends."

NEVADA COUNTY.

Grass Valley, No. 51, and Highland, No. 104.

Our Grass Valley correspondent writes in the following cheerful vein: "Grass Valley, No. 51 will compare favorably with any of our Lodges in attendance and thoroughness of work. Bro. C. P. Whiting, M. W., decides questions promptly, and the business of the Lodge is quickly dispatched. Recently an interesting debate was had on the subject of voting, and was participated in by Bro. T. H. Moore, Bro. J. W. Cooley, P. M. W., P. M. W., M. P. Stone, of Highland, No. 104, and others, several members not agreeing with the recent decisions of the Grand Lodge on the subject. Highland Lodge, No. 104, has a membership of about sixty-five, composed principally of the business men of Grass Valley. Occasionally an assessment is paid out of the general fund, although the monthly dues are but twenty-five cents. No member of this Lodge has ever been suspended for non-payment of dues. Strangers visiting the Grass Valley Lodges, are insured a cordial reception. The above Lodges have combined with the Degree of Honor and other Lodges meeting in the same Lodge-room, and purchased a fine new organ."

SANTA CLARA COUNTY.

Enterprise, No. 17, and Mt. Hamilton, No. 43.

The excursion given by these two Lodges Thursday, May 24th, was a financial and social success. The train was made up of two car-loads from Mountain View, four from Santa Clara, and twenty-two from San Jose. The day was delightful, and nothing occurred to mar the happiness of the day. The quaint old town of Monterey, the Pacific Grove Retreat, Cypress Point, Pebble Beach, Moss Grove, the seaside strolls, drives, baths, and cordon of hills covered with a forest of pines, all combine to make this a pleasant resort. The architectural beauty of the Hotel Del Monte, the spacious grounds around it, ornamented and diversified with beds and plots of flowers and shrubbery, swings, rustic chairs, croquet grounds, and tennis courts, all help to make this point the coming ideal paradise of pleasure-seekers and excursionists. The success of this excursion reflects great credit on the management of the committee and officers.

SOLANO COUNTY.

Vallejo, No. 75.

Our indefatigable Deputy Danforth visited the brethren of Vallejo on the 22d of May. He reports to us that his reception was most cordial. His sojourn among these brethren during the next day, he says will ever be the happiest of his fraternal remembrances. In company with Bro. Brace, one of the delegates from Vallejo No. 75, to the last Grand Lodge, they spent a portion of the day in recruiting for Vallejo Lodge. Armed and equipped with the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN, their pilgrimage was a success. Vallejo Lodge is in a prosperous condition, with a membership of 100 among the best citizens of this historic city. Their business on this particular evening was only the regular routine business, which was transacted with care and dignity. After which a short time was spent in an interchange of views on the workings and practices of our Order.

SONOMA COUNTY.

Santa Rosa, No. 28.

We made a flying visit to Santa Rosa a few days since, and had the pleasure of meeting Deputy George Hall, and A. D. Laughlin, M. W., from whom we learned that this Lodge is in a prosperous state. It has ninety members, and there were four applications pending at the time of our visit. Santa Rosa is located in the heart of one of the richest counties of the State, and has an air of thrift and solid growth. There are many beautiful buildings, and the hotels are specially elegant and well managed. As the shire town of the county, and the seat of a prosperous college, Santa Rosa draws to it men of culture and scholarship, and eminent professional men. This Lodge consequently, has many able men who make the meetings pleasant and instructive.

TRINITY COUNTY.

Weaverville, No. 161.

We casually met Bro. T. E. Jones, P. M. W. of Weaverville Lodge, at a recent meeting of Burns, No. 68, in this city. He brought cheerful tidings from this little town nestled far away there in a northern county. The Lodge has thirty members, has never lost a member by death or suspension, and is fairly prosperous for a mountain town. It is a good place to make Workmen, in a region of such pure air and water. Bro. Jones is the Deputy for that District.

DEGREE OF HONOR.

Golden Dawn D. of H., No. 10.

Saturday evening, 12th of May, although a stormy evening, there was a large attendance of the brethren and sisters of Golden Dawn, No. 10, D. of H., together with a large number of invited guests. It was an open meeting and the exercises consisted of a choice and highly entertaining programme with dancing and an ice cream supper. Wm. H. Barnes, P. G. M. W., was present and made the speech of the evening, which was followed by an original charade, by Sam Booth, P. M. W., which was finely rendered by members of Golden Dawn. The festivities were kept up until a seasonable hour, every one pleased and delighted.

The members of Golden Dawn, D. of H., gave a very interesting literary and musical programme in their cozy Lodge-room, Blair's Hall, Mission street, on Saturday evening, May 26th. There was not a large attendance but select, and the evening was most enjoyable. Sister Ellen Booth, daughter of Sam Booth, P. M. W., in a commendable manner introduced the following programme, viz: Instrumental trio, piano, violin, and cornet, Sister Ella Booth, Deputy Poland, and Bro. Payson, P. M. W.; reading, Sister Delia King; song, Bro. E. C. Sutcliffe; vocal duet, Sisters Kate Nasson and Ella Booth; reading, Sister Clara A. Poland, P. W. S. of H.; instrumental duet, piano and cornet, Bro. Payson, P. M. W., and Sister Payson, his wife. This very artistic performance closed the selections made by the members of Golden Dawn, after which members of Eastern Star made complimentary and pleasant remarks, and Sister Gallup gave a humorous solo, that was given a hearty recall. The Lodge was closed and the balance of the evening was spent in sociability and spirited dancing. This very enjoyable meeting is only a repetition of exercises on each Lodge night.

THE Society Record, published in Salt Lake City, says the A. O. U. W. have a strong foothold in this Territory, in fact all over this rocky mountain region. The brethren are carrying out the principles inculcated by the teachings of the Order. At the Park, Bingham, Provo, and silver reef strong and live Lodges are to be found. Grand Master J. W. Kinsley, has recently instituted Lodges at Green River and Cheyenne.

THE new Iowa Grand Lodge has had but one death since its organization, and the loss has been promptly paid. This would indicate a healthy state of affairs in the loyal camp.

Sacramento Correspondence.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—The opinion seems to prevail among a great many that the Ancient Order of United Workmen is in no sense a fraternal organization; that it is simply and solely a society in which cheap and safe insurance can be obtained. This opinion does not prevail alone among the uninitiated, but to a very considerable extent it obtains in the minds of many who are members of the Order. In this connection it may not be out of place to give the readers of the WATCHMAN an account of the action of Union Lodge, No. 21, of this city, in the case of an unfortunate brother who lost his life here under peculiarly sad circumstances some weeks since. A recital of the facts in this case will show that a feeling of fraternity prevails at least in some of the Lodges of the A. O. U. W.

Charles J. Berger, a perfect stranger came to Sacramento and stopped at the Western Hotel. Some years ago he had been injured internally by a vicious horse, which at times caused his reason to leave him, and being out of money, and having no friends, he committed suicide, by leaping from the balcony of the hotel. Mrs. Berger, seeing an account of the suicide in the newspapers, proceeded to Sacramento, and on hearing of her arrival and the melancholy surroundings, Workmen of Union Lodge made it their business to find the lady and offer her assistance. Mrs. Berger had with her a little daughter four or five years old, and was not only utterly destitute of means, but also in delicate health. Up to this time, however, it had not been learned that deceased was a Master Workman of Alviso Lodge, near San Jose, in good standing, but this was made known by Mrs. Berger, who had with her the beneficiary certificate. The case was brought before Union Lodge, which met the next evening, and upon the facts being made known, the Lodge appointed a committee of five good men to take charge of the remains, and convey them and the widow to Alviso in accordance with her desire. This charitable duty was performed at a cost to Union Lodge of nearly $100; but on arrival at Alviso, the committee learned that deceased had been an honored member and had many friends ready and willing to indemnify Union Lodge against all expenses in the case. Mr. Berger owned real estate and had been possessed of considerable means prior to his injury, but of late years had managed his affairs so as to be without ready cash. Thus a poor woman, among strangers, penniless and friendless, and the remains of her unfortunate husband, were kindly and carefully cared for through the fraternity of Union Lodge. But for this committee the widow also might have been driven to desperation and suicide. In the face of such noble exemplification of true brotherly friendship and christian charity, who will dare say the A. O. U. W. is not a fraternal society.

Circular of Grand Medical Examiner.

OFFICE OF GRAND MEDICAL EXAMINER, (San Francisco, May 22, 1883.)

To the Lodges and Medical Examiners of the A. O. U. W., of Cal.:—In assuming the responsible duty of Grand Medical Examiner of the A. O. U. W., in this State, I desire to call your special attention to the following suggestions emanating from the Supreme Medical Examiner, and endorsed by the Supreme Lodge, that the beneficial results anticipated by the Order from the appointment of such an officer may be fully realized, 1st—Let the Lodges see that none but honest, competent, and qualified men shall be placed in the position of Medical Examiner.

2d—Let the Lodge Examiner be furnished with the "Instruction to Medical Examiners," and all reports and papers bearing on his duties, so as to create and keep up a constant interest in the duties pertaining to his position.

3d—Permit no carelessness on the part of Lodge Examiners. Let them understand that any omission or neglect in making an examination or filling a blank will not be tolerated.

4th—Encourage confidential communications from Subordinate to Grand Medical Examiners relative to candidates whom the Subordinate Examiner does not desire to openly reject.

5th—Establish and enforce more stringent rules relative to the admission of applicants whose family history shows a record of consumption, or whose personal history or habits demonstrate a tendency to disease or intemperance.

The Medical Examiners should keep constantly in mind, and guard against the two great causes of mortality in the Order, viz: Consumption and Intemperance; recommending no candidate for admission to the Order without making a deliberate and careful examination of the thorax, and a close scrutiny of the family history. Deaths from Consumption, or any organic disease, within a limited time after admission to the Order, must seriously reflect on the skill of the Medical Examiner, and bring home to the Lodge the conviction that he is either careless or ignorant.

Regarding Intemperance, the Supreme Medical Examiner says—"it is hard to draw the line between moderation and intemperance in the use of malt and distilled liquors. I have drawn it on the habitual daily drinker. A man who drinks liquors as a beverage daily or habitually, if not actually intemperate in the ordinary meaning of the word, is at least putting such a trammel on the physiological functions of his system as to render him a hazardous risk in an insurance sense."

Our daily experience teaches us the difficulty in knowing what to do where the candidate uses alcoholic liquors frequently. Our duty to the Order requires us in case of doubt to reject. Should the Medical Examiner for any reason hesitate to do so, he can communicate with the Grand Medical Examiner, and can feel assured any communication he may make on any subject shall be strictly private and confidential.

It must not be supposed that the change in examining Medical Certificates diminishes an iota the responsibility of the Lodge Medical Examiner. He has the candidate before him, and can use all his senses for the benefit of the Order. To his care and fidelity must it ever remain largely indebted for its prosperity, relying upon such co-operation and assistance as will lead to the rejection of every unsound life.

I remain, fraternally yours,
JAS. SIMPSON, M. D.

THERE was a large attendance Monday evening, May 21st, at Oak Leaf Lodge, No. 35, Oakland, to hear Col. E. M. Gibson's lecture on the "Scenes and Incidents of the Battle of Gettysburg." Col. Gibson gave an eloquent and graphic delineation of this terrible battle. He was wounded on the first day, and has its thrilling picture graven on his memory as with letters of blood. Why would it not be a good thing for all our Lodges occasionally to vary their exercises and entertainments with a lecture on some interesting and instructive topic? We have many able speakers who would gladly unbalance their mental wares "without money and without price" for the good of the Order.

By a circular, published elsewhere, it will be seen that the Supreme Lodge convenes on the 5th of this month at Buffalo, N. Y. We expect to be able to give a complete summary of the proceedings in the next issue of the WATCHMAN.

The Jurisdiction of Texas.

The opening of the Southern Pacific Railroad has made the State of Texas our next-door neighbor. It is a mighty domain, rich in the grandest possibilities, and contains material enough for ten thousand members of the Order. The brethren are hopeful and feel assured of becoming a separate jurisdiction before the expiration of the present term. The fourth annual session of the Grand Lodge was held at Houston, Feb. 13, 14, 15, 1883. We clip the following from Grand Recorder, Wm. P. Cole's report:

Although our increase in new members, as shown by the number of Beneficiary Certificates issued during the year, has been sufficient to give us a surplus of more than 200 over the number necessary to entitle us to this enviable and distinguished position, yet, while this increase was going on, we had in our midst members who, rather than to bear the burden for only a few more months, which they had already borne for years perhaps, forfeited their interest and abandoned us when the prize was within our reach. In this connection I am proud to say that, while our growth has not been as great as we desired it should be, it is gratifying to note that the character of material composing our membership sustains no depreciation by these heavy suspensions.

We paid into the Beneficiary Fund during the year twenty-four assessments and one Relief Call, making an aggregate of $35,929.

During the same period there occurred in this jurisdiction twelve deaths, necessitating the sum of $24,000 to liquidate the beneficiary due thereon. By this it will be seen that we have paid into the Beneficiary Fund $11,929 more than we have received back. In other words we have paid a sum equivalent to nearly eight assessments over and above the number necessary to meet the death losses in our jurisdiction.

The Jurisdiction of Kansas.

A copy of the proceedings of the fifth annual session of the Grand Lodge of Kansas, held at Topeka, Feb. 20, 1883, has just come to hand. Thanks to the thoughtfulness of the Grand Recorder, E. M. Forbe. From the Grand Recorder's report we make the following excerpts:

At the session of the Grand Lodge of 1882, we had a membership of 3,050. On the first day of February, 1883, we have a membership of 3,871, showing an increase of 821.

Under the excellent medical supervision which we have had, I believe the additional membership acquired during the year has been a valuable one, and the result will prove the wisdom of having the medical department of our Order under the management of a Grand Lodge officer, charged with the responsibilities of that department.

Since Grand Lodge session of 1882, I have issued, in addition to the certificates issued in lieu of old ones, to February 1st, 1883, 1,422 beneficiary certificates.

Since the session of the Grand Lodge of 1882, 30 Lodges have been organized in the State.

From January 1, 1882, to January 1, 1883, there were fourteen assessments, from the proceeds of which $7,000 were used to pay death losses occurring in 1881, and there remains unprovided for of death losses in 1882 $4,000, to-wit: deaths Nos. 22 and 23, making the amount of money raised more than was necessary to pay death losses occurring in 1882 $3,000.

PERSONAL.—W. H. Jordan has gone East for the purpose of attending the Supreme Lodge. We are informed that Grand Master J. T. Rodgers and Clay W. Taylor, two of the Supreme Representatives elected at the last session of the Grand Lodge, find themselves unable to accept the honor, and cannot attend the approaching session of the Supreme Lodge.

A KIND WORD.—The Kansas Workman says: "We neglected to notice last month the particularly excellent number of the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN for April 1st. It was a double number, and contained a vast amount of most excellent reading matter. We think it the best one of the A. O. U. W. papers."

The members in Fresno celebrated the institution of the Order in that city, Monday, May 28th. The oration was delivered by Wm. H. Barnes, P. G. M., of this city.

Other Jurisdictions.

The Protector says: Quaker City Lodge, No. 116, of Pennsylvania, has long enjoyed the high distinction of being the largest Lodge in the Order, numbering over 1,100. It will soon have to look after its laurels. Valley Lodge, No. 30, of California, now numbers 961, and is rapidly increasing. The race between these two mammoth Lodges will be interesting, the one located in the extreme East, and the other in the extreme West. While a large membership is desirable, let both of them look to quality as well as quantity.

The Overseer says: The Grand Legion of Missouri, Select Knights of the A. O. U. W., has issued an elaborately executed "Roster of Subordinate Legions in the Jurisdiction," from which we learn that Missouri now has fifty-seven Legions within its borders, and one Legion in San Antonio, Texas, is included in the jurisdiction, thus making fifty-eight Legions in all. This shows that Select Knight workers have not been idle, but have all been at work.

The records of the printed proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania show that on the score of suspensions during the year, 52 Lodges had none; 28 had one each; 33 had 2 each; 17 had 3 each; 4 had 4 each; 13 had 5 each; 8 had 6 each; 8 had 7 each; 2 had 8 each; 3 had 9 each; 4 had 10 each; 1 had 12; 2 had 13 each; 3 had 15 each; 1 had 21; 1 had 26 and 1 had 33.

Rebellious Corona Lodge has been temporarily restored to membership upon mandate of a judge of the supreme court, of Pennsylvania, but when the full court passes upon the question a quietus will forever be put to professional malcontents.

The A. O. U. W., in Missouri has twice as many Masons enrolled in its ranks as any other fraternal Order. Total membership on May 1st, in Missouri, 9,110; in Nebraska, 120; total, 9,230.

The Overseer is more than ever impressed with the belief that the Grand Jurisdiction of Missouri will have 15,000 members before the Grand Lodge meets again. It will be a big jump but it can be done.

By reference to the Grand Recorder's assessments for Pennsylvania, the past two months, it will be seen that no less than seven deaths by suicide are included in these lists.

The G. M. W. of Pennsylvania, and his Medical Adviser, who was in reality the Grand Medical Examiner in that State, rejected seventy-applicants during last year.

Since the middle of January, over 600 applications have been passed upon by the Grand Medical Examiner of Pennsylvania, resulting in the rejection of 61.

Of the seventeen deaths in the Supreme Jurisdiction, Ohio furnishes seven, Texas five, Kentucky two, Montana, West Virginia and Louisiana one each.

The total membership of the Order on the first of April, was 119,089. Allowing for the increase since, we must now have nearly 120,000 members.

Twelve of the men who lost their lives by the terrible mine disaster at Braidwood, Ill., were members of the A. O. U. W.

The members of the A. O. U. W. in Buffalo are making extensive preparations to receive the Supreme Lodge.

In the jurisdiction of Wisconsin there were but fourteen assessments during the last Grand Lodge year.

Pennsylvania has an assessment in May. The Order in that state is in an exceedingly prosperous condition.

The Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania still has upon its seal the square and compass.

Massachusetts had no assessment for either January, February, or March.

The Illinois A. O. U. W. holds a grand reunion in Chicago, in June.

The Fraternal Censor of Buffalo, is now issued semi-monthly.

The membership of Pennsylvania, on April 1st was 13,600.

Two assessments in Ohio during the month of April.

Michigan had one assessment in May.

The Marin County Journal of the 17th instant, says: "The Grand officers of the A. O. U. W. have paid $2,000 to the heirs of the late John Lynch, who was a member in good standing of San Rafael Lodge, No. 24. We mention it as creditable to the deceased, and also to remind every man of family that the Order of Workmen is a good thing to join."

Meridian Lodge, Sutter county, is making preparations to celebrate the 4th of July.

Santa Cruz Mountains.

We give herewith a sketch of the crowning height of the Santa Cruz mountains, Mt. Bache, or, as it is locally called, Loma Prieta, which is the name applied by the Spanish-Mexican population to any chaparral covered mountains which look black in the distance.

The entire system of elevations between the Bay of Monterey and the Golden Gate is sometimes included under one name, and called the Santa Cruz range, which is, however, properly the term for the southern and middle portions of the hills in question, or those included in Santa Cruz county. Here, in fact, are the highest mountains and the broadest belt of elevated country; the chain diminishing in height and breadth as it runs north, until it finally sinks beneath the ocean at the Golden Gate. The entire range, from the Bay of Monterey to the end of the peninsula, is about sixty-five miles in length, and its greatest breadth is about twenty-five miles. The eastern ridges are highly metaphoric, and constitute the main portion or backbone of the range, Mount Bache befor about forty miles. The northerly portion of this metamorphic ridge lies back of Mountain View, and of it Black Mountain is the culminating point, being about 3,000 feet high. Here are several parallel ridges which run out into the plain to the southeast, their strike taking them to the north of Mount Bache, the range being broken and irregular in the intermediate region, where cut through by the Los Gatos and Quito creeks. All these ridges have steep slopes, and are very dry in the summer and covered on their northeastern sides with dense chaparral, composed more exclusively of the Adenostoma fasciculata, or "chamisa," than were similar tracts farther south, where various species of ceanothus predominate in the dense, thorny and almost impenetrable growth, to which the name of "chaparral" is universally given.

The slopes on the southwest sides of the mountains were less inhospitable, being covered to a considerable extent with wild oats, as were also the foothills. The foothills in this region extend several miles into the San Jose plains, and are covered with a fertile soil; they form

Notable Observations on Solar Radiation.

Prof. S. P. Langley, of the Alleghany Observatory, who made a scientific expedition to Mount Whitney, in Southern California, in 1881, to determine chiefly the value of the solar constant (that is the amount of heat the sun sends to the earth), and other related subjects, has been led incidentally to a number of curious and important conclusions respecting the influence of the atmosphere on the sun's rays.

The observers noticed, as they ascended the mountain and the air grew colder, the sun's heat became progressively more intense, until their faces and hands, already browned by weeks of exposure, were burned anew, and far more in the cold than in the desert heat. When they had reached an elevation at which the surface temperature of the soil fell to the freezing point, the solar radiation became so intense that many of the party presented the appearance of having been burned by an actual fire; and near the summit the temperature in a copper vessel, over which were laid two sheets of plain window glass, rose above the boiling point, and "it was certain that we could boil water by the direct solar rays in such a vessel among the snow fields."

From this experience, the conclusion was justified that, were it not for the agency of the

THE PHOSPHORESCENT FLAME OF SULPHUR.

According to a German scientific journal, H. Heumann, having raised the question whether phosphorus among the metalloids was the only one which underwent slow combustion at a low temperature, becoming luminous, has answered it satisfactorily by experiment. He found that sulphur shows this phenomenon very well, though at a temperature higher than is required for phosphorus. If a heated rod of glass be dipped in pulverized sulphur, it becomes covered with the fused material which takes fire. If now the flame be blown out, the sulphur still continues to burn, but with a whitish flame visible distinctly only in the dark. The white phosphorescent light is seen much better when the sulphur is heated rapidly to 180° on a plate in the interior of a metallic air bath. White flames from three to four inches long flicker through the box, and by properly regulating the heat this slow combustion may be continued for an hour without the appearance of the blue flame. Various kinds of sulphur were tried, but in each case with the same result. Many compounds of sulphur act in the same way; thus cinnabar, antimonious sulphide, arsenious sulphide and others all show the white flame. The odor emitted when the sulphur thus burns is peculiar, ing the highest point; this has an elevation of 3,780 feet, being less than a hundred feet lower than Mount Diablo. This mountain mass, to which Mounts Chual (3,530 feet) and Umunhum (3,430 feet) belong, is the dominating one of the range, although there are points farther north which rise to over 3000 feet.

In crossing over from Santa Cruz, in a northerly direction across the chain, to the Santa Clara valley, before reaching the metamorphic, a mass of rocks is traversed which is much broken and elevated, some of the ridges being fully 2,000 feet high. In rising on to this elevated ridge, from an elevated point near the summit, an extensive view is to be had of the southern part of the range of the high and deeply eroded ridges of Mount Bache to the east, and of the ranges to the northeast, which are also lofty and rugged, rising in some places to nearly 3,500 feet in elevation. The scenery on this road from Santa Cruz to San Jose is hardly surpassed in grandeur and beauty by anything in the coast ranges. There are heavy forests of pine, firs and oaks, which almost vie with those of the Sierra in size and vigor of growth.

The metamorphic belt, before spoken of as occurring on the east side, forms the highest ridges of the range. The higher masses extend from a point back of Redwood City, southeast some of the most delightful and attractive farming lands of the State and are now being largely planted with trees and vines.

The Santa Cruz mountain district is rapidly becoming one of the most famous in the State for rural improvement, and is certainly a most desirable district.

THE State Sportsmen's Association meeting, at Gilroy, adjourned to meet at Los Angeles the first Thursday in October, 1884. The following officers were elected for the ensuing season: President, M. M. Estee, of San Francisco; Vice President, D. M. Pyle, of Gilroy; Treasurer, Sydney Newel, of Stockton; Secretary, J. Pitcher Spooner, of Stockton. Directors—Crittenden Robinson, of San Francisco, H. T. Payne, of Los Angeles, Dr. J. W. Hays, Jr., of Grass Valley, R. E. Wilson, of San Francisco and J. T. McIntosh, of Chico.

FANGS OF THE RATTLESNAKE.—At a meeting of the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences, Dr. Leidy exhibited a series of fangs taken from a rattlesnake fifty-two inches in length. The rapidity with which the functional fangs are reproduced was shown by the presence, on each side of the jaw, of five fangs in varying degrees of development, so placed as to replace those which are lost.

It is reported from San Carlos that about twelve hundred Indians have strayed from the agency proper, to the northwestern part of the reservation, near Fort Apache. They evidently believe they will have better protection near the fort.

air in absorbing, storing and distributing the solar rays, the temperature of the earth's surface would fall very greatly, even though it received a much larger quantity of radiant heat from the sun. Prof. Langley expresses the opinion that without an atmosphere, the earth's temperature would fall fifty degrees below zero (Fah.).

These observations also lead to other interesting inferences. "We see," says Prof. Langley, "if these results be true, that the temperature of a planet may, and not improbably does, depend far less upon its neighborhood or to remoteness from the sun, than upon the constitution of its gaseous envelope; and, indeed, it is hardly too much to say that we might approximately indicate the constitution of an atmosphere which would make Mercury a colder planet than the earth, or Neptune as warm and habitable a one."

INFLUENCE OF ANIMALS IN PREVENTING OR CONTROLLING FOREST GROWTHS.

A correspondent, writing from Johnstonville, S. C., incidentally mentions a curious instance of the influence of animals in controlling or preventing forest growths. It appears that the fondness of hogs for the juicy roots of young pines leads them to seek them assiduously, so that where hogs are allowed to roam in that region one can hardly find a young long leaved pine in a thousand acres of pine forest. There being no young trees to take the place of the old ones used up by the lumbermen and the porcine marauders, this species of pine is disappearing.

recalling that of hydrogen persulphide, camphor and ozone, and is the odor generally ascribed to sulphur vapors.

PHOTOGRAPHING SOUND WAVES.—Some interesting experiments relating to the photography of sound vibrations were recently made by the well known German chemist, Professor Boltzman. According to the method devised by him, a small thin platinum plate was fixed perpendicularly to the center of a thin iron tympanum like that of a telephone. Another platinum plate was fixed near the first so as to form a fine slit between them, and this slit was brought into the focus of a collecting lens upon which sunlight fell. After passing through the slit, the rays went to a selenium cell, which, with two telephones, was in circuit with twelve Leclanche cells. Single sounds spoken to the tympanum could be heard. When the rays, after traversing the slit, which varied in width with the vibrations, were rendered parallel and concentrated by a lens upon the selenium cell, the apparatus could be employed as a photophone. Intense sunlight concentrated upon the platinum plate by means of a solar microscope, and an image of the shadow of the platinum plate thrown upon a glass plate prepared with Vogel's emulsion, gave a photograph of the sound vibrations when the prepared plate was rapidly moved in a direction perpendicular to the line of light. It appears that for the vowel sounds the curves produced were simple, while those of the consonants were complex, those for l, m, n, r, p and k resembling the curves formed by König for "r" by his sound flames.

The Coronation of the Czar.

There is a mysterious enchantment even in dying. It often happens that at the moment a man is struck with death he imagines he feels better and is going to get well. Pain has ceased; he calls for something to eat, sometimes gets up and walks about the room and talks hopefully of soon being able to ride out and take the air. But every one sadly knows that this flush of renewed strength is the sudden glare of the candle of life burned down to the socket.

We are told that the coronation of the Czar last Sunday, at Moscow, was the most imposing and magnificent spectacle ever seen in Europe. The Czar was drawn in a gilded coach, by twelve white horses, over a road sprinkled with holy water, while salvos of artillery shook the earth, and the strains of martial music and shouts of the multitude filled the air with an indescribable, deafening noise. The ceremonies in the Cathedral of the Holy Assumption, the solemn religious rites, the chanted Te Deum, the waves of music, the precious gems that adorned the crown, the luminous diamonds that sparkled on the scepter, the white uniform of the Czar and the robes of the Czarina, richly embroidered with jewels, the throne of ivory under a dais canopied with scarlet velvet lined with silver brocade, the immense concourse of princes and dignitaries, the gorgeous illuminations, balls, and receptions, all make up a picture of grandeur and splendor that no pen can portray. Can it be that all this splendid pageantry is the fascination of a death-struck dynasty? There is certainly something in it very like the death-rattle in the throat.

Why has this coronation ceremony been delayed so long? It is well known that an uncrowned Czar is a mere minor holding the reins of power from courteous sufferance. As a monarch, he is utterly powerless. He cannot proclaim war or make peace. Every order he issues is null and void unless sanctioned by two Ministers of State. Why not hasten in the present unsettled state of the Empire to break this quasi-regency and give the Government an imperial head? If this strange delay is owing to the profound respect of Alexander for his assassinated father, as the Russian papers say, then this display of affection is unprecedented in the annals of Czarism. The Empress Catherine hastened to Moscow, and seized the crown before the remains of Peter the Great were cold. Peter III., died without being crowned, and was buried in a common graveyard. Should an uncrowned monarch die, he is placed in the unhappy condition of children dying without baptism in that country, buried in unconsecrated acres, and even his eternal welfare in doubt. And yet, with all these cogent reasons for immediate coronation, he hesitated for more than two years to touch the crown that fell from the head of his father. The explanation is obvious. He feared there was a bomb in that crown. The Nihilists seemed ubiquitous. The army was honeycombed with revolutionary sentiments. The Czar had long been practically a prisoner within the walls of his palace. Was not that act last Sunday prompted by the desperation that something must be done to break the spell of horror and unimaginable dread that hangs over the Empire? Perhaps there was the secret hope that brilliant ceremonies, splendid pageantry, pardons, amnesties, and a rain of money might quicken the popular heart with a glow of filial homage akin to that which had glorified his ancestors. But this hope, if it existed, was rimmed with icicles. An army of one hundred thousand men camped around Moscow. Mounted Cossacks patrolled the streets, giving the city an appearance of a siege. That gilded coach and twelve white horses moved for four miles along parallel lines of heavily-armed soldiers, keeping the people at a safe distance. The utmost care was taken to guard the gates of the Kremlin. A ticket had been elaborately prepared, and the holder was subjected to the most rigid scrutiny. Can evidence be stronger that all this splendid show of royal power was a dazzling bubble? There are forces at work in that populous Empire stronger than the crowned Emperor. Forces that move with the irresistible tread of an earthquake, and it would not be strange if that magnificent city, which once lay in ashes at the feet of Napoleon, should never again witness the spectacle of a coronation.

Absolutism is destined to pass away, as icebergs melt in the torrid seas, before the growing intelligence of the age. Monarchy in those old nations may continue to exist as a form of government, predicated upon the will of the people, and not upon the inept and silly dogma of a "divine right," strictly hedged about by constitutional limitations.

THE sixth annual reunion and family picnic given under the auspices of the General Relief Committee, A. O. U. W., will be held at Seaside Gardens, and Harbor View, on Thursday, June 21st. Very favorable arrangements have been made with the proprietors of this favorable resort, and the able executive committee have provided attractions in music, consisting of two brass bands; and other accessions that will make this one of the grand events of the season. There will be but little expense in arranging and perfecting this grand meeting, and all moneys expended for tickets of admission to the gardens, will go to swell the fund of the General Relief Committee. Tickets of admission are 25 cents, children under 10 years of age free. This project is meeting with much favor, and Workmen and their friends will join in this humane and worthy enterprise. It is confidently expected that there will be over 5,000 persons at this grand reunion and picnic, whose mainspring is to raise funds to help needy and unfortunate Workmen.

The members at Meridian, Sutter county, are prospecting for a grand Fourth of July celebration.

What the Census Cannot Show.

The Bureau of Statistics after long delay and great expense, has at last completed the census of the United States for 1880, and every one will take a warm, patriotic pride in the amazing growth of our country. Of course this official registration is very important for the information it furnishes of our numerical strength, material prosperity, the ratio of growth in the different States, the progress and decline of certain industries, the statistics of trade, exports, imports, shipping, manufactures, the birth and death rates, and the average duration of human life in our new civilization. The politicians will find it useful in giving them a hint of the isothermal lines of Republican and Democratic temperature. But there are certain very important things, the most important elements of history, that these long, elaborate tables fail to tell us anything about. Valuable as they are, they give us very little insight into the inner life of the nation, the latent forces of society. They give us a sort of bulletin of the past and present but cast very little light on the future. Who could have foretold from the census of 1860 the condition of the United States to-day? The statistics of France, taken in 1870, would have shown the Imperial Empire at the height of its prosperity. Statistics are very apt to mislead us. We are so easily inclined to believe that the fiat of destiny is in the voice of majorities. So many votes, so much authority. A show of hands settles what is proper to be done. This counting of heads and calling the muster-roll of the people, this huge inventory of a nation's wealth and industries, may be of great importance to tariff-makers, politicians and political economists, but is a very poor indicator of the potential, intellectual and moral forces. Suppose the census of Rome had been taken during the reign of Nero, would it have shed any light upon the fact that there was hidden at that time, the germ of a moral power in the heart of that populous empire which was destined to break the ancient charm of polytheism, with all its million of devotees, and turn the pantheon into a museum of dead gods? It is more than likely that the crucifixion of Jesus made no more impression on the busy population of Jerusalem, than an item from our Police Court in a daily paper. And yet the life and words of that Crucified One has transfigured the ages. And yet these moral potencies which make epochs are hardly to be found in the tabular and classified statements of a nation's property and resources. One looks in vain through these big statistical volumes for the slightest hint of that new shape of fraternal sentiment, which is now silently but thoroughly leavening society.

We are proud of our vast and growing population, but if manhood were in numbers and avoirdupois, China and Hindoostan could weigh us down. Ten thousand Grecians on the plains of Marathon had more moral force than all the millions of Xerxes. A preacher in this city recently boasted of the wonderful success of his church. "Why," he said, "the house is crowded every Sunday, and there are as many men as women in the audience." A crowded church! As many men as women! There is not a theater manager in the city who could not make that boast. One good thought lodged in a receptive heart, that blossoms and makes life, home, and the world more bright and fragrant in meaning, is worth more than applauding crowds. Horace Mann tells how a school mistress refused to report the number of her class for fear it was wrong, quoting the example of King David, who numbered the people and got into trouble about it. In one sense she was right, but seems not to have thought of it. Numbers and percentage of scholarship give no hint of success in the race of life. We say knowledge is power. Knowledge is a dead, inert mass, lumbering the brain, and turning memory into a warehouse or depot, unless it is individualized and energized by the force of will and character, and this is a quality that the school statistics do not show.

WE recently heard the ungracious sneer that the $2,000 offered as a benefit by our Order was a miserable pittance unworthy of the time and trouble it costs. We answer that it has built many a home to shelter a bereaved family from the cold charity or neglect of the world. It has saved many a frail woman from taking in washing, or running a sewing machine to earn bread for her little ones. Almost every day there is an account of some poor brother suddenly called by disease or accident to the silent world, leaving a family in destitution, were it not for the sum paid by the A. O. U. W. or some kindred Order. The sum may be small, but it has averted sore distress, softened the harsh features of Fate, and furnished the basis of a home and a little business too often to provoke a sneer, only from the cynical and heartless.

THE appointment of Dr. James Simpson, of this city, as Grand Medical Examiner, gives universal satisfaction. As a physician and surgeon, he stands in the front rank of the profession. He has issued a circular to the Order and local examiners that will be found elsewhere in this issue of the WATCHMAN, and should be carefully read, as every one should know the rules which govern examinations in this State. Special attention is called to the great mortality in the Order caused by consumption and intemperance. It is certainly proper to guard vigilantly the door of our Lodges, and a candidate with a tainted family history, however healthy looking, or is addicted to the habitual use of liquors, wines, or beer, are risks too hazardous for the good of the Order.

DECORATION DAY was generally commemorated by the Posts of the Grand Army of the Union throughout the State. In San Francisco the public schools were closed, also nearly all places of business. Flags hung at half-mast, and flowers were profusely placed on the graves of the nation's heroes. Many query what will become of this day when all the participants of the great struggle have passed away? The beautiful custom will no doubt be extended so far as to take in all the nation's dead. It will always be a pleasant and edifying custom to devote one day of the year to keep odorous the memory of those who on the field of strife or arena of civil life wrought well for their country.

A GERMAN journal declares that there is sixty times the danger of trichinae in American pork that there is in German pork. The German reasons from the plumpness of the animal. American hogs are sixty times as fat as the German, without being higher or longer. The German porker is all snout and legs.

THERE is a great deal in blood after all. A murderer who was hanged by a mob at Jacksonville, Ill., turns out to have been a son of Quantrell, the vile rascal who committed the Lawrence massacre.

THE Cornell University at Ithaca, N. Y., is pretty well situated financially. It has assets amounting to $7,000,000 and an annual income of $400,000.

Evening Star Lodge, No. 23, D. of H., will hereafter meet at 417 Kearny street, on the first and third Thursday evenings of the month.

Shady Grove Lodge will give their annual harvest ball at Farmington. A large warehouse has been secured for the occasion.

Olympic Lodge and its friends gave a family picnic at Wildwood Glen, Saucelito, Wednesday, May 30th.

Pacheco Lodge proposed to celebrate its anniversary on or about September 12th.

Grand Recorder's Department.

HEADQUARTERS of Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., Rooms 40 and 41, St. Ann's Building, corner of Eddy and Powell, San Francisco. H. G. PRATT.

LODGES will bear in mind that on each application for membership 25 cents fee must in all cases hereafter be collected from the applicant for the Grand Medical Examiner, unless the Lodge prefers to pay the fee itself. Such fee need not be remitted except in payment of bill rendered. The Grand Examiner desires me to send out such bills and collect the same, and that will be the course pursued.

NEW forms for blanks on which Financiers and Receivers can make out their reports at the close of the term to their respective Lodges are being prepared, and can be had by ordering from this office.

THE papers in two cases have gone forward to the Supreme Lodge on appeal from the action of our Grand Lodge. One is known as the Pengelly case, and the other Nunan vs. Yerba Buena Lodge, No. 14.

AMENDMENTS to By-Laws should be sent for approval direct to James N. Young, Chairman Committee of Laws and Supervision, Sacramento, Cal.

WE are anxiously looking for the approval of our Degree of Honor Constitution, sent forward to the Supreme Lodge Committee about a month since.

WE have two assessments for June, but as a heavy surplus will be left after paying out the death list, we may reasonably expect but one for July.

The Supreme Lodge.

The Supreme Lodge meets in annual session at Buffalo, N. Y., on the 5th inst. It does not appear that much important work will engage the attention of the body. Being eminently conservative in its construction and feeling, we have little fear that any radical changes will be made in our laws. One matter, however, needs looking after if not legislating upon. Grand Lodges should not be allowed to incorporate unless actually compelled by the laws of the State in which they exist. Experience, it is said, teaches a dear school. We are prepared from positive knowledge to endorse the saying. The Supreme Lodge incorporated, and it was a sorry day for the Order when it did so. It should disincorporate as quickly as possible. Most of our Grand Lodges have done likewise; they should follow suit. We came near having serious trouble in Michigan, because the Grand Lodge was a corporation. We lost Iowa for the same reason—a greater calamity to the Order than all the good that will ever come from incorporating, for a thousand years. Now we have trouble in Pennsylvania because the Grand Lodge there is a corporation. Otherwheres troubles have arisen or are impending for the same reason, and there promises no end to these difficulties.

Now what do we profit by putting on this garb of popular foolishness? Absolutely nothing. It is playing a game where we have everything to lose and nothing to gain. It is deliberately putting ourselves in a way to be beaten and buffeted by the enemy when we might just as easily have everything on our own side, and according to our own liking. True, a corporate existence individualizes the different branches of the Order so that it can sue and be sued without difficulty. This individualizing business is just where the trouble comes in. Kentucky creates an individual, Michigan creates an individual, Iowa, New York, Pennsylvania, etc., etc., do likewise, and then the doctrine is promulgated by the courts of the various creative powers, that their creations are not subject in law, nor can be to the creations of anybody else. And this is made a pretext to violate a sworn obligation, and the courts are invoked to prevent punishment to the perjurer.

All this for the luxury of suing and being sued and making it easy, and this too when we never want to sue anybody, but are in constant danger of being sued. We know of but one single instance when the Order or any branch of it has had occasion to sue any one, and it so happens in this case which is now pending in Iowa, that an unincorporated body is suing a corporate body, and is compelled to this because of rebellious acts on the part of the corporation which could not have been done but because of its corporate existence. We trust the Supreme Lodge will not lose sight of this business.

Much of the mischief of incorporation cannot be undone. Several corporations formed cannot be dissolved except by legislative acts or other cumbersome process. Meanwhile the courts are compelling us to retain members in the Order who are a shame and a curse to the organization as in the case of certain parties in Pennsylvania. There is but one road we see out of this phase of the difficulty. Let the Supreme Lodge turn its attention to the prescribed obligations to be administered to members. We can try and expel members for a violation of obligations, and no court will interfere. This belongs strictly to the fraternal portion of the Order, and is beyond dispute within the province of the Supreme Lodge to regulate and control, and because it is so, we have no doubt in this a sufficient explanation of the motives that have heretofore actuated certain members of the Supreme Lodge, (now no longer such, let us be thankful) in persistently opposing any revision of our ritualistic work.

Graded assessments we presume will again be brought before the Supreme Lodge, and again be relegated to the source whence it came. The scheme is not now practicable if it were desirable, and it is not desirable. We have the best system now that has ever yet been devised, and no act of greater folly could be perpetrated on the Order than forcing upon it a system of graded assessments.

WHO ARE THE SWINDLERS?—The regular press is making a great ado over an article that appeared in the WATCHMAN upon the desirability of a continual change of membership in the Order. They compare the spectacle which the WATCHMAN presents to the "faro banker, who would confess the truth of every charge made against the business and coolly congratulate the insiders on the fact that the swindled victims kept dropping out to make room for the new ones." The Fraternal Censor takes up the cudgel as follows: "We would like to ask the Traveler's Record what the regular companies have done with 'lapsed policy moneys?' Do they not calculate upon a certain per cent. of all policies lapsing? Did they ever return a dollar of lapsed policy money? Will they ever promise to do anything of the kind? Have they not grown fat upon this identical business which seems so heinous to them in a co-operative?" The Fraternal Censor's head is level.

BRO. C. J. LADD presented Spartan Lodge, at its last meeting, with a beautiful ballot-box inlaid with ivory and ornamental wood, with the word Spartan worked in. In presenting this souvenir, he said he desired to make this a life-token of his love and regard for his Lodge. Bro. Wilson, M. W., accepted of the gift in a few well chosen words.

COL. E. M. GIBSON on Monday evening, May 21st, addressed Oak Leaf Lodge, No. 35, A. O. U. W., at their hall, corner of Twelfth and Franklin streets, on "Scenes and Incidents in the Battle of Gettysburg."

Compulsory Separation.

Bro. Smith, whilom of the National A. O. U. W. Bulletin, appears in another column opposing the enactment of a law making separate Beneficiary Jurisdictions compulsory. The WATCHMAN has before expressed an opinion on this subject. As the law now stands it is illogical. It provides that when any separate Jurisdiction shall from any cause have its membership fall below two thousand it shall come back under the control of the Supreme Lodge, the same as it was before separation. As this is done because with less than two thousand members the Jurisdiction cannot pay its death losses by one assessment on every death, in other words is too weak to stand alone, it follows logically that when strong enough to do it the Supreme Lodge should have the right to compel any such Jurisdiction into separation if the good of the Order seemed to demand such a course. Especially should this be so in the case of a Jurisdiction once separate, for on returning to the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction it of necessity took with it a considerable portion of the burden which caused the disaster. This burden the Supreme Lodge had to assume and liquidate, and as that body has no means of getting money for such purpose except from the membership of its immediate Jurisdiction, and as the decimation of a Jurisdiction is generally the result of bad work and the gathering in of bad material, the innocent are perforce made to suffer for the sins of the guilty. The law should give relief from this condition of things where it becomes intolerable. For several years all the members in the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction have been paying at the rate of two assessments a month, and that, too, while nearly one-half of them were fresh accessions, while but for the fact that Ohio and Kentucky with their high death rates were a part of said Jurisdiction, the assessments on the newer portions would have been but one a month. It is not to be wondered at that these brethren murmur and complain. It is not to be wondered at that it is with extreme difficulty that the Order is spread into new territory.

But while logically we could not oppose the enactment of a law making separation of a Jurisdiction with more than two thousand members compulsory, yet in applying such law great care and discretion would be necessary. Ohio became decimated from too much beer—Kentucky from too much Bourbon. Both suffer fearfully from the same causes still, but both, we believe, are making an honest and successful effort to wipe out or materially modify the evil. Compel either of these Jurisdictions into separation and there is great danger that the brave and good Workmen who have so long stood by the ship when but for them it would have gone down in utter wreck and ruin, would become discouraged and finally be lost, while the more undesirable element would be left to come back again to the fold of the Supreme Lodge with a more fearful burden than ever before.

It would therefore appear the part of wisdom to let these Jurisdictions remain as they are—a part of the Supreme Jurisdiction, and direct our efforts towards strengthening the hands of those who are honestly striving to better the moral and physical condition of their constituencies. The Jurisdictions now most seriously suffering from the present status of things are Nevada and Arizona. Both can soon be separated. No doubt they will be. In a few years Ohio and Kentucky will comprise nearly the whole of the Supreme Jurisdiction. Then if one tires of the other yoke-fellow, all she will have to do will be to set up housekeeping for herself and leave her partner to do the same or perish. In the light of these facts we would say, do not disturb the status quo, but let time work out the end which any radical legislation might not hasten but retard.

BROTHER, post us in regard to your Lodge.

IF there is anything more pitiable than another, it is to see a delicately-brought-up woman compelled to go out with helpless children at her back to struggle in a world for bread, where rugged strength and brawny muscle are necessary. If there is any sight more pitiable than this, we have not seen it. And yet, strange to say, there are still many women who seem utterly indifferent in regard to their husband's duty to provide a benefit certificate in some good fraternal Order. There are women in this city eking out a miserable existence who frustrated the purpose of their husbands to equip their life with a beneficiary certificate. They had a superstitious horror of a document in the house that implied the possibility of their husbands ever dying. The foolish sentiment withered at the grave, when it was too late.

PITTSBURGH shows that art can flourish even in her murky atmosphere. She has just had a musical festival at which the receipts were $10,000. This is not very large, but when it is considered that it was paid by the people whose Scotch-Irish ancestors esteemed a fiddle the invention of Satan, it rises in importance.

MR. PEABODY'S bequest to London was about $2,000,000. The property of the trust is now valued at over $4,000,000. It has been honestly and efficiently administered. The tenants number 15,000, in 3,500 separate buildings of 8,000 rooms.

RECORDERS of all Subordinate Lodges in California, Oregon, Washington Territory, Nevada, Utah, Montana, Idaho, and Arizona, are specially invited to correspond for the WATCHMAN, also to aid us in extending the circulation and usefulness of the WATCHMAN in their several jurisdictions.

A. O. U. W. Financier's Cash Book and Itemized S. A. Report Book.

A Combination of Receiver's Receipts to Financiers, Financier's S. A. Reports to Lodges and Reports of Auditing Committee

The above two books constitute a complete set for the use of Financiers of the A. O. U. W., and are so necessary for the proper time and labor-saving methodical transaction of Lodge business that every Financier should use them. Lodges, one and all, who have adopted the use of these books are unanimously of the opinion that these most valuable books should be used by every Lodge, in order to make A. O. U. W. bookkeeping uniform throughout the Order. The following Lodges in California are now using these books exclusively:

Sample sheets of the books have been sent to every Lodge some time since, and Lodges not having the books should, in their own interest at once procure them. A complete set will be sent to every Lodge for the very low price of $5. Expressage prepaid by ordering of C. P. Hitch, Grand Recorder, Paris, Illinois.

I most heartily recommend the adoption of the above books, and trust that every Lodge in this Jurisdiction will avail themselves of this new and most simple system of keeping their accounts. The "CASH BOOK" will last a Lodge of 100 members six to eight years, and the "S. A. REPORT BOOK" will last Lodges meeting weekly, 10 years, and those meeting semi-monthly, 20 years.

The Lover's Plot.

Sir George Mackenzie, who flourished in the last half of the seventeenth century, was one of the most eminent jurists ever known in Scotland, besides being a brilliant man of letters. He inherited wealth, and during his busy life he added so much to it that he became one of the wealthiest men of his time. As a politician he was self-willed and stubborn, and at times violent. Between himself and the young Earl of Bute a strong political difference existed, that neither showed a disposition to harmonize. Yet the earl had fallen deeply in love with Sir George's daughter, and the love was by her returned. The lovers knew that the stern old advocate would not consent to their union. In fact, it is doubtful if Sir George would have admitted Bute to his house as a friend. His feelings were deep and bitter, and he had been heard to denounce the earl as little better than a political renegade.

The lovers put their heads together, and consulted. They were eager to be made man and wife. Of course, the young lady could elope, and be married clandestinely, and the father could not help himself; but, ah! he could disinherit his recreant daughter, and that must not be. The young earl was not mercenary. The damsel's prospective wealth, as heir-ess of her rich father, had given her not a particle of extra attraction for him; yet he did not like the idea of having his wife deprived of her just inheritance; and, naturally, he did not care to lose such a broad and grand estate, for his daughter was an only child.

At length the earl hit upon a plan, and resolved to act upon it. He visited Sir George in his chambers, while the latter held the office of king's advocate, and appealed to him for assistance.

Now, as man to man, in matters of business, or in any way not involving brotherly love, Sir George held the young earl in high esteem; and there was no man of his acquaintance whom he would have more readily assisted legally. Furthermore, the advocate had not the remotest idea that Bute either loved his daughter, or that he was familiar with her.

"Sir George," said the earl, when he was ready to open his business, "there is a young lady in this city whom I dearly and devotedly love, and she has confessed her love for me. Her father is wealthy. Now, sir, I care not for the lady's money; yet it would not be pleasant to have her father disinherit her. From this you can judge that her father is opposed to our union. At all events, we fear that such is the case. Now my dear Sir George, I know that you would not hesitate to vouch for my worthiness."

The old man nodded assent very pleasantly. "And sir, I think you would be willing to exert your influence in my behalf, if I should marry the lady clandestinely. Your influence would be effectual, I am sure."

And so the earl went on until he had brought Sir George not only to promise his assistance toward preventing a disinheritance, but so far had the keen old lawyer entered into the spirit of the thing that he advised the earl, by all means, to go ahead.

"Why," he exclaimed, forcibly, "the man must be blind, or a fool, who would reject such an alliance for his daughter—one of the oldest names in the realm, a fair share of wealth and a coronet. Go on, my lord, and I will sustain you if I can."

And the earl went ahead. That very evening he arranged with the lady, and on the following day they were privately married.

In the evening Sir George missed his daughter. He had just inquired for her, when a door was opened, and she and the Earl of Bute entered, hand in hand, and advanced straight to his chair and went down on their knees.

Not a word of explanation was needed. The old advocate caught his breath, changed from a death-like paleness to a furious flush half a dozen times, and finally gave in.

"Sir George, henceforth I shall take great pleasure in sustaining my wife's father," said the earl.

A hot response was upon the parent's lips, but he swallowed it, and gradually a sense of the absurdity of the situation possessed him, and anon he burst into a hearty laugh, and the erring children were forgiven.

A COLONIAL EXHIBIT.—A prominent and interesting feature in the approaching Amsterdam Exhibition will be the Colonial Section, in which will be shown specimens of the production and resources of the entire colonial world. It will comprise examples of everything interesting in the natural history of the different colonies. A second category will comprehend a complete collection of objects illustrative of the civilization of the tribes and people indigenous to the several colonies, their manners, customs, domestic economy, arms, dress, etc. A third group will consist of everything of use or interest in colonial enterprise—the appliances of travel or exploration, the military equipments, manufactures, coinage, etc., of the European settlers.

BEES.—The Livermore valley apiarists have suffered considerable loss the past fall and winter from the bee moth. Just now special pains are taken to secure the fast outpouring new swarms to repair the loss.

PERSONS suffering from wasting diseases, such as malaria, fever, etc., will be greatly benefited by the use of Brown's Iron Bitters, a true tonic.

Failing!

That is what a great many people are doing. They don't know just what is the matter, but they have a combination of pains and aches, and each month they grow worse.

The only sure remedy yet found is BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, and this by rapid and thorough assimilation with the blood purifies and enriches it, and rich, strong blood flowing to every part of the system repairs the wasted tissues, drives out disease and gives health and strength.

This is why BROWN'S IRON BITTERS will cure kidney and liver diseases, consumption, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, malaria, intermittent fevers, &c.

Mr. Simon Blanchard, a well-known citizen of Hayessville, Meade county, Kentucky, says: "My wife had been sick for a long time, and her constitution was all broken down and she was unable to work. She was advised to use Brown's Iron Bitters, and found it to work like a charm. We would not now be without it for any consideration, as we consider it the best tonic in the world."

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is not a drink and does not contain whiskey. It is the only preparation of Iron that causes no injurious effects. Get the genuine. Don't be imposed on with imitations.

The Canal Age.

Apropos of the movement at present in progress for the construction of the ship canal between Liverpool and Manchester, a writer in an ably-conducted North of England paper very pointedly draws attention to the probability of the remaining years of the nineteenth century being spoken of in history as "The Canal Age," his opinion being that the present indications are in the line of a large extension inland water carriage by means of canals, and that the problem of quick international communication has now been solved, almost to "finality," by steamships and railways. Whether or not finality has been reached by those two great civilizing agencies, it is undoubtedly the case that the prospects of canalization on a great scale for the immediate future bulk very largely in the eyes, both of commercial men and of engineers. Not only is there in hand the project of the Liverpool and Manchester Ship Canal, with its probable cost of $30,000,000, estimated to make an income enough to pay the shareholders if only a single ship of 4,000 tons pass both ways every day, but there are also various other great inland water way schemes, of national and international importance, either in hand or actually carried into execution.

The sum of $200,000,000 has recently been voted by the French Parliament for inland canalization works, and it is thought that at least five times that sum will have been spent upon such works before the system of inland water carriage in France has been completed.

Many of our readers are familiar with the great engineering works which have resulted in the completion of a ship canal connecting the city of Amsterdam with the sea, and they scarcely require to be informed that it has proved to be a remarkable success, commercially and otherwise.

Additional canals are likewise in course of construction or projected in Belgium, a country well adapted by nature for such works.

Then, going into Prussia, we find that there is a prospect of a speedy beginning with the canal scheme which aims at connecting the Rhine, the Weser and the Elbe with the Baltic sea, at an estimated cost of upward of $35,000,000. Proceeding further east, we should notice another proposal which bids fair to become an accomplished fact in the early future, which is a scheme to cut a ship canal to connect the river Danube with the Oder, and thereby joining the Black sea with the Baltic.

But in Russia it is proposed to enter upon even a much larger canalscheme, to wit: one to connect the river Dnieper with the Vistula, and thereby to bring the great ports of Odessa and Dantzic into direct communication.

A cable dispatch of May 10th says: A meeting of influential shipowners, today, in London, including representatives of 3,000,000 tons of Suez canal traffic, unanimously adopted a resolution favoring the construction of another canal across the isthmus, and appointed an executive committee to carry out the plans of the meeting. More or less similar schemes are likewise contemplated in other parts of the world—in Canada, Southern Europe, Southern Asia, the U. S., etc.

In our own country, the Florida canal may now be considered a definite fact. An organization was effected in Washington on the 9th instant, by the election of ex-Governor John C. Brown, of Tennessee, as President, with a large number of wealthy and influential corporators. Gov. Butler, of Massachusetts, among them. It was estimated that the canal will cost $30,000,000, of which $26,000,000 was reported as subscribed. The canal will be about 100 miles in length, and broad and deep enough for the largest class of ocean steamers. Its connection on the gulf side will be through the mouth of the Suwanee river, now so famous in song. It will connect with the St. John's river about twenty miles above its mouth.

GENESIS OF A NEW WORLD.—On a beautiful summer's night, August 22, 1794, Jerome and Lefrançois de Lelande noticed a star in Aquarius, which they estimated of the seven and one half magnitude. Six years later they thought it of the eighth magnitude. In appearance it resembles a star which is not exactly in the focus of the telescope. Herschel had observed it in September, 1782, and recorded it as an admirable planetary nebula, very brilliant, small, and elliptical. Lord Rose and Lassell perceived that it was surrounded by a ring, which gives it somewhat the appearance of Saturn. The spectroscopic observations of Huggins indicate that it is a gaseous mass, in which nitrogen and hydrogen predominate. Most of the other planetary and annular nebulae give similar results. In 1871 and 1872 Brunnov, the Irish Astronomer Royal, measured its parallax and concluded that its distance is more than 404,000 times as great as that of the sun, and its diameter is probably greater than that of the entire solar system. This would make its volume more than 338,896,800,000,000 times as great as that of the earth. We have thus before our eyes a new system, which is probably undergoing the process of condensation through which our sun and its attendant planets passed hundreds of millions of years ago.—L'Astronomie.

In countries where malaria is prevalent, or where the climate is subject to sudden changes—should be found in every house Brown's Iron Bitter.

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W., and with the success of the Order is the Watchman's progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has not been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be partakers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we will split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

Work for the Advancement of the Order.

Let the family of each Workman to which comes the WATCHMAN, show to their neighbors who are not members of the Order, but who would make good and efficient Workmen, the advantages of this, the oldest of the beneficiary organizations, and the one which they believe to be the best, as superiority is shown in each issue of this journal. If you are pleased with our paper, make it do the best possible work for the advancement of the Order by circulating it where it will do the most good in creating favorable opinions of the Order in the minds of those who may be induced to join it and become good members.

Compulsory Separation.

TO EDITORS PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN:—Compulsory separation is one of those heresies that the circumstances and conditions of the A. O. U. W. situation render dangerous. There is no warrant for it in either law or justice, but special, though fallacious, reasons operating upon separated jurisdictions incline them to look favorably upon the measure. In the first place, their own success in a separate condition gives them a false idea of the ability of other jurisdictions not only to sustain themselves in the same form, but also to grow and prosper as the larger membership have grown and prospered. But the latter could not have so advanced without individual effort, vigorously and persistently exerted, and they belittle their own motives when they take the position that they required the offices and honors and powers, or even the responsibilities, of the separate jurisdiction system, to spur them to such effort. That is not the true spirit of the Order of the cause. He is but a poor Workman, who does not see in the protection of his own family more than enough to justify careful attention to the duties of membership, and in the far-reaching influence of the aid extended to helpless widows and orphans—beneficial in every aspect and circumstance of life, more than enough to command the exertion of his best energies on all opportune occasions, and the exercise of his best thought in creating such occasions.

In those jurisdictions that have more lately been set apart, the leading members have been urging the imaginary blessings of separation as one of the greatest possible incentives to work for the requisite numbers, and the spectacle of a jurisdiction that has tried the experiment and got enough of it, is not consistent with their arguments and appeals. On the contrary, it is a standing example which the wiser and more conservative may use to hold in reasonable check, the rashness of the impulsive and over-sanguine. Hence the latter, impatient of the least restraint, and scouting all checks and balances, are ready to employ almost any reckless measure to get rid of it. They excuse their effort to force Ohio into separation—for that is the object, no matter what form their proceeding may take—on the ground that, although it is a disagreeable dose, the medicine will do us good, coolly ignoring the fact that they, thus arrogate to themselves the wisdom of experienced physicians, and relegate the Ohio members to the silliness of sick children, when the reverse is more nearly the fact, Ohio having had the experience, and her opponents being neophytes. It remains to be seen if the Supreme Lodge will endorse the assumption that novices in the organization, at more or less distance from this jurisdiction, possess knowledge of its needs and requirements superior to that of its own membership, which constituted one of the nurseries of the Order.

Aside, however, from these considerations, although they are enough in themselves to make the intelligent, conservative members of the Supreme Lodge refrain from dealing the deadly blow at Ohio that compulsory separation would surely prove, there is the clear and unquestionable fact that the measure is illegal without the consent of all concerned. The system of the Order as laid down in its fundamental laws is the property of each and every jurisdiction under the compact with the Supreme Lodge represented in the charter, and no jurisdiction can be deprived of any portion of that property without its consent. Among the franchises thus possessed is the option to assume a separate jurisdiction on the fulfillment of certain conditions. One of these conditions is the possession of a membership of 2,000 or more, and the other is the consent of the Supreme Lodge to the separation. In the case of Oregon and Washington Grand Lodge it was held, and confirmed by the Supreme body itself, that the separation occurred only on the date declared by the Supreme authorities. It is not even enough that a jurisdiction asks to be set apart—it must also present good and sufficient reasons to the Supreme authorities, before its request is granted. Thus the whole tone of the law on that point is one of restraint—to hold the State membership back until not only they but the rest of the Order are satisfied that they can maintain themselves in the separate conditions. How utterly inconsistent with this, is the idea of forcing them out against their earnest protest and warning of the disastrous consequences sure to follow! And that inconsistency amounts to an outrage when it is considered that, though wearing the cloak of a general law, the measure is clearly a blow at Ohio, with an aim at Kentucky and Indiana in the near future.

But the purpose cannot be accomplished, and that fact may as well be stated plainly at once. Ohio will exhaust every argument and appeal to fraternity, reason and justice that she is able to bring to bear upon the subject, and in this she will no doubt be ably and vigorously seconded by Kentucky and Indiana, who are also menaced by the measure. It is a humiliating fact that we will thus present the spectacle of a struggle of the weak against the strong, an aspect of affairs that is in flagrant contradiction of all our boasts of fraternity—but the shame will be upon those who push the Order into that attitude before the world, which looks to see, in such an organization as ours, the strong take sides with the weak instead of oppressing them and making a by-word and a mockery of fraternal principles and legal rights. The ignominy will not be ours if our efforts fail, and when there is no further appeal in the jurisdiction of the Order, then she will stand firmly and with dignity upon her rights, and lift up the civil law of the land, to which the Supreme Lodge itself is amenable under its charter, as a shield between her and her oppressors. This course will be taken only when it is her last resort, and even then reluctantly, but with the resolution of men who know their rights and are determined to maintain them. There is but one condition on which this jurisdiction will agree to the incorporation of an organic law providing for compulsory separation, and that is that the minimum membership where the process may be applied shall be irrevocably fixed at 5,000. Even then, if a single existing jurisdiction protests against the law, Ohio will consistently maintain that such jurisdiction has vested rights that no majority can destroy by mere numerical power.

Business Notes.

"EL MONTE HOTEL," at Saucelito, has become the popular family resort and rendezvous for the elite of our over-crowded city. Bro. J. E. Slinkey, the proprietor, has repainted, refurnished and put in all modern improvements, including gas lights, so that now, with an half-hour ride, you are planted in this Heaven of luxury and beauty. From the observatory guests can see Angel Island, Alcatraz, Oakland, and San Francisco. The grounds cover two and one-half acres, on which are several cottages, and more in process of erection for the accommodation of families who desire to have a whole house. A day or week spent at this place, under the care of Bro. Slinkey at the El Monte, will unravel and drive away more dull care than any place in this State.

PACIFIC GROVE RETREAT. One of the most successful enterprises and grand achievements for the over-worked people of California is the establishment of the elysium at Pacific Grove Retreat, at Monterey. The Pacific Improvement Co., under the guidance of master hands, has made this retreat of nature the great attraction of the Pacific coast. The safety, comfort and elegance of the S. P. R. R. cars, and the protection to the families in this health resort, has established one fact for California, viz: That the pine groves of Monterey, nestled by the side of the sea, will be the chief summer and winter resort for invalids, tourists and families for the Pacific coast.

EASTWARD BOUND TRAVEL. Workmen will do well to bear in mind that Bro. J. Meredith Davies, P. M. W., is the General Agent of the Pioneer Short Line connecting the Central and Union Pacific with Chicago and the East, giving the very best accommodations and making the shortest time. He will gladly attend to all business entrusted to his care, and may be found at all hours of the day at the office, under Palace Hotel, No. 2 New Montgomery street. Anyone thinking of going East should give him a call.

NEW BAKERY, RESTAURANT AND OYSTER SALOON.—Bro. Page, of the firm of Falch & Page, has opened one of the finest bakeries and restaurants in this city, in the new building, corner of Mason and Turk streets. The large dining-room is furnished in the latest style. The experience and known skill of these veterans in this business warrants us in saying that this will be one of the resorts of the bon-ton and the place for wedding parties, dinners, balls, and society suppers.

CARPET BEATING.—As the season has come when our homes will be renovated, we take pleasure in calling the attention of householders to the new system of Messrs. Conklin Bros., who use leather straps on a revolving roller, and then sweep with fine hair brushes and by a renovating process grease spots, coal oil and stains are removed without injuring the nap of the carpet. Parties are invited to call at the corner of Larkin and Golden Gate avenue and investigate this new process.

LUNCH GOODS.—Societies and families who wish to lay in their supplies for the camping season, should call at the mammoth grocery store of C. J. Hawley & Co., 215 and 217 Sutter street, where can be found the best assortment in kind and quality to be had in this city. The polite clerks in this department can fit up a basket of domestic and foreign delicacies that will suit the fastidious and epicures in their gypsy life.

BRO. W. T. Y. SCHENCK, of No. 36 California street, is agent for the Eureka Fire Hose Company, of New York, who are patentees and manufacturers of the celebrated "Eureka," "Paragon" and "Red Cross" Fire and Garden Hose, which is a seamless Cotton, circular-woven hose of single, double or triple ply, prepared absolutely mildew-proof and lined with the finest Para rubber. The single ply stands more than double the pressure of the best, newly-made, four-ply rubber hose, and it weighs less than half as much. It does not deteriorate with age, and can be laid away for years and the strength, remain unimpaired; and when suddenly called into use, as in case of fire, it will be found to be reliable. It is not injured by exposure to the sun, and is therefore very much superior to rubber for use in hot countries. The fire departments of the Eastern States and Canadas use it now almost entirely, and it is fast growing in favor on this coast. New York alone has 68,000 feet of Cotton Fire Hose, as per last report of June, 1882; Boston had 36,000 feet; Philadelphia bought 18,000 feet of the "Eureka" brand last year, and Chief Engineer Cantlin has now asked for 13,000 feet more. It has many qualities which make it easier and safer to handle, and where the firemen once use it they want no other. A number of the towns have been furnished on this coast, and Alameda has just received its second order of 1,000 feet of the "Paragon" brand. The Garden Hose has no equal, and as a fire hose for manufactories, hotels, etc., it is thoroughly reliable and requires no attention whatever. Those interested would do well to call and take a look at it.

GRAND EXCURSION TO MONTEREY.—The grand excursions to Monterey and Pacific Grove Retreat, via S. P. R. R. (broad gauge) last year, that were so attractive and popular, have been resumed this season. Trains leave Fourth and Townsend each Sunday at 7:30 A. M., arriving at Monterey at 10:30, giving five hours at the sea shore. Tickets for the round trip can be procured at the office, No. 2 New Montgomery street, under Palace Hotel, for $3; children half price. These excursions will be under the best management and care, and they promise, as they have been in the past, the chief attractions of the season. Lodges can make arrangements to have special cars.

WILLIAMS' BALSAMIC QUEEN OF ROSES for beautifying the complexion, removing discolorations, pimples and roughness of the skin, is growing in favor and popularity wherever known or used. It stimulates the skin, creating a healthy action, and gives the complexion a softness and clearness that is not attained otherwise. The proprietor and manufacturer, Bro. John R. Williams, of Stockton, supplies the trade generally.

SWAIN'S family bakery and dining saloon, 636 Market St., is one of the oldest and most popular resorts in the eating line in this city. It is now under the management of Mr. Savage, and maintains its former reputation as a first-class bakery and dining saloon. The bridal banquet, and the choicest of wedding cakes are supplied; also oysters, ice cream, jellies, etc. Families desiring choice confections and eatables will be supplied promptly and efficiently.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.—Bro. Bryon Jackson, manufacturer of agricultural machinery, steam engines, windmills, harrows, horse forks, thrashing machinery and all kinds of castings, has a leading position as proprietor of one of the largest industries on this coast. His large warehouses and machine shops are situated at 625 Sixth street, near the R. R. depot.

HORSE MARKET.—Bro. H. Fromberg has an extensive institution at New Montgomery street, opposite the Palace Hotel, for the sale of horses, buggies, wagons, phaetons, harness, etc. On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, at 11 o'clock, each week, there are auction sales conducted by Mr. S. C. Bowley, auctioneer. This is a reliable, square dealing, and the leading place in this city.

BRO. ADAM MURPHY, long and favorably known as a dealer in fine coffees and spices in this city, has established the Continental Coffee and Spice Mills, at 406 Sansome. A full line of spices, herbs, baking powder, flavoring extracts, coffee, green and ground, of the best quality, will be kept in large stock.

BRO. LOUIS MULLER, S. E. corner Third and Minna, has always on hand the best quality of fresh and corned meats, sausages, sugar-cured hams, bacon, lard, etc., which are sold at lowest rates. Families wishing the best meats at the lowest market rates will have their orders filled as they direct at S. E. corner Third and Minna.

If you want to get bargains in boots and shoes, either ready made or to order, go to No. 46 Sixth street. Bro. Robtscher will fill orders in his line to your entire satisfaction.

WE are frequently asked this question: "Which is the best route overland?" To this question we invariably refer to Bro. J. Meredith Davies, General Agent of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. Passengers for England and the Continent of Europe should, on arriving at San Francisco, ask or send for J. Meredith Davies, Palace Hotel, and he will assist in the exchange of their prepaid orders or purchase tickets across the American Continent.—Com.

Notices of Recent Patents.

Among the patents recently obtained through Dewey & Co.'s Scientific Press American and Foreign Patent Agency, the following are worthy of special mention:

CABLE RAILWAY.—Wm. S. Ray, S. F. No. 278,044. Dated May 22, 1883. This consists in a novel construction of the ropeway and of the gripping apparatus by which the car is connected with the rope, whereby the car may be propelled around curves, or made to cross other cable lines without interfering with them. This is effected by the use of an independent moving device which is placed in the upper part of the cable tube or tunnel where the curve or crossing is to be made, and a mechanism secured to the grip, which will engage with this device when required, the rope or cable being depressed so as to be entirely out of the way at these points.

SOFA BEDS.—B. F. Farrar, S. F. No. 278,004. Dated May 28, 1883. The improvements consist in the means for hinging and adjusting those parts or portions which are intended to fold up or open out—as, for example, the back or heads. The object is to provide a simple and effective means for operating the hinged parts and sustaining them in any desired position.

SPOKE EXTRACTOR.—Robert N. Caughell, Shedd, Oregon. No. 277,991. Dated May 22, 1883. This invention relates to a new and useful device for removing spokes from the hub, and it consists in a peculiar clamping ring fitting the spoke and acting as a lever, and having a fulcrum on the hub, and a means for applying the power at the outer side.

PREPARING FOR ACCIDENTS.—The passenger engineers on the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad are being furnished with a small box of appliances to be used in case of accidents. They are requested to carefully read the instructions which accompany the box, in reference to the proper treatment of injured persons, to have their firemen do the same, and to keep the box constantly on the engine, where it can be obtained at a moment's warning. The box contains broad and narrow bandages, with safety-pins to fasten them, a compress of dressing cotton covered with cotton-gauze, hemostatic cotton to stop bleeding, surgeons' plaster for use in bruised wounds to draw parts together and permit healing by first intentions, a bottle of soothing ointment for cuts, burns, scalds, etc., and a bottle of tincture of arnica. The little pamphlet which accompanies the box gives minute descriptions how to bandage any part of the body, and illustrates the same by a number of cuts.

THE INCREASE OF INSANITY in the past few years, as shown by recent publications of the Census Bureau, appears to be very great.
According to this statement the number of insane persons per thousand population in the United States has doubled in the past ten years.
This statement is probably somewhat in excess of the real facts, as the inquiries in the last census were much more searching than on former occasions, but at best it seems that the percentage of insane persons in the population of this country must have increased very materially.
It is a startling fact that out of our 50,000,000 of people, over one half million, or one per cent.
of the population, are either insane, idiots, deaf mutes or blind, are suffering imprisonment for crimes committed, or are inmates of reformatories or poor houses.

SQUARE dining tables will be the most fashionable this season. They are elaborately and artistically carved. The carving inclines almost entirely in the direction of the Renaissance, and the free use of animals heads and paws. Fruit and other carvings from floral or vegetable objects seems, in a measure, to be avoided.

OIL cloth may be kept bright when almost worn out if, after washing it, you take a flaxen cloth and dip a corner of it in kerosene, and rub the oil cloth with it. Of course a very little oil goes a great way, and care must be taken not to use too much.

THE ARTIFICIAL AURORA BOREALIS.—Some additional points of interest in regard to the artificial aurora, to those we gave in this column last week, will be found in the following paragraph from the Scientific American: Laboratory experiments have been frequently resorted to to produce the aurora in miniature, and the resemblance to the original has been extremely close, but an artificial aurora on a large scale and with no electrical machinery has lately been effected by Prof. Lemstroem. He selected a station just within the Arctic circle, in North Finland, where there were two mountains close together and having altitudes of 2,600 and 3,600 feet. In accordance with the well-known fact that electricity gathers upon points, two hills having clearly defined conical summits were selected. He believed that aurora was the result of an endeavor on the part of certain forces to establish an equilibrium, and assumed that electricity was passing from one hill top to the other. Reasoning that if by any means this interchange could be hastened the effect would become visible, the summits were connected with their bases by a network of copper to serve as a conductor. Immediately an arch of the aurora appeared, estimated to be at least 360 feet above the top. An examination of the currents produced in the wires showed them to be positive.
The spectroscopic clearly revealed the well-known lines of the aurora. Although the display was only of short duration, there could be no doubt of its genuineness or of the success of the experiment.

A CURIOUS BUT PLEASING CUSTOM.—There is, according to an exchange, a custom prevailing among the inhabitants of the Sandeman Islands, which may throw a light upon the civilized use of wedding cake. When a native girl, whose exceptional beauty has brought her many suitors, is knocked down and carried off by her accepted suitor, the wedded pair, within forty-eight hours of the wedding, send a cup of poison distilled from the hulahula tree, to each and every one of the bride's former admirers. If any recipient feels that he cannot become reconciled to the marriage, he drinks the poison and dies; but if he decides that he will survive the loss of his intended wife, he throws away the poison, and feels bound in honor never to show the slightest sign of disappointment. By this admirable system the husband is spared the pangs of jealousy, and is able to live on friendly terms with the surviving admirers of his wife.

Meteoric Iron.

One of two blocks of meteoric iron in the possession of the British Museum, and found in Victoria, Australia, in 1854, was recently studied from a chemical and mineralogical point of view by Dr. W. Flight, of that museum.
At the time of finding the mass, which weighs somewhat over three tons, only a small portion projected along the soil, the remaining portion being imbedded in tertiary sandstone overlying basalt. Dr. Flight states that the entire mass consists of metallic minerals and is destitute of silicates. In the course of the analysis the iron was found to contain numerous minute brittle, strongly magnetic, apparently square, prisms,
which form about one per cent of the mass.
These prisms were slowly and with difficulty acted upon by hydrochloric acid, but readily dissolved in nitric acid. Scales were observed lying on the faces and between the plates of iron crystals, being in the form of equilateral triangles, and having the thickness of stout writing paper; they were, moreover, pliant, strongly magnetic, and of a pure white color. Analysis showed the mass to contain 70.138 per cent of iron and 29.744 per cent of nickel, and Dr.
Flight proposed for it the name Edmondsonite.
The analysis of a brittle magnetic powder, which easily dissolved in nitric acid, gave the formula (Fe<sub>2</sub> Ni<sub>7</sub>) P. A large brass-colored, oblique crystal, showing perfect basal cleavage, dissolved readily in aqua regia, but was only slowly acted upon by hydrochloric or nitric acid alone, and gave, on analysis, the formula (Fe<sub>9</sub> Ni<sub>2</sub>) P<sub>2</sub>. Another crystal which was found was apparently a square prism, having brilliant metallic sides, with a dark, almost black, center. Its analysis gave the formula (Fe<sub>7</sub> Ni<sub>2</sub>) S P. Graphite occurred occasionally in this meteorite, both in nodules and in plates.
The iron was also examined for occluded gases,
and carbonic acid, carbonic oxide, hydrogen, nitrogen and marsh gases were found.

WILL THE MISSISSIPPI CHANGE ITS MOUTH?
The drawing off of a considerable volume of water from the Mississippi by the Atchafalaya river has created some alarm at New Orleans and neighboring towns on the great river. At the present time the Atchafalaya river is drawing away from the Mississippi a volume of water estimated at 300,000 cubic feet per second, or about one-fifth of the latter's entire volume, and is pouring it into the Gulf by a route only one-third as long as that pursued by the Mississippi, and having besides a much greater fall toward the sea level. The result of all this is that the Atchafalaya river is steadily increasing its volume to the detriment of the Mississippi; and if the outlet to the former is not stopped up, or prevented from increasing in size, New Orleans will, in time, be without a river, and all of the money expended upon the jetties will have been expended to no purpose. It is predicted by a prominent U. S. Engineer, that the Mississippi will cut its way into the Atchafalaya bayou, within a year or two, and make that the main channel from the mouth of the Red river to the Gulf. Should that occur, it would shorten the line to the Gulf about 200 miles, but as the cities along the present course and Capt. Fads will decidedly object to the change, it is likely that such steps as we suggested last season will be adopted to prevent the change, and at the same time allow of the overflow, in very high water from the Mississippi, through Atchafalaya bayou to the Gulf and thus save the country below the mouth of the Red river.

Window shades are being made of some lighter colored material than has heretofore prevailed—a pale cream or fawn-color, for instance.
This is done to permit hand-painting ornamentation upon it, a pastime which will no doubt be an enjoyable one for those sufficiently talented to undertake it. The light tones of blue, lilac, etc., are of course as popular as they have
at all times been.

THE VIEW DEPARTMENT added to the Gallery one year ago embraces the finest and largest collection of Negatives in the country; they include City Views, Yosemite, Big Trees, Geysers, Petrified Forest, Columbia River, Oregon, Salt Lake City, Railroad, Japan, Sandwich Islands, etc., etc.

This Establishment has an immense foreign trade. Orders are constantly being received from Tourists who have visited California for (duplicate) Portraits of themselves from Negatives in Mr. TABER'S possession. Besides, large orders for Yosemite and Pacific Coast Views are daily being shipped to every part of the world. This industry of Mr. TABER'S induces travelers to visit our State to behold its grand and beautiful scenery, which brings a large revenue to this City. It helps to fill our hotels, brings custom to our tradesmen and encourages emigration to our shores; for who can look upon a true delineation of our hills, valleys and plains without envy?

THE TABER GALLERY is a leading business house of the city. It occupies two floors of the Hibernia Bank Building, and gives constant employment to over 30 people, among them our best-known artists. Its business extends over a larger field than any other in the State, penetrating, as it does, to the family fireside of every known nation. Among the patrons of the house are kings, presidents, statesmen, generals, nobility, and leading men of this and other countries, but not least the family trade of this City and Coast. The advantage in dealing with this house is you get all the latest styles and best finished work, Mr. TABER having agents in New York and in Europe selecting and forwarding to him new backgrounds and accessories, with everything new developed in the Art.

Headwaters of the Arkansas.

On this page we give an engraving which shows Fremont pass, at the headwaters of the Arkansas.

The Arkansas river rises in the Tennessee pass, nearly west of Mount Lincoln, in latitude 39° 21', and longitude 106° 19', and flows a little east of south for a distance of about eighty miles in a straight line, when it turns to the east, and flows through a deep canyon in the granite, and emerges into the plains near Canyon City. Near the junction of the east branch of the Arkansas, the valley, with the terraces on either side, continues pretty regularly about five to who has not actually explored them. It is in the study of these gorges that the geologist learns to appreciate the immense results of erosion in giving form to the rocky range of the West. Even yet the power of this force has not been adequately understood, but the wider our range of observation, the greater is our conception of its power. We may safely assert that at some period comparatively modern, 10,000 or 15,000 feet of sedimentary beds extended uninterruptedly from the South Park across the interval now occupied by the Sawatch range, all of which, but insignificant remnants, have been swept away, while a mass of the granite nucleus, of inconceivable di-ssippi. It rises at the west-central part of Colorado, and its length is 2,170 miles. It is navigable for steamers 800 miles from its mouth, during nine months of the year.

Music of the Future.

The famous Thomas Symphony Orchestra, the grand chorus of five hundred voices, and bevy of notable soloists, have had a brilliant season in San Francisco. Many have fully appreciated this magnificent rendition of the sentiment of the great Masters, many have enjoyed it only in parts, and to many this mighty wave of sound was resolvable into no distinct impression. They submitted to be patiently bored for the sake of fashion. But the grand musi-species of enjoyment? It seems possible that the whole field of sound, from the most dulcet tones to the crash and furore of brass bands and brazen instruments may be accompanied or contrasted by color and odor of equal range of combination. The realm of musical enjoyment is vast, but if harmony could be made to play simultaneously upon three senses, its possibilities would be infinite! We may here catch a glimpse of a musical festival in the future. Some great master of drill and arrangement may arise, who will bring all the effects possible in music into harmony with the rhythm and cadences of color and odor.

eight miles in width, but gradually closes up again below Lake creek, though on the other side are vast deposits of the coarse drift material extending high up on the mountain sides, especially on the west side of the valley. The valley then gradually expands out and enlarges, about five to ten miles in width, for a distance of nearly forty miles.

On either side of the valley small streams flow into the main channel of the Arkansas, from the source to Canyon City. These streams usually have their origin at the very crest, or water-divide of the two ranges, and, in most instances, have cut their way through the solid mass of the main river. Many of these streams have numerous side branches, which have also carved out wonderful gorges near the crest of the mountains, giving to these mountain ranges a ruggedness that is almost inconceivable to one who has also been removed. The general elevation of the Sawatch range for sixty to eighty miles is 13,000 or 14,000 feet above the sea at this time, and it is highly probable that hundreds, and perhaps thousands of feet have been removed from the summit.

In 1845, Fremont, at that time a Lieutenant in the Corps of Topographical Engineers, skirted the northern border for a short distance. He came up the Arkansas river, crossed the main divide at Tennessee pass, and traveled down Eagle river as far as the mouth of the creek. Here he crossed the river and took the trail over to White river, which stream he followed down some distance, then crossed the country to the Green river, thence to Salt Lake City.

The pass was named after General Fremont. The Arkansas river is, next to the Missouri, the largest affluent of the Mississippi. It rises at the west-central part of Colorado, and its length is 2,170 miles. It is navigable for steamers 800 miles from its mouth, during nine months of the year.

cal festival reminds us of an old idea we picked up somewhere years ago, that we hand out to the musical esthetes for what it is worth. It is well known that there is a wonderful analogy between sound and color, and that the diatonic scale has its counterpart in the prismatic hues of the rainbow. Not long ago it was asserted by the Philadelphia Ledger, there are both octaves and semi-tones of odor, and that odors may blend into such tuneful harmony with the soul as to awaken vivid memories and reminiscences of the "Long Ago." Now, why may not music, color, and odor be so combined as to afford a triple pleasure to the lovers of harmony. Prof. Maelzel demonstrated some years ago before a delighted audience in an Eastern city, that color was as manageable as sound in producing brilliant effects. Why, then, should there be any mechanical difficulty in the way of so arranging a hall that sound, color, and odor may be made to combine in rhythmic order, and produce a most delightful

Farm have forbidden flirtations between the male and female inmates who enjoy its dubious hospitality. Here is more useless legislation. The managers might as well forbid the rising and falling of the tides. The wanton god of love never stops to consider, when he aims at the hearts of mortals, whether his arrow strikes first a silken or a hempen vestment. It is a lucky thing for the world that love is unconfined.

BRO. E. M. READING, the Secretary of the Guarantee Fund, is in Oregon introducing the Order to the brethren of that State, and receives a hearty welcome from the Grand Recorder of that Jurisdiction, R. Newcomb.

THE Pacific Overseer, speaking of California matters, says: "We are pleased to note that Brother Pratt is re-elected; he is a true and faithful servant, and deserves the honor."

Our Climbing Prairie Rose.

(Written by John T. Lynde.)

I was, climbing tree and bush,
A gem of nature's mold;
Thy bud and blossom, round and true,
Fairer than virgin gold.

Each perfume filled every room,
As morning's sun arose;
The sparkling dew on bud and bloom,
Star-gemmed our prairie rose.

'Tis then we feast our wistful eyes
On nature's queenly flowers,
Whose tints outvie the stellar skies,
And decks earth's fairy bow'rs.

When troubles brood through daily toil,
And spirit sighs for rest,
The stainless rose, like angel smile,
Relieves the heart oppressed.

Thy blush is of ethereal hue,
Heaven's gift to suffering man;
A shade from Eden's skies of blue,
To perfect nature's plan.

Bloom on, thy rose of sweet perfume,
Give fragrance free as air;
Thy tendrils twined around our home,
The fairest of the fair.

At eve we gaze on blushes bright,
So chaste, pure and rare;
A peaceful rest comes with the night,
A sense of silent prayer.

Oh, twine around our home and heart,
A missionary true,
And when we shall from earth depart,
In heaven thou'lt bloom anew.

Chinese Camp, May 21, 1883.

The Uncle's Choice.

"Do you know you are distractingly pretty in a temper?"

"And you are excessively impertinent?"

Miss Lynde drew her slim figure to its full height and flashed indignant eyes upon the gentleman opposite.

"And so," said Roger Windom, his manner assuming sudden warmth, "you consider me impertinent because, to my eyes, you are the loveliest woman in the world, and, therefore, I have asked you to marry me, whether my uncle likes it or not?"

The young man was thoroughly in earnest now, and poured out his words without reference to rhetoric or effect.

"It is precisely that to which I object," interrupted Miss Lynde, imperiously. "Listen to me. You come here where I am employed as governess, ostensibly to visit the lady of the house in reality to see me. You waylay me on the street when I go out to walk; you annoy me, and astonish Mrs. Burdett by asking for a private interview; and when you tell me, with your usual assurance, that you would like to marry me, although your uncle, upon whom you are entirely dependent, has emphatically refused his consent. You leave my possible feelings altogether out of your consideration, Mr. Windom. You should remember that I have my own dignity to uphold, and that I am not a scheming adventuress trying to thrust myself upon an unwilling family."

Miss Lynde stopped, breathless, though in her excitement her gray eyes still flashed dangerously.

"At least you have been very plain spoken," said Roger Windom, bitterly, standing as he had listened with his black brows contracted and arms folded upon his breast. "And now, perhaps, Miss Lynde, you will permit me to answer you. I have very little to offer in defense, except that I have been foolish enough to love you madly, from the moment that I first saw you smile and heard you speak. I have no excuse ready for my reprehensible conduct in waylaying you on the street—none for asking you to accept the devotion of my life. Pardon me, that in dwelling on my own selfish hopes, I have failed to consider the delicacy of your position. But, I will not trouble you further, Miss Lynde; I will bid you good-day."

"Stay a moment," interrupted the lady, with a detaining gesture. "Mr. Windom, you have shamed me into an apology for my ungracious words," with a smile void of all coquetry in its perfect frankness. "You do not know what my life has been," she added gently. "Even as a child I knew what unhappiness meant, for my poor mother married, even as you have wished me to do, against the wishes of her husband's family. In a year he was tired of her—accused her of having spoiled his career; finally, he deserted her. Before my poor mother died, she told me the sad story. I promised her then that I would never marry as she had done; and, so help me Heaven! I never will." The beautiful eyes were full of unshed tears as they were raised to Roger Windom's face, and the girl's voice trembled slightly as she went on. "I thank you, indeed, for the honor you have done me; I will even acknowledge that under different circumstances, I might have learned to love you. But, as it is, it is better that we should never meet. Do not come here any more—do not see me again, and you will soon forget that such an insignificant person exists as Janet Lynde."

As she ceased speaking, Miss Lynde's pale face was lit up with an April smile, and the hand she had extended in token of farewell was firmly clasped between two larger palms.

"I shall never forget you," said the young man, passionately, his brown eyes looking with a triumphant gladness into hers. "And I shall love you until the hour of my death. This I shall tell my uncle, and if he still persists in refusing to give his consent, without knowing you, or even so much as hearing your name, then henceforth he and I are strangers. For, Janet, what you are not allowed to share, neither will I possess nor enjoy, and so, darling, for a long time good-bye."

Before Miss Lynde had quite recovered herself, Roger Windom had kissed the little hand so closely imprisoned in his own, and was gone.

For a long time she stood as he had left her, with hands hanging helplessly at her side, and her head downcast.

She was not a beautiful woman, scarcely a noticeable one among a number, and yet there was something noble in the poise of the proud head, in the resolute curves of lip and chin.

It was a face whose beauty and intelligence grew upon you as you gazed—a face that inspired involuntary confidence and a belief in truth and goodness.

"Pray, Mrs. Burdett, who is the young lady across the way from us?"

Mr. Samuel Windom was addressing himself to his hostess, a well-preserved matron intent upon being agreeable to her rich guest.

"That is Miss Lynde, my governess, really a superior young person, and the children are quite devoted to her," explained the lady, with much graciousness.

Janet, in a blue lawn dress and broad-brimmed garden hat, was seated upon a rustic bench, ostensibly reading, but in reality gazing out over the fair green meadow that stretched before her, while she pondered absently upon the inscrutable ways that had brought Roger Windom's uncle under the same roof with her.

The winter was gone, and summer had come again, since she and Roger had parted.

In a despairing letter of farewell she had learned that he had parted from his uncle in anger—had gone out into the wide world to work out his fortune, but not without the hope, he added, that some day he should come back to seek and claim her.

Janet's reverie was interrupted by voices close upon her, and, rising hastily in her confusion, Miss Lynde was introduced to Mr. Windom.

The sunlight and faint blushes met upon her cheek and made her positively beautiful, for the time, as she stood talking to the stately and ceremonious old gentleman who had once held her happiness in his hand, and had refused to give it to her.

Long ago Janet had confessed to herself that Roger Windom's love would have crowned her life with happiness indeed. For life had been a very colorless affair to Janet until the advent of this handsome and ardent lover, and now that he was gone Miss Lynde had discovered that, after all, she had not been impervious to the influence of an absorbing love. There was a singular mixture of reverence and repugnance in the girl's mind toward this proud and self-opinionated old man, and Miss Lynde's eyes and lips were very grave as she answered Mr. Windom's courtier-like speeches, and walked beside him down the trim garden path.

Evidently he was not aware that this was the woman who had taken his nephew away from him. Roger had withheld the name and the other had not the curiosity to inquire after it. The fact was sufficient to the inflexible old man. His nephew wished to form a connection beneath his position of life. The woman had sufficient shrewdness to see that his consent was necessary to make her marriage to the adopted heir a desirable one. Mr. Windom congratulated himself on his own astuteness, when he absolutely declined this compliance with his hot-headed nephew's impassioned and very impatient demands. So the two equally fiery and obstinate natures had met in wordy combat, and both had been worsted, though each refused to yield.

They had parted in anger, and Mr. Samuel Windom was trying the effect of change and variety in his now lonely life; for, all unacknowledged to himself, he felt his nephew's defection keenly, and but for his pride would have begged him to come back again.

In the meantime, Mr. Windom found himself becoming greatly interested in this serious-eyed Miss Lynde. Quite unaware, Janet touched the vulnerable spot in Samuel Windom's nature.

He fancied her a fair resemblance to his dead wife, and she had not dispelled the illusion by the fashionable airs and affectation that young ladies generally display. So Mr. Windom's visit at Mrs. Burdett's elegant country mansion was prolonged from week to week, until that lady confidentially asserted to her husband her belief that Mr. Windom intended marrying their governess; and certainly the lady's theory was not without sufficient basis, for the gentleman's old-fashioned and courtly attentions were impressive enough even to unobservant eyes.

One morning, as Miss Lynde was leaving her room, she was rather startled by Mr. Windom's servant handing her a letter, with the gentleman's compliments.

"Could it be possible that he was really about to propose to her," as Mrs. Burdett had vaguely intimated? thought Janet, as she broke the seal in some perturbation; and this was what she read:

"MY DEAR YOUNG LADY: I have considered whether I should speak to you upon this subject that lies very near my heart, or trust it to the more dispassionate medium of a letter. For I desire that you should weigh carefully the proposition I have to make you. I am an old man, without a tie that is not mercenary. The only relative I had living has forsaken me in my old age for some scheming adventuress, who doubtless expected to secure my money too. Will you come to me in his stead to brighten and cheer the remainder of my days? I have not asked you without due reflection and a thorough study of your character, and to remove you from any sense of dependency or from future contingencies, I would convey in your name certain bonds and household property, of which we will speak more explicitly if you consent to regard favorably my proposition. In this event I should also desire to adopt you legally as my daughter—that you should assume my name, with all its privileges, and the assurance again repeated, that I am acting upon matured reflection and a sincere motive of mutual benefit.

Truly yours,

SAMUEL WINDOM.

Miss Lynde felt extremely perplexed as she re-folded her letter. What should she do? Would she be hurting Roger Windom's interest in accepting his uncle's proposals or, rather, would she not be rendering him a service in securing him against others who might be more self-interested than she?

Altogether it was irresistible. The thought of reigning in the house where Roger had lived—perhaps to have him come back some day to find her there awaiting him.

A little later, then, and Janet Lynde beheld herself transformed into an important personage, with all the luxurious surroundings and costly accessories that befitted a rich man's daughter.

Mr. Windom was kindness himself in his stately, old-fashioned manner, and yet Janet was not altogether content.

The coming home, to which she had looked forward so hopefully, had not come to pass, and upon the subject of his truant nephew, Samuel Windom spoke never a word.

"And so, Uncle Samuel, you have brought me back all this way to tell me you have found me a wife? But it is out of the question. There is only one woman in the world you could induce me to marry, and she will not marry me."

"Wait until you have seen my daughter," said his uncle, with a benign smile.

"It is scarcely worth while to quarrel at our first meeting," thought Roger, as he came slowly down stairs as the dinner-bell sounded.

Then he opened the door and entered the room.

Standing before the fire, with her back to him, he saw a slender female figure, with soft brown hair braided smoothly into a crown upon a well-shaped head, and her trailing silk robe of pale hue, hanging in statuesque folds about her.

She turned slowly, and brought him face to face with Janet Lynde.

"Janet! you here?" he cried eagerly, his whole handsome face lighting up with a delighted smile. "I suppose," slowly, as the smile faded, but with her hands still tightly clasped in his, that you are married?"

"No, not married," Janet answered.

"At least," he said, drinking in the beauty of her face with hungry eyes—"at least, you are more prosperous," with a quick glance at her heavily jeweled hands and the richness of her ivory-tinted gown.

"Yes; I have been greatly blessed," she answered quietly.

"And I suppose you are here visiting this paragon my uncle raves about? Janet do you know my uncle sent me a beautiful letter full of the idea of mutual forgiveness and reconciliation, and when I arrive, full of penitence and my own shortcomings, behold, it was to marry me to his new daughter that he wanted me!"

And Roger Windom looked infinitely disgusted at the bare idea.

"It would be a most desirable marriage for you," said Janet, demurely looking down.

"Do not be unkind," said the young man, with a beseeching accent of entreaty. "For your sake I went willingly into exile. Already I have been fortunate enough to lay the foundation of a future independence. Once I have gained a secure foothold, promise me, my Janet, that I may come home to claim you for my very own. Will you promise, my darling?"

The eager voice had assumed a dangerous tenderness as the words poured forth, but the girl only answered, "You have forgotten, Mr. Windom, the obstacles that existed still remain, do they not? Believe me, the marriage your uncle has planned is in every way suitable, and from the bottom of my heart I hope that you will marry your uncle's choice."

And Janet was evidently in earnest.

"Then I am sorry I must disappoint you both," said the young man passionately. "Unfortunately I was born with a heart—an organ with which, it appears, you have dispensed. Oh, Janet!" with a despairing cadence in his tones, "why can you not love? Why are you so lovely and so cold?"

"Roger,"—the voice had grown suddenly sweet and low—"I will confess it now. From the bottom of my heart I do love you. Nevertheless," an arch smile breaking over her face, "I am quite convinced that when you have once seen Mr. Windom's adopted daughter, you will change your opinion about marrying her."

And while Roger, with both her hands in his, was trying to assure her of the impossibility of such a result, the door opened, and Mr. Samuel Windom's amazed eyes dwelt upon the pretty picture before him.

"Upon my soul, Roger, you seem to be progressing very well," said his uncle, as he elevated his eye-glasses.

"And this," said his nephew, triumphantly leading her forward, "is the only woman you can induce me to marry."

And so it was time that Janet should offer an explanation; the result of which was, that in another month's time there was a magnificent wedding in the Windom family, and the bride, so charming in her creamy satin and priceless pearls, was given away by Mr. Samuel Windom.

Open Letters to the Young People.

(Written by Jewell.)

Don't be in a hurry to marry girls, wait until you have learned a trade, or something by which you can support yourself, should fate ever make it necessary for you to do so.

Many a girl enters into the holy state and bondage of matrimony, with nothing but youth and beauty as a dowry; with no experience of the duties of housekeeping, nor the cares of a family, and many alas, without the true, pure love, which is the one guiding star of her future happiness amid cares, trials, perplexities and joys of her life.

I knew a girl, a charming one too, who married because she was tired of home and its dominion. Her mother, poor woman, did not sympathize with a girl's feelings; her desires to be, or do something, anything freely. The daily life of duty, and scant pleasure (awaiting the "coming out," when study was over,) became quite intolerable, and believing if married, she would be her own mistress, and do as she pleased, she wrecked her own, her husband's and mother's happiness alike, by marrying in haste, and repenting for her life time. Instead of one to control her, she now had two, and the care of a home and baby beside. What wonder then that she should break loose from bondage and home, leaving the child with her mother, stray away still further from duty and right, as she did. But did she gain happiness, or respect, or society? No, such blessings, are only born of love, purity, and a faithful discharge of duty; no matter whether it be agreeable or otherwise.

We cannot take our lives into our own hands and model them as we would wish. Circumstances fashion our lives according to the surrounding conditions, and we must aim to make the most of ourselves with such privileges as we have; but never forget that however distasteful and difficult our path in life may be, it might be worse, and may be made smoother by a faithful discharge of duty. No matter how bright and glowing our lives there are clouds gathering to dim the glory, for there is always a something not just as we would wish it.

Another friend married to get rid of the importunities of her lover; while another to please and satisfy her parents. Numberless girls marry for an establishment and a position in society, which wealth gives only too easily.

Very few are quite independent of all of the reasons and truly marry for a high, pure purpose, that of congenial tastes and perfect mutual love.

True love is generous, unselfish and all confident; so beware of a lover who is jealous, selfish and exacting in his claims. Genuine affection is lasting and is willing and anxious to return as much as it takes.

A true, beautiful marriage is more than a life partnership; it is a union of those better qualities of individuals, which checks and kills out all that is evil, cherishing only the lofty, and high, and better part for growth and example of the family circle. Between husband and wife there should exist that christian rivalry expressed in the Apostle's words, "In honor preferring one another." Each should be capable and willing alike to aid in the support of the family, having one common purpose, free to both alike.

'Tis a delusive idea that woman is necessarily extravagant, and that man supports his wife. If she be in health and does her duty at home, her economy and thrift fully equal his earnings outside. But when surrounded by servants, and her position at home and in society calls for no exertion mentally nor physically, she equally with man becomes vain, frivolous, extravagant and wicked.

Don't encourage the company of young men of extravagant, bad habits. Smoking and drinking are not only expensive habits, but injurious. They vitiate the appetite, narcotize and inflame the blood, demoralize the passions and weaken the brain power; and no girl is safe with such a companion, nor true to herself or children with such a husband. Time only can disclose whether he take the downward path or not. Few remain moderate in such habits through life.

It behooves both sexes to earnestly seek to choose rightly a life companion, and remember that the new life brings new duties, cares and responsibilities not easily laid aside, and never to be forgotten if laid aside. It is the turning of a new leaf in the book of your lives. So see to it, that you leave no blot to mar its everlasting page.

Dot's Unhappy Day.

[Written by I. H.]

Dot's mamma was buying cherries from the fruit man at the door.

"Oh, cherries!" said Dot, "give me some," and mamma filled her little hands, and hung two fastened together by their stems over each of her ears for earrings.

"Don't swallow the stones, Dot," said mamma, as she went into the pantry.

"I've swallowed the cherries," said Dot, following her, "and I want some more."

"No," said mamma, "you have had enough. I will make a pie for dinner, and you shall have a piece of it."

"I don't want a pie; I want some more cherries," said the little girl, beginning to cry.

"Why, Dot, I am ashamed of you; a big girl five years old crying for cherries, like a baby!" But Dot cried all the louder, until mamma took her up stairs and set her in her own little rocking chair in the bedroom.

"There," she said, "you are such a naughty little girl that you cannot stay with me; when you are ready to be good you may come down again;" and mamma went away and left her.

I don't know what was the matter with Dot; she was not often so naughty, but now she fretted and whined and tried to be as cross as she could.

"Greedy old mamma," she said in a whisper, "she wants to eat all the cherries her own self;" but even while she said it, Dot was ashamed, for she knew she was not telling the truth. Still, she was not willing to go down stairs and say she would be good; and after she stopped crying, she sat and panted, and did not look at all like the little girl papa called his sunbeam.

After a while mamma came to the foot of the stairs and called in her sweet, pleasant voice, "Dot!" But the little girl did not answer. Mamma called again, "Dot; come down now if you are good." But Dot felt cross and naughty still, and instead of answering she began to rock backwards and forwards in her little chair, making all the noise possible. Mamma did not come up stairs; she went into the parlor and shut the door, and after that the house was very quiet. It was so quiet that at last Dot began to feel lonely and when she had waited until she was tired, and still nobody came near her, she went slowly down stairs.

She opened one door after another but no mamma was to be found. Nora was out in the backyard, hanging clothes on the line, but no one else was there. Dot went out and stood watching her for a little, but Nora took no notice of her at all, until the little girl asked her, "Where is my mamma?"

Then Nora looked at her and said, shortly, "She's gone away."

"Gone away!" exclaimed Dot, in great surprise, "where is she gone?"

"Well, I'll tell you. She's gone to your grandma's to spend the day."

"And why didn't she take me?" said Dot, beginning to cry again.

"Because you wouldn't come when she called you. You see, it don't pay to put on airs to your ma, Miss Dot," said Nora, decidedly.

Poor Dot! Now she had something to cry about, and cry she did in good earnest. But Nora just let her cry till she was tired. When twelve o'clock came, there was a dinner of bread and milk for the little girl who had not wanted any cherry pie, and there was no one to talk to, no one to tell her stories or to take her out for a walk. The time passed very slowly, and I think Dot began to feel that she had been both foolish and naughty when she would not answer her mother in the morning. About the middle of the afternoon she was out in the garden trying to play by herself, when she heard a buggy stop at the gate, and there was her Uncle John getting out. She ran to meet him very gladly, for he made a great pet of Dot, and they had famous romps together. But this time Uncle John looked rather grave.

"Well, Dot," he said, "I have just come from grandma's, and your mother told me to look in here on my way, and if I could find a very sorry little girl, I might take her back with me."

"Oh, Uncle John," said Dot, "that's me!" And she fairly danced up and down with delight.

Uncle John laughed. "Well I don't know, you neither look nor behave like a very sorry little girl."

"But I am," said Dot; "I was as sorry as ever I could be till you came. I'm glad now, though—won't you take me?" And two big tears rolled out of Dot's blue eyes.

"Yes," said Uncle John, "I think you are the little girl she meant. Now, get yourself ready, and I will be back in ten minutes."

And so Dot went with Uncle John to grandma's; and when her mamma met her at the gate she said very humbly, "I am good now, mamma;" and then she was kissed and forgiven. But Dot has not forgotten that unhappy day, and the next time she is called she will be very sure to answer.

Buttons.

"Button, button, who has the button?" asked a glove that had been dropped on the toilet table.

"I've got it," answered Jimmy's jacket. "I've several buttons, in fact."

"No," put in the closet door, "I have it myself; the carpenter gave it to me."

"I had a dozen or so," said a boot, looking rather down at the heel.

"And I have a hundred or more," yawned the easy chair, "but they don't button anything; they don't belong to the working class."

"Here's a bachelor's button," remarked a vase of flowers on the bureau.

"There's a button wood tree in the garden," said the button hooker; "I suppose you all grew there."

"I know better than that," pouted the closet door. "Mine grew in the veins of the earth, where all the precious metals are found. It's a poor relation of their's."

"And we," added a pair of ivory sleeve-buttons, "we grew in the land of the white elephant. We were carved from the tusks of the leader, who threatened the jungles and swam the rivers at the head of his troops."

"My buttons," said the glove, "were nearly related to the gem which Cleopatra dissolved for Antony. They were mother-of-pearl, grown in the shell of the pearl oyster, for which divers risk their lives."

"That's something of a fish story," thought Jimmy's jacket. "My buttons are only glass, but glass is sometimes made of sand, and who knows but their atoms may have been swept down to the sea shore from 'farthest India'?"

"And I," whispered the bachelor's button, "I sprang from a tiny seed, with all my splendor of blue and purple wings, like the Afrite from the jar which the fisherman found on the beach. It is a miracle how I was packed away there!"—St. Nicholas.

POLITENESS.—I was in a compartment with a little French boy of twelve, the precise age at which American children, as a rule, are rude. He was dressed faultlessly, but his clothes were not the chief charm. I sat between him and the open window, and he was eating pears. Now, an American boy of that age would either have dropped the cores on the floor or tossed them out of the window, without a word to anybody. But this small gentleman, every time, with a "Permit me, Monsieur," said in the most pleasant way, rose and came to the window, and dropped them out, and then "Merci, Monsieur," as he quietly took his seat. It was a delight. I am sorry to say that such small boys do not travel on American railroads to any alarming extent. Would they were more frequent.—Nashby.

Health Column.

Sleeplessness.

A physician, writing in the Christian Union on this subject, remarks:

The causes that produce this serious trouble are various. Not unfrequently the tendency to it is inherited with a delicate nervous organization, and overwork will increase it. It is difficult for the sufferer to know just how much work, mental and physical, may be accomplished without producing the unpleasant result. For one so constituted a most watchful care becomes important, and the most interesting employment must be turned away from at the first sense of weariness.

An earnest conversation with a friend exciting your sympathy, the demand upon your strength made by an invalid, reading an article that stimulates the mind to intense thinking, may, any of them, cause you to spend weary, wakeful hours and lead to severe exhaustion on the morrow.

By watchfulness you may learn to spare yourself the over-fatigue, as a duty which others may not understand the reason for. You may avoid the conversation and the book at evening, seeking them at an earlier hour when the choice lies with you. But with every care you are liable to suffer from causes you can neither foresee nor prevent.

Sometimes indigestion will awaken you at the small hours, and take revenge for some very slight departure from the careful diet you uniformly adopt. Recently it has been discovered that many persons lose hours of sleep because they are in need of nourishment; that the fast is too long that continues from supper time at six o'clock until six or eight o'clock the next morning.

Physicians who used to prescribe bromide of soda or potassium for sleeplessness now urge their patients to take beef-tea instead. The writer, after trying various prescriptions with little benefit, was at length so fortunate as to receive such advice. At first beef-tea was used with some light bread or biscuit broken in it, sipped from a spoon as warm as it could be taken. Afterwards milk, just scalded, not boiled, was substituted, and, to make it more easy of digestion, a teaspoonful of lime-water was added to half a tumbler full of milk. To facilitate matters, a pocket stove with an alcohol lamp, or an arrangement for the gas fixture, should be at hand. If neither beef-tea nor milk can be easily procured, hot water, with an infusion of hops or mint, may be substituted, or even hot water alone will quiet restlessness and induce sleep. A darkened room that the moonbeams cannot enter, a little fresh air from an open fireplace or window, are valuable assistants in making the sleep continuous.

When once the habit of wakefulness is broken up, the beef-tea or milk may be taken cold, but not iced. If you are always a poor sleeper, it will be well to continue this late supper as a permanent thing in your daily life.

Provide for it in the case of aged and delicate persons who may be under your roof; and, as the troubles of life appear most weighty when scanned in the midnight hours, you may be able to lighten the load for the rest of their journey.

SEWAGE PERILS.—Speaking of these, the Popular Science News has some very sensible remarks. It says: "The vast number of traps, valves, automatic plugs, bent tubes, etc., used in houses have resulted from efforts among plumbers and inventors to meet the difficulties of the situation by the first method. It may be said that some degree of success has crowned the efforts of the mechanics to obviate sewage perils, but the success has been by no means what the gravity of the situation demands. At present there does not appear to be a single mechanical appliance known which effectually, under all circumstances, affords immunity from the return of deleterious gases and disease germs into dwellings." But it goes on to say that a Mr. Mallett, a well-known chemist, has invented a device called a germicide, "which most admirably meets an important end. This device is very simple, and consists in placing behind the lid of water-closets a black walnut box, within which is a metallic case holding a mass of crystalline chloride of zinc. This zinc is open to a gentle flow of water, which gradually dissolves it, and it flows into the bowl constantly, night and day, sterilizing the water so that no living germs can pass." This looks very much as if it met and overcame the difficulty.

WARM BED CLOTHING FOR CHILDREN. It is fully as important that children should be warmly clad at night as during the day. Nor is it sufficient that the bed-clothing should be warm. Indeed, we are apt to err in using too many blankets rather than too few. Then the restless child kicks off the cover, and from a warm perspiration becomes chilled through, and a severe cold is the consequence. Delicate children should sleep in flannel, while for more robust constitutions Canton flannel in the lighter grades is heavy enough. Night-drawers are to be preferred to night-gowns, and the legs of the drawers should be long enough to reach the feet. Indeed, the style which covers the foot also, like a stocking, is an excellent one for children who are restless sleepers. Night-gowns for babies should be long enough to come down well over the feet, and flannels should be worn in cold weather, the pinning blankets which are furnished with all layletts. In every household where there is a baby, there should be at least one open fire where its feet may be occasionally toasted. No one can sleep healthily when cold, and the baby will rest much better if laid to sleep upon a warm blanket than between cold sheets.

Household Hints.

Putting up Fruit in Glass.

A lady writing to the Rural Press, of the city, wishes to know how to put up fruit in glass jars so that it will not ferment. Her experience has been a sad one, for how discouraging after all the hard hot work, to find all your labor lost. Mrs. D. W. McLeod, of Riverside, Cal., writes as follows:

We can every season from 200 to 250 jars of fruit, and I am sure I am safe in saying we don't lose one-half dozen jars out of that amount, and those are from defective tops or rubbers. I use the Mason jar, porcelain tops; peaches, pears and blackberries I can sweet enough to taste pleasantly, and still retain the natural flavor, as much as possible, except the lemon or white Heath cling, which I preserve and pickle. I use for preserves and jam, of any kind, three-fourths of a pound of sugar to one pound of fruit. Plums and apricots I preserve, the latter in halves, and also make marmalade of very ripe apricots with three-fourths of a pound of sugar to one pound of fruit, which is delicious. Pie fruit I do not make so sweet. Apricots develop a very strong acid, if not put up with plenty of sugar.

The process is simple. Put, say a teacupful of water in your preserving kettle, and your sugar. When the sugar is dissolved, and the syrup is hot, lay in your fruit carefully, and let it heat thoroughly all through, but not boil to pieces. At the same time, have your jar standing on a plate, in a pan of hot water, on the stove; the jar full of hot water. Have the top and rubber also in the water heating. As soon as your fruit is ready, pour out the water and fill the jar immediately. When full, press a silver fork or the handle of a tablespoon down the sides of the jar to cause any bubbles to rise to the top, and add a spoonful or two of the boiling juice, if not perfectly full. Now screw on the top as tightly as you can, and carry your jar to the table where I always let mine stand until perfectly cold, tightening them several times while cooling.

Except with jam, marmalade, or pickles, I never do but one jar at a time. Tomatoes I always can in tin, using the tins two seasons, and our tomatoes are perfect. We never lose a can. In this I throw science to the winds and and go by experience. We never have had dyspepsia, nor anything like it, and we use several dozen cans of tomatoes every year, in soups and as a vegetable. They taste and look as natural as when picked fresh from the vines.

Scald your tomatoes, peel them, and cut them in halves, or large pieces, heat to boiling, and can immediately in tin. I always heat and can three or four cans at a time.

POT ROAST OF BEEF.—Slice quarter of a pound of salt pork and lay it on the bottom of a dinner-pot; peel and slice a medium-sized onion and lay it over the pork; then put into the pot a rather square, solid piece of the round of beef, weighing about six pounds; season it with a tablespoonful of salt and a salt-spoonful of pepper; add sufficient hot water to reach one fourth up the side of the meat; cover the pot and set it where the meat will cook slowly; about half an hour to each pound of meat is generally the time required for cooking. Turn the meat occasionally, and cook it very slowly until it is brown and tender; take care to keep only sufficient water in the pot to prevent burning. When the meat is done, keep it hot in the oven, while a tablespoonful of flour is boiled for two minutes in the gravy; then serve the gravy and pork on the dish with the pot roast.

SUET PUDDING.—A suet pudding which is not too rich, helps to make variety at the dinner table. Here is an excellent recipe: One cup of chopped suet, one cup of raisins, stoned and chopped, one cup of sweet milk, four cups of flour, one cup of molasses, one teaspoonful of salt, and one of soda; steam for three hours. This makes a large pudding; enough for a dozen people, and half of the quantity may, of course, be used. If you have an old-fashioned cake tin, with a spout in the center, it is the very best kind of dish to steam this pudding in. Serve hot, with sour or wine sauce. This pudding is good the second day after it is made, and seems even lighter after the second steaming than after the first.

THE Central Pacific Railroad Company has contracted with Messrs. Cramp, of Philadelphia, for the construction of a new iron steamship, for use on the Pacific coast between Tacoma and San Francisco.

NEGOTIATIONS are still in progress between the Central and Union Pacific Railroads with reference to a reduction of running time between this city and Council Bluffs. It is expected that the new time table will go into effect about July 1st. The reduction is expected to be fourteen hours.

OUR CITY LODGES.

Fidelity, No. 136.

Our visit to Fidelity, on the 13th instant, reminded us of old times. There were a goodly number present, and the J. W. degree was conferred on two candidates, and the M. W. degree on the same number. The scholarly and correct manner in which the ritualistic and secret work was given made our ceremonies and work appear to be an instructive and pleasant exercise. After a very pleasant recess Deputy McKay made some practical remarks tending to promote and make a success of our coming picnic, on Thursday, June 21st. A committee of six were appointed to assist in making this worthy enterprise a success. After the Lodge had adjourned a short time was spent in impromptu singing, with Prof. Reynolds, the new Master Workman, as organist. Fidelity, No. 136 has nearly 400 members, and a peculiar feature of this Lodge is a willingness and practice of paying for delinquents, who, as a rule, become so from carelessness. It is always a pleasure to visit this Lodge of Workmen and representative business men of our city.

Golden Gate, No. 8.

This Lodge has been steadily increasing its membership until they now number 157 members and there are promising prospects for a still further increase. The officers of this Lodge deserve much credit for the commendable way in which they perform their duty, and have shown the least possible outstanding debt at the end of each term. It is possible that the Lodge will hereafter make the installation of officers public, as the feeling seems to tend that way. A novel feature which the Master Workman of this Lodge has introduced, is the appointment of a critic during installations or meetings, when important business is to be transacted. This critic is unknown to all others with the exception of the Grand Master, and it is his duty to carefully observe the way in which each officer transacts his business and comment thereon at the conclusion of the business.

Hercules, No. 53.

The "Giant Lodge," so-called, is marching on triumphantly, standing as it does a sentinel on the Western shore, the nearest Lodge to the Golden Gate. There are now over 200 members on the roll and five applications in the hands of the Recorder. The membership is recruited principally from our business men, who take a lively interest in the welfare of their Lodge, consequently there is always a good attendance, and something devised to make their Lodge meetings attractive. We called on them lately and found them in force. After the degrees were conferred on several candidates a literary impromptu was rendered for the occasion. There was the best of feeling prevailing, and social and fraternal greetings were the order of the evening. Bro. Leitch, M. W., has proved himself one of the best officers that have had the honor to preside over this worthy Lodge of Workmen.

Harmony, No. 9.

As indicated in a late issue, this old pioneer will close the present term under most favorable auspices. At their last meeting they conferred the J. W. degree on four candidates. The M. W., Bro. Brownrigg, and his associate officers were very correct in the work, and showed tact and ability in dispatching the business of the Lodge.

Magnolia, No. 41.

Last Monday evening there was a good attendance of the members of this Lodge; several applications were received, and the M. W. degree conferred. It was decided to give a public installation of officers July 2d, and an excellent programme is in preparation for the occasion. The nomination of officers will be made next Monday evening, when a large attendance may be expected. At the last meeting a proposition was submitted to initiate forty new members at once, men who stand well in the community. It is not surprising that such a batch of applications should be received by this Lodge, for it claims to have more coin in the bank than any Lodge in the State, and its sick benefits give it an additional charm. Magnolia is now the eighth Lodge in the Jurisdiction in point of numbers, and is determined to rank second before the close of the term. An effort is being made to induce each brother to bring in a new member. Such enthusiasm for the welfare of the Order is worthy of great commendation.

Olympic, No. 127.

Sociality and Fraternity are leading features in our Order. It is a fact patent to everyone who is familiar with our history, that any Lodge celebration, anniversary, picnic, or social gathering, given under the auspices of a Lodge or District, in nine cases out of ten is an unequalled success. Recently the members of Olympic, No. 127, held a picnic at Saucelito, at Wild Wood Glen Park. The members with their families and invited friends to the number of about 200 had a most enjoyable day. A list of prizes that were spiritedly contested for by the ladies, dancing, feasting, conviviality, jokes, clever tricks played upon each other made the happy hours fly swiftly, and the leading spirits, among which were Bros. Dixon, P. M. W.; Rosbach, P. M. W.; Holland, P. M. W.; Jones and several others were assiduous and pains taking in making everyone happy. Not an accident or unhappy incident marred the pleasurable day, and the picnic of Olympic, No. 127, was voted a success by those who were so fortunate to be of the party.

Sts. John No. 73.

The brethren of Sts. John have had a prosperous term, and a small increase in membership. Her officers for this term have proved themselves worthy of their honored position, and can be found at their respective positions on each meeting night. Brother Smythe, Financier, is the right man in his place, and no Lodge has a better one.

Triumph, No. 180.

This Lodge met Tuesday evening, with an unusually good attendance. Three applications for membership were received and two members initiated. This Lodge can now boast of nearly 200 members and their flourishing condition, having recently paid an assessment into the general fund.

Unity, No. 27.

The quarterly meeting of this prosperous Lodge was held on Tuesday evening, June 12th. There was a large attendance of its own members, including a number of visitors. On these meeting nights only the routine business is attended to, and the rest of the evening is given over to sociality and literary effusions. Bro. Irving, of Mendocino Lodge, sang a sentimental song, followed by Bro. Russell, of Yerba Buena, in a solo and encore. Bro. T. H. Williams, of Unity, made an eloquent speech, that was listened to with wrapt attention. Deputy Danforth then addressed his hearers in extended remarks, that were of a useful and instructive character, in the course of which he urged a hearty support to the Relief Committee, as also a more general attendance to the Fraternal Institute. Bro. Nelson, P. M. W., and others made acceptable and appropriate speeches. This thrifty Lodge commenced their month's work by initiating eight candidates on their second meeting night. We do not know of a Lodge in this Jurisdiction that is more prosperous than old Unity.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

California, No. 1.

June 5th, this pioneer Lodge met at their Lodge-room, Masonic Hall, corner of Willow and Seventh streets. The attendance was fair, but owing to the extra heat many were absent, and it is presumed were at home trying to keep cool. On such a night as Tuesday last it is necessary to state that spirited debates or long addresses were not indulged. The thermometer stood at 102. The business of the evening was rapidly disposed of. The Lodge voted to have a public installation of officers, after which an entertainment and dance. The time, however, has not yet been decided upon. No. 1 is doing good work; her entertainments are always first-class and conducted for the entertainment and enjoyment of all.

Grand Picnic at Decoto.

The fourth annual picnic of the A. O. U. W., was consummated at Dry Creek, Saturday, June 9, 1883, under the auspices of Hayward Lodge, No. 18; Mission Lodge, No. 50; Reliance Lodge, No. 93; Newark Lodge, No. 169; Eden Lodge, No. 204. This was the picnic of the season. Bro. W. T. Ralph, P. M. W., the proprietor, has put in all modern improvements so that now, with an hour's ride, you are planted in this heaven of luxury and beauty. The grounds cover over 25 acres. A day spent at this place under the care of Bro. Ralph, will unravel and drive away more dull care than any place in the State. The safety, comfort and elegance of the C. P. R. cars, and the protection to the families in this health resort has been established. Societies and Lodges can make arrangements to have special cars. The music was furnished by Schuppert's Band, of San Francisco. Target shooting and games were contested, for which liberal coin prizes were given. The following were the Floor Committee—Chris. Herrmann, Haywards; Geo. Stanley, Mission San Jose; E. A. Anderson, Alvarado; T. Bedard, Newark; E. O. Webb, San Lorenzo;

S. W. Johnson, San Lorenzo; J. R. Palmer, Pleasanton; John Aylward, Livermore. Committee on Games—Wm. Wills. Floor Managers—E. A. Anderson, Geo. Stanley, Wm. Dale, E. Hathaway, R. F. Ingraham. Officers of the Day—J. A. Trefry, S. S. Cunningham, David S. Hibbard. Manager—W. T. Ralph.

FRESNO COUNTY.

Yosemite, No. 171.

The Fresno Republican says: "The entertainment given by Yosemite Lodge of United Workmen, on Tuesday evening, May 29th, was quite well attended, and with the exception of a slight deficit in the financial returns, was an entire success. W. H. Barnes, Past Grand Master Workman, never fails to interest and please an audience, and his address on this occasion was a very happy effort. At the conclusion of the address a short but excellent literary and musical program was presented, after which refreshments were served and the floor was cleared for dancing, a large part of the audience participating until quite a late hour. The low price of admission and large expense that was incurred in presenting the entertainment left a considerable balance on the wrong side of the society's ledger."

NAPA COUNTY.

Fortuna, No. 13.

On the 31st of May an entertainment under the auspices of this Lodge was given at Odd Fellows' Hall, Napa. It was given exclusively for the benefit of the members and their families, who assembled in sufficient numbers to fill the hall. An address of welcome was delivered by the Master Workman, George R. Walden, who discharged the pleasant duty in a manner creditable to the Lodge and to himself. Little Lizzie Stevens then gave a recitation, "The Tragedy," in a pleasing manner, which was followed by a short address, directed principally to members of the Order, regarding their duties as good Workmen, by Past Master J. Walter Ward, Jr., of San Francisco. Mrs. J. H. Boke and Robert Peddie favored the audience with an instrumental duet, (piano and violin), overture, "Il Tancredi," which was followed by H. C. Gessford in a select reading, "Deathbed of Benedict Arnold." Lizzie Stevens then gave another recitation entitled "Auction Extraordinary," a selection that provoked considerable amusement. The literary exercises concluded with a vocal solo, "Once Again," exquisitely rendered by Mrs. J. A. Mellor. Dancing was then declared in order, and was commenced to excellent music furnished by Messrs. Peddie (violin), Dolores Juarez (piano), and Wm. Morgernstern (cornet). During the evening a fine collation was served, and at a seasonable hour and after a most enjoyable time the company retired.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY

San Fernando, No. 214.

We are pleased to receive the following letter from the "land where the citron blooms."

EDITOR WATCHMAN: Our Lodge, 214, is in a flourishing condition for so small a town. We meet in Maclay Hall for the present, but expect soon to build a Lodge-room. We have a membership of thirty-one, and a most noticeable fact is that when an assessment comes and is read in the Lodge, and a recess is taken that when the Financier makes his report, not a single delinquent is found, and thus it has been ever since the formation of the Lodge. Although some of the members have removed to Benson, A. T., and to Golconda, Nevada, yet all the assessments are promptly paid. We have an exceptionally good lot of officers; prompt in the discharge of their duties and faithful in attendance. Jacob Harp, M. W., is always on hand, and has displayed an amount of executive ability that his most earnest friends did not think he possessed. Judge H. W. Griswold, our Financier, is the right man in the right place. In my judgment the most important office in the Lodge is the Recorder; upon him devolves the most arduous labor, and to him or his well-kept record we often have to appeal to decide questions. We were most happy in selecting our able and valuable Recorder, Judge E. Hammond, who was at one time a journalist of prominence at Carson, Nev. He is to the "manor born" a Recorder. Col. John H. Barclay is Foreman, and to his efforts more than any other one brother is the success of the Lodge due. To A. Calvin Hall is due great praise—ever present and always willing to fill any office in the Lodge, and able to do the same. Ours is a farming community, and it is wonderful that when Saturday night comes so many of the hard working boys appear at Lodge. Last night, June 2d, I counted twenty-four present out of a possible thirty-one, and all hard working producers. The Bros. Truman and Henry Gower came seven miles, Archie G. Patten, twelve miles, and many others two to six miles. The Lodge at Newhall, No. 218, Col. C. A. Meutry, M. W., John Saunders, Recorder, is also in a flourishing condition, and we expect soon to pay them a fraternal visit. Our worthy representative to the last Grand Lodge, Colonel H. C. Hubbard, has, after an extended trip to Santa Cruz, his old home, returned, and is more than ever an enthusiast in increasing the membership of the A. O. U. W. by recruits from desirable material. Our crop prospects never were better, and as our members are nearly all farmers, we expect to have a harvest feast in the fall, to which it is our intention, if possible, to have the G. M. W. and you, Mr. Editor, if possible, to attend. Our Entertainment Committee gives us something good every night we meet, and once a month a grand good time.

Yours,

VETO.

Fraternal Visit.

The Los Angeles Times of June 7th, says: "Quite a delegation of members of the A. O. U. W. Lodges in this city went out to Pomona on the 4th instant to witness the installation of officers of the new Lodge at that town by District Deputy Al. Cobler. The delegates were received handsomely by their brethren, who endeavored in every way to make their stay pleasant. They were quartered at the Des Moines Hotel, and in the evening tendered a serenade and banquet. For novelty's sake, when the time came to return, they signaled the immigrant train and the whole party had a merry time coming in, it being one of the pleasantest trips made this season. The following is a list of the newly-installed officers: Past Master Workman, W. D. Morton; Master Workman, W. Henderson; Foreman, V. Debrunner; Overseer, E. J. Vawter; Receiver, J. R. Garthside; Recorder, R. H. Loucks; Financier, J. Harris.

DEGREE OF HONOR.

Silver Spray, No. 4.

Silver Spray, No. 4, D. of H., will have a public installation of their officers for the coming term.

Another New Lodge.

On the evening of the 4th inst., another new Lodge of the Order was instituted, by Bro. A. V. Cobler, D. D. G. M. W., at Pomona, Los Angeles county.

The D. D. was accompanied and assisted by quite a number of the Order from Los Angeles, as well as from some surrounding points. The new Lodge is named after its location, "Pomona," and it starts out in first-class shape. Some 60 have made application for membership, and it is fully expected that when its charter is closed there will be to it at least 75 names.

The officers elected and installed on the 4th inst., are as follows: W. D. Morton, P. M. W.; Wm. J. Henderson, M. W.; V. Debrunner, Foreman; E. J. Vawter, Overseer; J. R. Garthside, Recorder; J. Harris, Financier; R. N. Loucks, Receiver; N. B. Oaks, Guide; J. J. Henry, I. W.; W. J. Kessler, O. W.; E. J. Vawter, C. W. Brown, and R. A. Cunningham, Trustees; C. W. Brown, Med. Ex.

Among the incidents of the occasion we might mention that the visitors from Los Angeles, etc., were met at the depot in Pomona, and were thence escorted by members of the new Lodge and were quartered pleasantly at the Des Moines Hotel.

The work of instituting the new Lodge was over by 1 o'clock A. M., after which all adjourned to the hotel, where a handsome and toothsome banquet was awaiting them. Full justice was done to the fare by all.

During the instituting of the Lodge, the "new infant" was serenaded by the Pomona Brass Band.

The banquet terminated a little before 3 o'clock A. M., the delegation concluded not to wait for the regular 8 A. M. train, to Los Angeles, but repaired to the depot, where, with a Japanese lantern, they succeeded in stopping a through train, which they boarded, reaching home by daybreak in the morning.

So ended one of the most pleasant Lodge affairs yet had in southern California.

The visitors express great pleasure at the way they were received by the Pomona brethren, and all unite in commending the new D. D., Bro. Cobler, for the earnest way he has started in to look after the interests of the Order in his district.

The A. O. U. W. is growing rapidly throughout New England, especially in the southern part. The New England Jurisdiction now numbers 4,280 members. Assessments have been infrequent since January.

Fraternal Appeal from the Grand Master.

UKIAH CITY, Mendocino Co., Cal.,
June 5, 1883.

To all Subordinate Lodges in the State of California, A. O. U. W., Fraternal Greeting:—I have the honor to submit to your most charitable consideration the following report, etc., found on page 120 of the Journal of 1883:

The Committee on Appeals and Grievances presented the following report:

DOCUMENT NO. 50.

To the Grand Master Workman, Officers and Members of the Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., of California: In the matter of the memorial of Carrie Lee Lucky, surviving wife of W. S. Lucky, late of Valley Lodge, No. 30, your Committee on Appeals and Grievances beg leave to report as follows:

W. S. Lucky became a member of Valley Lodge, No. 30, in June, 1879, and continued in good standing in the Lodge until November 2, 1881, at which time he was suspended for non-payment of dues. He owed exactly six months' dues at the date of his suspension. Subsequently, under a decision of the Grand Master Workman, the Lodge voted to rescind the act of suspension, and re-instate the brother upon payment of all arrearages of dues and assessments; this action of the Lodge was had January 18, 1882. The brother, accordingly, paid all arrearages of dues and assessments, and all accruing dues and assessments up to the time of the meeting of the Grand Lodge in April, 1882.

The Grand Lodge of April, 1882, upon appeal from the action of the Lodge, overruled the decision of the Grand Master Workman, and reversed the action of the Lodge in re-instating the brother on the ground that the attempted re-instatement was irregular and illegal. The effect of the judgment of the Grand Lodge was to place the brother in suspension from November, 1881.

It further appears to your committee from the memorial of Mrs. Lucky, and from her statements, corroborated in the main, by members in Valley Lodge, that at the time of his suspension the brother was ill of a disease which finally caused his death in January, 1883; that immediately prior to his suspension, although not at that precise time, he was on the sick list of the Lodge, and receiving the usual visits from the officers of the Lodge. That on the night of his suspension he had a severe attack of illness, which prevented his appearance at the Lodge. It further appears from Mrs. Lucky's statement, which is uncontradicted, that Brother Lucky and his wife were assured, by a prominent officer of the Lodge, that the dues and assessments would be looked after, and they need give themselves no uneasiness about the matter. That at that time the brother was in straightened circumstances, being dependent upon his daily labor for the support of himself and family, and the payment of the dues and assessments were burden some to him, especially as his illness incapacitated him for labor during a large portion of the time; that at the time of his suspension, and ever after, until his death, the brother was afflicted with Bright's disease of the kidneys, and must, by reason thereof, necessarily have been rejected by the Medical Examiner, upon application for re-instatement, under the law. That Brother Lucky died in January, 1883, leaving him surviving a widow and a young son, who are now in needy circumstances.

Upon this state of facts, Mrs. Lucky asks for some consideration at the hands of this Grand Lodge.

It is not contended that Mrs. Lucky has any legal claim upon this body, or upon the Order, at any rate we so understood her representative before the committee, and your committee are of opinion that, as a matter of law, no such claim exists in this case.

The application addresses itself to the equitable, charitable and fraternal spirit of the Order, and in the judgment of your committee, is a strong appeal for the exercise of those virtues on the part of this body, and the members of the Order generally.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Grand Master Workman, be and he is hereby directed to cause to be issued under the seal of the Grand Lodge, a circular addressed to all Subordinate Lodges in this Jurisdiction, embodying a statement of the facts as found in the report of the Committee on Appeals and Grievances, in relation to the case of our late Brother W. S. Lucky, and inviting said Lodges to contribute in the amount of ten cents per member, to a fund for the benefit of the surviving wife and child of said Lucky. Such contribution to be forwarded to the Grand Recorder, and by him paid over to said widow.

Respectfully submitted in C. H. and P.,
J. G. SEVERANCE,
A. L. HATHAWAY,
CHAS. E. WILSON,
Committee on Appeals and Grievances.

On motion, the report of the committee was adopted.

This is not a legal claim, but it is one which appeals most earnestly to the great fraternal heart of every true Workman in this State. It appeals to our regard for our obligations to obey the golden rule. It appeals to our manly love for our wives and babs. It appeals to our ambition to see the Order stand like adamant in spout of the law, and yet tender as the Samaritan to distress, and ready to listen to the silvery voice of mercy pleading like angels, trumpet-tongued, for misfortune and worthy poverty.

The amount and method of your donation is purely voluntary—give as mercy and the case requires. Send your contribution to the Grand Recorder, who will receipt you therefor. I leave the matter in your hands, feeling that California Workmanship will respond in a way worthy of its past generosity and loyalty to the principles of Charity and Protection.

Fraternally in C. H. and P.,
J. T. ROGERS, G. M. W.

Circular of the Grand Master Workman.

UKIAH CITY, Mendocino Co., Cal.,
May 29, 1883.

To the Subordinate Lodges in the Jurisdiction of California, A. O. U. W.—FRATERNAL GREETING:—In obedience to the resolution of the Grand Lodge I have examined the installation ceremony with reference to its public use, and after full consideration I am satisfied that there can be no valid objection to the present ceremony, and that there is no impropriety in using it as it now stands, except that the Grand Guide, in approaching the altar, will not give any sign, but simply make his announcement. Hence, to save cost of printing and distribution, and great extra work by installing officers, I direct that the present installation ceremony be also used for public occasions.

Furthermore, for the purpose of uniformity and convenience, I direct that all Lodge communications and individual inquiries be first addressed officially to the District Deputy in charge of the district, and that a plain statement of the facts, under the seal of the Lodge, be forwarded to him, with a request that he decide the question officially. When he shall have done so, if the Lodge is dissatisfied, then the District Deputy, upon notice thereof, will forward to the Grand Master the record, with his action thereon. By this method each Lodge will have the means of information close at hand, and at the same time dignify the District Deputyship into one of greater responsibility.

And it is further directed, that each District Deputy will give his personal attention to all such communications and inquiries, and thus keep all such matters under his own personal supervision. As directed by law, the District Deputy will assume a paternal care of each Lodge under his control, and enforce the law with a strength in which fraternity is the ruling feature.

I am fully convinced that our Order has a brilliant destiny, and that Love will be the corner-stone of her greatness. Let none lag, delay, wait, or falter in faith. Let Charity and Protection be engraven as words of fire on your hearts, let Hope paint the future, and conscience approve the effort, and humanity will yet enshrine the name of "Workman."

Fraternally in C. H. and P.,
J. T. ROGERS, G. M. W.

Jurisdiction of Ohio.

The Grand Recorder, Alfred T. Roeber, in his report to the Grand Lodge which recently met at Columbus, makes the following statement: The prosperity experienced in the previous term has continued with us during the year just closed, our membership having increased in about the same ratio; and while the expectations which we entertained at the last session have not been fully realized, for reasons upon which to enlarge is not my province, we can yet congratulate ourselves upon our present condition.

Through the instrumentality of an efficient system of medical supervision, first inaugurated by this Grand Lodge and since adopted by the Supreme Lodge, and by them made compulsory upon all Jurisdictions, the physical character of new members continues to improve, which fact was admitted and complimented upon by the Supreme Lodge at its recent session. While too much importance cannot be attached to this guarantee of our perpetuity as an Order, a vast responsibility rests upon the Lodge Investigating Committees, in this that they perform their duties, i. e., scrutinize closely into the physical, moral and social standing of applicants, conscientiously and to the best of their ability. With the efficient aid of both these agents our portals are indeed well guarded.

During the year the membership has increased net 258 M. W. against 198 in the preceding year; the number in good standing on January 31, 1883, being 3,311, distributed in 71 Lodges, against 3,053 M. W. in 69 Lodges at my last report; making an average of 46.63 to a Lodge against 44.25 at the previous report. The following is the list of changes in our roll of Lodges: Twenty-four assessments for the beneficiary fund have been called in this Jurisdiction. In addition to these, one call for the relief fund of 50 cents was made upon the entire Order. All of these were met cheerfully and promptly by our membership, and with few exceptions remittances were also made promptly to this office.

Other Jurisdictions.

The membership in Oregon is in round numbers 3,500, and there has been twenty-nine deaths so far this year.

Corona Lodge, A. O. U. W., reinstated by order of Court, has paid $1,623 for fifteen back assessments. What a paltry set of skin-flints these fellows are. The other Lodges should subscribe to a memorial of their meanness and present it to them.—World.

The Ohio A. O. U. W. Journal will hereafter be published at Cleveland, Ohio, under the management of Bro. W. A. Hughes. Bro. J. M. Dumenil, P. G. M. W., the former publisher, has emigrated to Iuka, Kansas. He has our wishes that health and prosperity will attend him in his new home.

Twenty-seven new A. O. U. W. Lodges were organized in Texas last year, and their membership is nearly or quite 2,000.

Death a Swindle

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage recently said in the pulpit:

When men think of their death they are apt to think of it only in connection with their spiritual welfare, and not of the devastation in the household which will come because of their emigration from it. It is meanly selfish for you to be so absorbed in the heaven to which you are going that you forget what is to become of your wife and children after you are dead. You can go out of this world not leaving a dollar, and yet die happily if you could not provide for them. You can trust them in the hands of the God who owns all the harvests and the herds and the flocks; but if you could pay the assessments on a benefit certificate and neglected them, it is a mean thing for you to go up to heaven while they go into the poor-house. You, at death, move into a mansion, river front, and they move into two rooms on the fourth story of a tenement house on a back street. When they are out at the elbows and the knees, the thought of your splendid robe in heaven will not keep them warm. The minister may preach a splendid sermon over your remains, and the quartet may sing like four angels alighted in the organ-loft, but your death will be a swindle. You had the means to provide for the comfort of your household when you left it, and you wickedly neglected so to do.

Well Done, Etc.

Bro. Howard Carr, Tacoma, W. T., an active member of the G. A. R., K. of P., and A. L. of H., writing to the FRATERNAL RECORD, says: "I believe that any one taking the RECORD for one year will agree with me in rendering a verdict of 'Well done, etc.'"

POISONOUS COLORS IN FOOD.—A new law has come into force in Germany, prohibiting the use of poisonous substances to color any food designed for consumption, or for the wrappers enclosing any article of food. The law extends, also, to the employment of any poisonous material in toys used for playthings for children, and in paper used for wall decoration, or dress material. Such a law is needed in some other countries besides Germany.

CAST IRON CHILLED TOOLS.—At a recent meeting of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, in England, Mr. Fielding exhibited some cast iron chilled tools, and said that with chilled tools—the cost of which he showed to be merely nominal—he was able to turn cast and wrought iron and gun metal at from 50 to 100 per cent higher speed than with tools made from steel. He expressed surprise that such tools had not come into more general use.

Business Notes.

BRO. PHILLIP PECK, Past Master Workman, and for many years one of the Finance Committee of the Grand Lodge, is General Manager of The Western Association Perfumers and Chemists. Under his supervision the finest toilet articles and perfumery will be made, and under their label any goods sold from this house will be genuine. While they seek to supply only the trade, a number of our fastidious families from Nob Hill buy their toilet articles, such as perfumery and fine soap, by the dozen, in order to get the fine goods manufactured by this association. If our sisters only knew what kind of fine goods were made and kept at No. 26 Second street, our genial brother could hold a levee daily.

PACIFIC GROVE RETREAT RESTAURANT.—The new restaurant at the Seaside Resort is now equipped and ready for their guests. The proprietor, Mr. S. S. Short, is a well known restaurateur and caterer, and visitors can have the best of food at a very moderate cost. It seems to be the policy and conception of the managers of this haven of rest to provide accommodations at a lower cost, so that families could avoid the vexations and care of house-keeping. In selecting, Mr. Short and his estimable wife to have charge of this department seems quite fortunate, as they keep a first-class restaurant, or furnish board by the week at a small cost.

THE Electric Hair Tonic of Mrs. M. A. Reaves was a discovery by accident. It is a purely vegetable compound, and can be taken internally without injury to the system. From the testimonials of a large number of the well known and leading citizens of this city and State who have used it, it is proven to be a remedial agent that will restore the hair in baldness and prevent falling off of the hair. Contracts are made in writing. No cure no pay. Laboratory and office, 120 Golden Gate avenue.

OFTENTIMES the dress proclaims the man. A stylish cut and perfect fit made from the best material can be found at the large tailoring establishments of Brother Joe Poheim, 724 Market and 203 Montgomery streets. He employs the most skilled workmen and has in large stock a fine selection of the best domestic and imported fabrics. Samples with prices and rules for self-measurement sent to any address, and satisfaction guaranteed in all cases.

BRO. WM. GUSSEFELD, the leading merchant tailor of San Jose, has had so large an increase in patronage that he has enlarged his parlors and taken a partner, Mr. Miotke. Their new importation consists of an extensive line and choice selection of the best domestic and imported suitings, which will be made into fashionable suits for their patrons, that in design, fit, and cost, cannot be beat in this State.

WE call attention to the California Bed Comforter factory of Bro. F. F. Du Rose, 29 Second street. There are no shoddy goods used in this factory and no Chinese employed. With an experience of 15 years in business in this city and nothing but a superior quality of cotton batting used in his goods, he is prepared to fill orders at lowest rates.

BRO. WM. STATHAM, piano manufacturer, 765 Mission street, received the gold medal at the Mechanics' Fair of 1882, for the best pianos. The demand for Statham's upright pianos has been so great that it will take many months yet to fill orders already booked. Bro. Statham intends to enlarge this factory to meet the demand soon.

PARADISE FLOUR MILLS.—Brother J. H. Congdon, 34 California street, about two years ago introduced the Paradise Mills Flour, located at Modesto, in our market, since which its popularity is such that 500 barrels are sold each week. It is especially manufactured for family use and there is a growing demand for it.

THE new Workmen diploma, a notice of which appeared in our last issue is meeting with much favor. The publisher, Bro. C. H. M. Curry, P. M. W., is receiving orders far beyond his expectation. It is pronounced one of the finest works of art, that has yet been issued in this State.

BROTHER John Horner, 1300 Folsom, corner of Ninth, manufactures to order all kinds of men's boots and gaiters, as well as ladies', Misses' and children's shoes, in the best manner and of the finest quality. His prices are very moderate, both for repairing and manufactured work.

BRO. G. BAUM, for a number of years one of our leading merchants, has removed to Los Angeles, and will open a general variety store, approaching to a Bazaar, and will carry in large stock a full assortment of fancy articles, bric a brac, and ornamental household goods.

BRO. W. SORESENSEN, N. E. corner McAllister and Laguna streets, carries a large stock in hay, grain, wood, coke, and coal. Anyone desiring anything in this line will find that our genial brother sells at the lowest market rates, and delivers goods as represented.

BRO. H. C. DODGE'S City Transfer and Delivery Co., No. 3 Post street, is deserving of patronage. His large experience and responsibility, together with a deduction of 25 per cent in charges, is giving him the leading position as a common carrier in this line.

BRO. HODGE'S Cloak and Suit Rooms No. 10, Fifth street, is the place for the ladies to get a ready-made suit, or to order in the latest style and at lowest rates.

Woman as an Inventor.*

No assertion in reference to woman is more common than that she possesses no inventive or mechanical genius, even the United States census failing to enumerate her among the inventors of the country. But, while such statements are carelessly or ignorantly made, tradition, history, and experience alike prove her possession of these faculties in the highest degree. Although woman's scientific education has been grossly neglected, yet some of the most important inventions of the world are due to her. Hon. Samuel Fisher, while Commissioner of Patents, said: "Any sketch of American inventions would be imperfect which failed to do justice to the part taken by woman." The New York Times, in an editorial upon woman's inventive genius, says: "The feminine mind, is as a rule, quicker than the masculine mind; takes hints and sees defects which would escape the average man's attention. Women frequently carry the germs of patents in their head, and cause some rude machine to be constructed which serves their purpose. If women would fix their minds on inventions, it is entirely probable that they would distinguish themselves in this line far more than they have done hitherto." The Scientific American testifies of the inventions of women for which they solicit patents, that "in their practical character and in their adaptation of means to effect a definite purpose, they fully equal the same number of inventions made by men."

The straw industry of the United States owes its origin to Miss Betsy Metcalf, who, in 1798, made the first straw bonnet ever manufactured machine altogether; but Mrs. Greene, whose faith in ultimate success never wavered, would not consent; she suggested the substitution of wire. Within ten days after the first conception of Mrs. Greene's ideas, a small model was completed, so perfect in its construction that all succeeding gins have been based upon it.

This invention produced an extraordinary increase in the culture of cotton. Instead of the single pound cleaned by hand 300 pounds were now daily separated from the lint at the same cost. Not only did the languishing industries of the South receive a sudden and stable impetus, but every part of the world felt the influence of this woman's idea. It may be asked why Mrs. Greene, then a widow, did not take out the patent in her own name; but to have done so would have exposed her to the ridicule and contumely of her friends and a loss of position in society, which frowned upon any attempt at outside industry for woman. Through her second husband, Mr. Miller, she afterward assumed a subordinate interest in it.

A third great American invention, the mower and reaper, owes its early perfection to Mrs. Ann Harned Manning, of Plainfield, New Jersey, who, in 1817-18, perfected a system for the combined action of teeth and cutters, patented by her husband, William Henry Manning, as "a device for the combined action of teeth and cutters, whether in a transversed or revolving direction." Mrs. Manning also invented a clover cleaner, which proved very lucrative to her husband, who took out the patent. Nor was she the only woman whose thought had been turned toward agricultural machines. The name of Elizabeth Smith, also of New Jersey, appears in 1861 among the list of

While, as has been shown, many of the world's most important inventions are due to woman, the proportion of feminine inventors is much less than of masculine, which arises from the fact that women do not possess the same amount of freedom as man. Restricted in education, industrial opportunities, and political power, this is one of the many instances where her degradation reacts injuriously upon the race. The majority of inventions are the result of much consideration and self-reliant thought. Inventors must not only possess full freedom to exercise their powers, but there must also be a certain welcome and protection to their ideas. Deprived, as a woman is, of political power, she has to face contempt of her sex, open and covert scorn of womanhood, depreciatory allusions to her intellectual powers—all tending to hamper the expression of her inventive genius.

Nor is woman by law recognized as possessing full right to the use and control of her own powers. In not a single State of the union is a married woman held to possess a right to her earnings within the family; and in not one half of them has she a right to their control in business entered upon outside of the household. Should such a woman be successful in obtaining a patent, what then? Would she be free to do as she pleased with it? Not at all. She would hold no right, title or power over this work of her own brain. She would possess no legal right to contract, or to license any one to use her invention. Neither, should her right be infringed, could she sue the offender. Her husband could take out the patent in his own name, sell her invention for his own sole benefit, give it away if he so chose, or refrain from using it, and for all this she would have no remedy.

A Farmer's World Programme.

World Federation.

"God sends country lawyers, an' other wise fellers, To start the world's team when it gets in a slough; For John P. Robinson, he Sez the world'll go right, ef he hollers out Gee!"

Ascribe not unto me, I pray you, the audacity of the all-sapient John P., if I again urge the propriety of making world federation a live issue. We, who have beheld the girdling of the earth with the girdle of Puck, may well anticipate such corresponding political progress as shall realize that dearest vision of poets and seers—from Isaiah to Emerson, from David to Burns.

—“Come it will for a’ that That’s to man the world o’er Shall brothers be, and a’ that”

Nasmyth, out-hammerer of Vulcan and Thor, defined engineering as “common sense applied to the use of materials.” Politics ought to be definable as “common sense applied to the government of mankind.” Bombast, chicane, and duplicity have figured too largely and too long as statecraft and diplomacy. Politics have been the science of keeping mankind at variance in the supposed interest of some few dozen crowned heads. The pen of enlightenment has punctured all such wind-baggery, and the time of collapse is come. Apply common sense to politics and world federation becomes the inevitable. There is nothing of chimera in the conception; no infringement of the rights of property. A New World agony has decided that man has no property in his fellow-man.

CASCADES IN ETIWANDA CANYON, SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY, CAL.

in this country. The Rhode Island Society for the Encouragement of Domestic Industry possesses a fac-simile of Miss Metcalf's bonnet. It was woven of seven straws. Within twelve years thereafter, the State of Massachusetts alone produced half a million of dollars' worth of straw goods. That State now produces 6,000,000 hats and bonnets annually; a great deal of straw is also manufactured in other States.

The most remarkable invention of the age, in industrial, social and political influence—the cotton gin—owes its origin to a woman, Catharine Littlefield Greene, widow of General Greene, of Revolutionary memory, with whom the idea originated. The cotton gin heads the list of sixteen remarkable American inventions that have been adopted by the world.

After the war General Greene settled in Georgia, where he soon died. The great difficulty of separating the seed from the cotton was at that time the staple subject of conversation among planters. To separate a pound of black seed from the lint was a day's task for a negro. The white variety, much more valuable, from its great tenacity, was scarcely at all cultivated. It was the regular custom of the planter's family to unite in this work every evening, and a fortune was prophesied for the person who should construct a machine capable of doing the work. After a conversation of this character between some guests at her house, Mrs. Greene conceived the idea of such a machine, and intrusted its construction to the hands of Eli Whitney, then boarding with her, who possessed the usual New England facility in the use of tools. The wooden teeth at first tried not doing their work well Mr. Whitney wished to abandon the patentees upon an improvement to the mower and reaper, whereby the knives could be adjusted while the machine was in motion.

The smallest inventions sometimes prove the most lucrative. A San Francisco lady, inventor of a baby carriage, received $14,000 for her patent. The paper mill, the invention of a Chicago lady, yields a large income. The gimlet-pointed screw, the idea of a little girl, has realized millions of dollars to its patentee.

Among recent inventions of importance by women, are a spinning machine; a rotary loom; a device for correct pen-holding, invaluable in schools; a wool feeder and weigher, one of the most delicate machines ever invented, and of incalculable benefit to every woolen manufacturer; a portable reservoir for use in case of fires; several inventions bearing upon railroad travel; a rapid change box, a marvel of simplicity and convenience, invaluable at railway stations and ferries, the invention of a girl of sixteen; machine for trimming pamphlets; deep-sea telescope; method of deadening sound on elevated railways; and numerous improvements in sewing machines.

But among woman inventors the name of the celebrated sculptor, Harriet Hosmer, must not be passed by. Miss Hosmer has succeeded in producing marble from limestone, closely simulating the finest antique varieties. This process had long been sought by the Italian Government. But the most valuable invention is that of the permanent magnet as a motive power. Scientific men and practical machinists deem this one of the most important inventions of the century, and its influence upon the world as likely to be far-reaching and extraordinary. No such power was known to inhere in the permanent magnet until Miss Hosmer's discovery, to which she gave fifteen years of study and experiment.

It is scarcely thirty years since the first State protected a married woman in the use of her own brain property. Under these conditions, legally incapable of holding property, and trained, as she has been, to seclusion, dependence and abeyance of thought, that woman has not been an inventor to an equal extent with man is not so much a subject of surprise as that she should have invented at all.

While every invention, however small, develops new industries, provides work for a multitude of people, increases commercial activity adds to the revenues of the world, and renders life more desirable, great inventions broaden the boundaries of human thought, bring about social, religious and political changes, hurrying mankind on to a new civilization. Lackey forcibly shows the loss to the world from the celibacy and martyrdom of the best human element in the past. No less is the darkness of the world kept more dense, and its civilization retarded, by all forms of thought, customs of society, or systems of law which prevent the full development and exercise of woman's inventive powers.

We present on this page a very fine view of the Cascades in Etiwanda canyon. It represents a portion of the scenery on the headwaters of one of the streams in the Cucamonga mountains, that furnish water for the Etiwanda settlement. This canyon was formerly known as Day canyon, but more recently it is called Etiwanda canyon, after the settlement planted by the Chaffee brothers and which has become of prominence in southern California during the past year.

Two or three dozen potentates, still claiming some figment of right over their fellows, must exemplify in action the doctrine of "noblesse oblige." Universal peace demands their abdication. Mankind follows French fashions. Let mankind adopt the plebiscite and issue its fiat. Local autonomy can be as complete as now. The "parliament of man" can vary its meeting-place. No more sectional jealousy need be aroused between American and Englishman than exists now between a Californian and Virginian. The Prince of Peace has long professedly occupied the hearts and hopes of men. Let press and pulpit make good the profession. Proclaim and preach the possibility of present peace and good-will, by adopting the sole practicable means—present righteousness. The world is tired of a long-deferred sword-into-plowshare period, after a general purgatorial or judgment day whitewashing. Talking righteousness may be pretty, but "let no man deceive you—he that doeth righteousness is righteous." —EDWARD BERVICK in the Argonaut.

LUMINOUS PAINT IN RAILWAY CARRIAGES.—Luminous paint appears to be steadily working its way into practical use. A railway carriage painted inside with the Balmain phosphorescent paint is included in one of the trains between London and Rotherhithe via the Thames tunnel. Although only one-half of the available space of the carriage is painted, the phosphorescent light is quite sufficient to enable the passengers to distinguish small objects when passing through the tunnel; and, moreover, the light is powerful enough to enable the indication of an ordinary watch. It is probable that the railway companies will be enabled to effect a considerable saving of gas and oil by using the phosphorescent paint.

Vacation.

Human nature is so constituted that under the best auspices it needs change, in order to secure health and happiness. To eat the same kind of food day after day, and week after week, would break down any man's constitution, and all good housekeepers take special pains to vary the article of diet every day. We have a theory, whatever the doctors may think to the contrary, that dyspepsia may generally be traced to the fact, that the digestive mill has been kept grinding too long at the same sort of material. If any one doubts the truth of this proposition, let him take a peep at the inmates of a hygienic establishment, where the diet is cold water, Graham bread and vegetables. A more thin, gelid, blue-lipped, cadaverous set of folks is no where else to be found.

But, be all this as it may, one thing is certain, that in order to brighten life with hope, joy, and blessedness, one must have change. No matter how pleasant our surroundings may be, they soon become tedious and monotonous. The same round of duties, the same daily routine of business or household cares, month after month, and year after year, grows intensely wearisome, and induces a feeling of satiety, languor, melancholy, a sort of worn-out sense of existence. We are told of a Frenchman who committed suicide, because he said he was tired doing the same thing over and over every day. Goethe tells of an Englishman who hanged himself so that he would not be troubled any more in putting on and off his clothes. The whole story of the "Sorrows of Werter" was written to illustrate the feeling of ennui, the tedium and listlessness which comes over one when he realizes that he has reached a point where life must ever be the same old story. "Must I ever stand here," he says "and see these clouds ever passing from east to the west, see the sun rise and set? Oh, that spring would doff on red, yellow, violet, anything for a change, I am so weary of this monotonous green." Of course Goethe has here a little over-acted the case, but there is more of this feeling of weariness and disgust with the dreary routine and sameness of life, than is apparent upon the surface. How can it be otherwise with the mighty army of toilers whose life is a ceaseless tramp along the hard way of care and labor, hardly able to keep the wolf from the door. But even the well-to-do people who sit comfortably under their own vine and fig tree, safely entrenched from financial contingencies, often become dull, dumpish, irritable, eat blue mass and limes, and vote life a failure, when about all they need is a change of air, scenery and society. A vacation is generally more important to women than men, for the reason that there is more zest, variety, stimulation, and social intercourse in business than in household cares and duties. But it is good for all, if possible to take a pleasure trip, a run into the country, go off sight-seeing, visiting or recreating in some way as often as the convenience of business will permit. It makes life broader, more rich and varied in meaning, and puts more sunlight into the heart and in many a home that sadly needs it. The most contented, healthy and good-humored will become occasionally restive, mentally and physically out of sorts, disordered and dissonant, doomed year after year without a break or pause to run in ruts and come and go like a door on its hinges.

And yet there are but few people who understand the art of making a vacation profitable, and it is very difficult to make a rule that is good for everybody. Like eating, each one must find out for himself what is wholesome and agreeable. In a general way it may be said that what all need is a real and radical change; a change of association, of habits, and thought, as well as of life and scenery. It is even well to change companions or find new ones, as Agassiz loved to consort with fishermen and the owners of oyster beds, and Hawthorne found pleasure with the roisterers of the harbor. Some people are so fond of that little round of activity and society which makes up the most of their life, that like Holmes' convict, they are content to have a "tread-mill of their own." They pack their trunks full of fashion, and try and take along with them a segment of that social circle in which they live, our set, club, guild or church folks. But these people think, talk, dress, and act too much alike; it is transporting away from home a piece of the world we should learn to get along without for a season. We need freshness and a variety of experience. We should seek to give play to new sensations as well as unused muscles, to widen the horizon of life as well as that of vision, to fill the brain and heart with fresh, novel impressions, feelings and fancies, as well as expand the lungs with blithe, pure air; in short, make those swift eager servants of the soul, our senses, minister alike to our lowest and highest needs. Blood, brain, and brawn should be better for the vacation. We should bring home new stores of patience, the lubrication of life; of cheerfulness, its azure sky and bright sunshine; and of faith and hope, the source of all our strength, joy and activity. There is much more in a vacation than many seem to be aware. As the vacation season has come again, let us make the most and best of it.

WE regret to notice that Bro. Owen, of the Pacific Overseer, has been confined to his home by sickness, and unable to attend to any business. Glad to hear he is convalescing.

BRO. JAS. IRVING, of Mendocino Lodge, but now a resident of this city, offers his services as organist for any Lodge that desires that kind of service.

THE CASE OF MRS. LUCKY.—We call special attention to the report of the Committee on Appeals and Grievances, in the matter of the memorial of Carrie Lee Lucky, and the Grand Master's stirring appeal. We hope these earnest words may awaken an echo in the heart of every brother. Mrs. Lucky does not pretend to have a legal claim upon the beneficiary fund, but she certainly has a claim upon our charity and sympathy. All may remember reading of the poor laundress who carried a heavy burden for miles through the crowded streets of a great city, so that she might save her care to give to the yellow fever sufferers. Charity with her was no pretty sentiment to gild a prayer or speech, or perfume a song, but a vital principle, a rill of benevolence fresh and sweet from the heart of eternal Love. The wife of a worthy but unfortunate brother is in need, and appeals to us for aid. Brethren, let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and know that Charity and Protection in our Lodges is not a "sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal."

THAT the "world do move" is demonstrated by the fact that in one of the towns in western Pennsylvania a certain minister of the "United Presbyterian Church" in the place lately joined the A. O. U. W. For many years he had protested against all secret societies and threatened the church discipline against any who should become members. Lately one of his members, who was also, in spite of his protestations, a member of the A. O. U. W., was taken sick, and being poor in worldly goods, the members of the Lodge not only provided support for the sick brother, but constantly attended him in his last sickness and assisted in his burial. In due time the grand Lodge paid the widow the guaranteed sum of $2,000. The reverend gentleman began to think that an Order that would do so much could not be a wicked institution, and determining upon a full investigation, was not only satisfied, but thoroughly convinced. He asked to become a member, was accepted, and is now as enthusiastically in favor of the Order as he was formerly in its condemnation.

ONE of the Cincinnati papers, alluding to the recent floods, says: "The secret societies have responded liberally to the cry of distress called forth by the great calamity which has affected almost every man, woman and child, in the Ohio Valley during the past week. There is no occasion now to rehearse the noble actions of the Masons, Odd Fellows, and the United Workmen, and all the other Orders which have given time, money and personal attention to the sufferers by the great flood. This has been a time which has tried men's souls. The Orders have shown that they are worthy of the earnest support that has been given them, and even their enemies must admit that their charity as practiced by them is worth emulation."

WE all know that the emotion of charity is often slow, sluggish, and uncertain, that it often needs a pitiable object to excite its attention, then it flashes into an ardent zeal that soon subsides; that it is often slack in its vigilance, effusive where it should be cautiously economical, and stinted where it should be liberal. But our beneficiary fund is liable to no such ebbs and flows; no such alternations of feeling. It is no spasm of kindly feeling. It is a river deep and silent that ever flows even and full and unabated past every home, a river that is made up of the collective drops that come from thousands of thoughtful hearts.

THE pistol which a Chicago woman said was the one her husband threatened to shoot her with, proved to be a beer faucet. Any man who will carry a beer faucet about with him is a dangerous fellow, and should be watched. A beer faucet, when loaded, is nearly as dangerous as a pistol.

Local Items.

THE members at Meridian, Sutter county, intend to concentrate all the surrounding country at their celebration on the Fourth of July. Invitations have been extended to Butte, Yuba and Colusa counties. Wm. H. Barnes, P. G. M., of San Francisco, is to deliver the oration.

OLIVER LODGE, A. O. U. W., of Middletown, will give a grand picnic at that place on the Fourth of July, and a grand ball in the evening. The object of which is to replenish the Treasury of their Lodge. Further particulars will be given hereafter.

THE Ventura Signal of the 9th, says: The A. O. U. W. party at Spear's Hall, on Monday evening was the nicest affair of the season, and notwithstanding the warmth of the day and evening a very large party was in attendance. Dancing was kept up until after midnight. Refreshments were served at Glasgow's, many partaking of the excellent supper.

CHICAGO has the reputation of being a very wicked city, but even in Chicago there are some things that San Francisco might study with advantage. For instance, the Mayor has issued an order to the police to permit no house of ill-repute to be kept in the neighborhood of respectable citizens or near a public school. By forcing the keepers of such houses to flock together people of decent lives and moral habits are saved from contact with vice and their children are kept from short range acquaintance with immorality. There are quarters in this city where such an order would be a god-send to many reputable citizens.

THE Pacific Overseer, Portland, Oregon, says: "We have to note the organization of a new Lodge at Ellensburg, in Yakima county, one at Prescott, Columbia county, one at Coupeville, Island county, and one at Whatcom, What county, all in Washington Territory. This is good work, and we are pleased to note these additions to our Order. What are the Oregon Deputies doing?"

BRO. H. H. PALMER has disposed of his interest in the Illinois Foreman, to George F. Howard, of Paris, Ill. The "old paper," clothed in an entire new dress, and baptized under the new name, The Anchor and Shield, has come to hand. Illinois is a big State and the Order is flourishing, and we see no reason why Bro. Howard may not make it a success. He has our best wishes.

BRO. J. V. MCCURDY, Past Grand Master Workman of Nevada, paid a visit to Valley No. 30, on the 13th instant. We learn from him that the Order in Nevada is in a flourishing condition, and there is no doubt now that a separate Jurisdiction will soon be established. Grand Master Kinsley is working with a will, visiting and organizing new Lodges.

OUR District Deputies, Bros. Poland, Danforth, McKay and Lemont, are attending to their duties with a devotion to our Order that is truly commendable. Almost every night one or more can be seen within our Lodge-rooms, giving counsel and encouragement to our Brother Workmen.

"I WON'T play a game that I will have to die to win," said one, declining to go into the Order. You ought to be satisfied to have your wife and little ones win it. According to your theory you ought never to lay up money for them to use after you are gone, but spend it all as fast as you make it.

THE members of the A. O. U. W. in the Jurisdiction of Massachusetts ought to be exceedingly happy, having no assessment for either January, February, or March.

THE Jurisdiction of Maryland, New Jersey and Delaware is steadily growing. June 1st reports will show 3,000 members.

Grand Recorder's Department.

HEADQUARTERS of Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., Rooms 40 and 41, St. Ann's Building, corner of Eddy and Powell, San Francisco. H. G. PRATT.

OUR Lodges are continually going wrong in the admission of members from other Jurisdictions than our own. Aside from the fees for degrees and the conferring of the same, the requirements are the same as for new members. In lieu of degree fees a fee is charged for the deposit of card. When such a member has been elected into one of our Lodges he is not even then a member of the Lodge till he has cancelled and surrendered his beneficiary certificate. When this is done his transfer is complete, and the cancelled certificate should be forwarded to the Lodge whence he came, with notice of his transfer and date thereof. We have no claim for any beneficiary moneys on another Jurisdiction because of receiving a member therefrom, nor should we, for the member is required to deposit a dollar in the Lodge he joins to meet the first call on the Beneficiary Fund after his transfer.

LODGES that meet but twice a month do not elect officers this month, but in December next. This important fact should not be overlooked either by Lodges or Deputies. See Article VI., Section I., Subordinate Lodge Constitution. But semi-annual reports are required of all these Lodges the same as of others, and should not be delayed beyond the first week in July, and the Deputy should see that the semi-annual installment of the per capita tax is promptly transmitted to this office.

SEVERAL orders for constitutions are awaiting the issuing of a new edition. The work has been delayed that amendments made at the last session of our Grand Lodge might be approved by the Supreme Lodge.

About Lodge Matters.

The term of most of our Subordinate Lodges closes with this month, and new officers must be elected or the old ones re-elected. It is perhaps needless to say that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred good officers make a good Lodge and vice versa. But the fact is so important that it cannot be too firmly impressed upon our membership. As a rule, all officers should be changed, and, if worthy, advanced, except Recorders, Financiers, and Receivers. These, if efficient, should be retained in their respective places if they will consent to serve. If otherwise, they should be replaced with members chosen with reference to their peculiar fitness for the positions to be filled, and not simply because they are good fellows whom it may be desired to compliment.

Financiers and Receivers should be placed under good and sufficient bonds. The general tendency is to make bonds excessive, and then to be lax about the sureties. The contrary should be the case so long as bonds are required at all. Security that does not secure, is worse than none at all.

By-the-way, we have grave doubts about the prosperity of a law exacting bonds from any elective officer. If any body of men elect a person to fill an office of trust and responsibility, why should such body expect some third party who perhaps has no earthly interest in the matter except a feeling of friendship for the person elected, to put himself in the way of protecting the elective body against its own acts? A far better and more business-like way would be to provide a way to prevent peculation, rather than to get even at some innocent party's expense after the mischief has been accomplished. Bonds, at best, are but a shadowy security. Prevention is better, safer, and more desirable than the most potent remedy ever devised. Why not take the prevention plan, then, instead of the other? Suppose for instance, we do away with bonds in our Subordinate Lodges, and provide instead that the Finance Committee shall audit the accounts of the financial officers every month, and count the funds. If such were the law, and the law were enforced there would be an end to the appropriation of Lodge funds to personal use. If the law failed in any instance to be enforced, the fault would rest with the Lodge, and if it suffered for its own sin the punishment would fall just where it would belong and not on some innocent and over-confiding party. This same principle could be carried out in our higher bodies, and also in municipal county and State affairs and be a vast improvement in our present system. If it were though desirable to narrow the responsibility down to a few individuals, put it upon the Finance or Auditing Committee, which would be far more reasonable than the system now in vogue, and safer too, for knowing their danger of loss they would be more careful to prevent it by a close attention to duty.

Charity with Judgment.

A good deal of sympathy is often wasted on a person who carelessly allows himself to become suspended from the Order, and then becoming sick, is exceedingly desirous of being reinstated. It is well to bear in mind always that the Order owes no member anything who fails to bear his portion of the common burden. His protection is carried at net cost. He pays the price of a month's protection, not a cent in excess of the amount necessary, exclusive of all fees or expense of any kind, and has what he pays for before he is called upon for any further payment. He cannot insure his property on any such favorable conditions, and yet insuring and having his property safe at the end of the term for which he has paid for its protection he does not complain, nor should he. Neither does he or anybody else think the Insurance Company is under any obligation, moral or otherwise, to carry his risk beyond the time his contract expires. And yet we believe in a broad and comprehensive charity in connection with all worthy members of our fraternity. If a brother is pinched with poverty, or is in any other regard unfortunate, so that he cannot bear his own burdens, let us help to carry his load. Let us do as we would be done by, under like circumstances. But the careless laggard is not a worthy brother. The more you assist him, the more he will expect, and instead of being grateful for a favor, will feel offended if favors be not continued whence once bestowed. Help in such a case is benevolence worse than wasted. Cast not your pearls before swine.

Heresy in the Order.

A press dispatch to the Eastern papers from Erie, Pennsylvania, says: "There is excitement in the United Workmen camp over the apostasy of a high officer, Dr. Robbins, of this city, a well known physician and editor. At the meeting of the Lodge the doctor was confronted with his long article renouncing the Christian religion, alleged to be a violation of the constitution, requiring members to believe in a Supreme Being. In answer to a question he said he did not believe in a man-made God. The question of his eligibility to membership and office has been forwarded to the Supreme Lodge. The decision will affect a large number of the Order. Dr. Robbins is a conscientious and highly esteemed citizen."

All fraternal Orders are based upon the recognition of the existence of a Supreme Being. The open Bible is upon the altar. General law No. 1 reads: "No person shall be admitted to membership in the Order except he be * * * a believer in a Supreme Being, a Creator and Preserver of the Universe." Of course Dr. Robbins gave his adherence to this belief when he came into the Order. But the case is one that requires delicate handling. The idea of God as it descends into the human mind assumes many and often apparently antagonistic shapes. It is hardly probable that Dr. Robbins denies the existence of an Eternal principle of Intelligence in nature, manifested in the form of universal Law and Order, and while this may not satisfy all our creed-makers, it is good as far as it goes. Even St. Paul said "God is all, and in all."

Change of Certificates.

Bro. E. F. Matthews asks us the following question: "Is it the business of the Lodge when a beneficiary certificate is changed, that the Lodge should know the name of the party to whom the policy is changed? Is it a business transaction before the Lodge?" To which we have this to say: A member, when he joins the Order, makes his certificate payable to whom he likes. The Grand Lodge agrees to pay at his death to such person or persons as he may have designated while living, the sum of two thousand dollars, on condition of his keeping his standing good, etc. It also provides a way by which he may make a change of direction of payment in accordance with a form of blank on the back of his beneficiary certificate. He may change direction of payment at his pleasure, to any person he chooses, the same as in the first instance, but the Recorder must attest his signature and attach the seal of the Lodge. This is to prevent fraud. The old certificate must be forwarded to the Grand Recorder, who will issue a new certificate in place of the old one. It then goes back to the Lodge, and the Master and Recorder countersign the document. The Recorder attaches the seal of the Lodge, and enters the change in his certificate register book. The various acts of these officers in this regard are of a merely clerical character imposed by the law, and the Lodge has no right or power to interfere, unless the officers neglect or refuse to perform their duties. This is the law as we understand it.

The Crowning Honor.

We have at times given vent to our feelings of pride and satisfaction at the progress and standing of the Order in this Jurisdiction. The Supreme Lodge has heretofore honored us, and the various Jurisdictions in their individual capacity, have honored us, the press of the Order have honored us, but our last and crowning honor was in the choice of one of our good and true Workmen as Supreme Master. We feel a peculiar gratification in the election of Supreme Foreman M. W. Fish, to the chief executive office of the Order, and believe we hazard nothing in promising for him an efficient and successful administration. His long connection with the Order and regular attendance at the sessions of the Supreme Lodge since the formation of our Grand Lodge, have made him thoroughly conversant with its affairs in general and in detail, which, added to a quick perception and a ripe understanding fit him admirably for the high and important position to which he has been chosen. Let California Workmen rejoice and be glad.

We do not at this time of writing know when Bro. Fish will return to us, but when he does, we should show in some becoming manner a due appreciation of the honor conferred on us and him.

BRO. E. F. MATTHEWS, of Westport, Mendocino county, writing to this office on business, incidentally remarks that Westport Lodge, No. 207, is in a flourishing condition. A visit from the Grand Master is expected at an early day.

Stand by the Constitution.

EDITOR OF WATCHMAN:—It will be remembered by some of the many readers of the WATCHMAN, that one year ago last May, under the auspices of Oak Grove Lodge, No. 197, at Oakdale, a large and interesting meeting was held in their beautiful grove, the grounds having been secured by the committee for that occasion.

While the orator was discoursing upon the objects of the Order a certain lager beer man, whose sole purpose in life, and highest ambition is to deal out five cent schooner cargoes of beer, and like the little insect that is always pressing his bill where it is not wanted, brought several kegs of beer upon the ground, in close proximity to the speaker's stand. The committee in charge of the meeting informed the said beer man it was against the law of the Order to allow liquor on grounds where an entertainment was held in the name of the Order, and upon a positive refusal to remove his beer, it was taken from the grounds by the committee. For this grave offense, after nearly one year of boiling anger, he sought for satisfaction through the courts, and had them arrested as rioters.

Our brothers well knowing the element with which they had to contend, telegraphed to Bro. Watson, to send them without delay an attorney able to cope with the enemy. The services of Walter Van Dyke, Esq., of Oakland, were secured, who took the first train for Modesto, where he was met with a conveyance and taken to the field of battle. After the usual skirmishing, Mr. Van Dyke opened his battery and sent into the enemies camp hot shot, shell and dynamite. When the smoke of the battle had cleared away, behold the enemies guns were silenced, their fort in ruins, and the brothers set at liberty. After a few hours of pleasant talk over their victory, Mr. Van Dyke returned and made a glowing report of his trip, of the kind and gentlemanly treatment received from the brothers, and of his success. W. J.

A. O. U. W. Financier's Cash Book and Itemized S. A. Report Book.

A Combination of Receiver's Receipts to Financiers, Financier's S. A. Reports to Lodges and Reports of Auditing Committee

The above two books constitute a complete set for the use of Financiers of the A. O. U. W., and are so necessary for the proper time and labor-saving methodical transaction of Lodge business that every Financier should use them. Lodges, one and all, who have adopted the use of these books are unanimously of the opinion that these most valuable books should be used by every Lodge, in order to make A. O. U. W. bookkeeping uniform throughout the Order. The following Lodges in California are now using these books exclusively:

Sample sheets of the books have been sent to every Lodge some time since, and Lodges not having the books should, in their own interest at once procure them. A complete set will be sent to every Lodge for the very low price of $5. Expressage prepaid by ordering of C. P. Hitch, Grand Recorder, Paris, Illinois.

I most heartily recommend the adoption of the above books, and trust that every Lodge in this Jurisdiction will avail themselves of this new and most simple system of keeping their accounts. The "CASH BOOK" will last a Lodge of 100 members six to eight years, and the "S. A. REPORT BOOK" will last Lodges meeting weekly, 10 years, and those meeting semi-monthly, 20 years.

H. G. PRATT,
Grand Recorder of California.

We are frequently asked this question: "Which is the best route overland?" To this question we invariably refer to Bro. J. Meredith Davies, General Agent of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. Passengers for England and the Continent of Europe should, on arriving at San Francisco, ask or send for J. Meredith Davies, Palace Hotel, and he will assist in the exchange of their prepaid orders or purchase tickets across the American Continent. Com.

Music Store and Piano Warerooms.

Anybody desirous of purchasing a musical instrument of any kind should not fail to address or call in person at this leading establishment, located at 490 Twelfth Street, Oakland. The genial proprietor, Mr. E. A. Jones, or his obliging assistants, are always ready and pleased to display their wares. An examination of the Weber, Decker, and Haines Bros. pianos, and Eskey and Sterling organs, kept by this house, will strengthen the reputation they have already gained of being the "leading makes" in the world. A first class piano and organ tuner, maker and repairer connected with the house. Prompt attention to packing and moving pianos.

Macaulay.

As soon as he had got into his head any particular episode of his history, he would sit down and write off the whole story at a headlong pace, sketching in the outlines under the genial and audacious impulse of a first conception, and securing in black and white each idea and epithet and turn of phrase, as it flowed straight from his busy brain to his busy fingers. His manuscript, at this stage, to the eyes of any one but himself, appeared to consist of column after column of dashes and flourishes, in which a straight line with a half-formed letter at each end and another in the middle did duty for a word. As soon as Macaulay had finished his rough draft, he began to fill it in at the rate of six sides of foolscap every morning; written in so large a hand, and with such a multitude of erasures that the whole six pages were, on an average, composed into two pages of print. This portion he called his "task," and he never was quite easy unless he completed it daily. More he seldom sought to accomplish; for he had learned by long experience that this was as much as he could do at his best; and except at his best he never would write at all. He never wrote except he was in the humor, and stopped as soon as his thoughts ceased to flow fast. He never allowed a sentence to pass until it was as good as he could make it. He would recast a chapter to obtain a more lucid arrangement, and reconstruct a paragraph for the sake of one happy stroke or apt illustration. He spent nineteen days over his description of the Massacre of Glencoe, and then expressed dissatisfaction at the result.

Or all happy households, that is the happiest where the falsehood is never thought of. All peace is broken up when it happens that there is a liar in the house. All comfort has gone when suspicion has once entered—when there must be a reserve in talk and reservation in belief. Anxious parents, who are aware of the pains of suspicion, will place general confidence in their children, and receive what they say freely, unless there is a strong reason to distrust the truth of any. If such an occasion should unhappily arise, they must keep the suspicion from spreading as long as possible, and avoid disgracing their poor child while there is a chance of its cure by their confidential assistance. He should have their pity and assiduous help, as if he were suffering under some disgusting bodily disorder. If he can be cured, he will become truly grateful for the treatment. If the endeavor fail, means must, of course, be taken to prevent his example from doing harm, and then, as I said, the family peace is broken up, because the family confidence is gone.

NEW AND STALE BREAD.—A celebrated French chemist, M. Boussingault, has recently been investigating the nature of the change which takes place when bread becomes stale, some thing which has hitherto not been understood. In the course of his experiments, a circular loaf 12 inches in diameter, and six inches thick, was taken from an oven heated to 240° Reaumur, and a thermometer forced into it three inches. The thermometer indicated 78° R. (207.5 F.). The loaf was then taken to a room, the temperature of which was 15° R. (66° F.), and found to weigh seven and a half pounds. In 12 hours the temperature of loaf sunk to 19° R. (73° F.), and in 24 hours to 15° (66°), and in 36 hours to 14° (63.5°). In the first 48 hours it lost only two ounces in weight. After six days the loaf was again put in the oven, and when the thermometer had indicated that its temperature had risen to 55° R. (156° F.), it was cut open and found to be fresh, and to possess the same qualities as if it had been taken out of the oven the first time; but it had lost twelve ounces in weight. Experiments were made with slices of bread with similar results, proving conclusively, that new bread differs from old, not by containing a larger proportion of water, but by a peculiar molecular condition. This commences and continues to change during cooling, but by again heating the bread to a certain temperature, it is restored to its original state. It is the mechanical state which makes new bread less digestible than old. The former is so soft, elastic and glutinous in all its parts, that ordinary mastication fails to reduce it to a sufficiently digestible condition.

LIGHT FROM GAS.—The amount of light given out by a gas flame depends upon the temperature to which the particles of solid carbon in the flame are raised, and Dr. Tyndall has shown that of the radiant energy set up in such a flame, only the one twenty-fifth part is luminous; the hot products of combustion carry off at least four times as much energy as is radiated, so that not more than one-hundredth part of the heat evolved in combustion is converted into light.

COOKING.—A Montreal firm has invented and patented a machine for cooking by electricity. It consists of a saucepan so isolated by non-conductors that the bottom forms the positive pole of the current. The negative pole is atached to a movable point which travels in circles over the bottom of the pan underneath, distributing the heat over the whole surface and with sufficient rapidity to avoid burning a hole through the pan at any one point.

LADIES and all sufferers from neuralgia, hysteria, and kindred complaints, will find without a rival Brown's Iron Bitters.

New Life

is given by using BROWN'S IRON BITTERS. In the Winter it strengthens and warms the system; in the Spring it enriches the blood and conquers disease; in the Summer it gives tone to the nerves and digestive organs; in the Fall it enables the system to stand the shock of sudden changes.

In no way can disease be so surely prevented as by keeping the system in perfect condition. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS ensures perfect health through the changing seasons, it disarms the danger from impure water and miasmatic air, and it prevents Consumption, Kidney and Liver Disease, &c.

H. S. Berlin, Esq., of the well-known firm of H. S. Berlin & Co., Attorneys, Le Droit Building, Washington, D. C., writes, Dec. 5th, 1881:

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in stating that I have used Brown's Iron Bitters for malaria and nervous troubles, caused by overwork, with excellent results.

Beware of imitations. Ask for BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, and insist on having it. Don't be imposed on with something recommended as "just as good." The genuine is made only by the Brown Chemical Co. Baltimore, Md.

The Violin.

We have recently examined a violin made by C. W. Powers, of this city. The wood of the top is about forty years old, and was taken from the broken spar of a sailing vessel; the back of the violin is of fine Eastern maple, selected by White, the well-known violin maker of Boston—the whole being put together and finished in a masterly manner, showing unusual skill in mechanism and acoustics. Judging from its tone it would bear comparison with many a reputed "master."

The violin has come to be looked upon by many connoisseurs as a fathomless, complex scientific problem. Indeed, it is little understood, mainly because no practical knowledge can be gained from books on the subject. Its unprofitableness as a study prevents it being generally pursued by those devoted to studying dead arts, and it would seem destined to remain shrouded in mist. To the theorist, a lack of knowledge only lends an additional charm and fascination, to the already entrancing effect of the "magic wand" in the hand of the skilled artist.

There are several amateurs in this city who display considerable skill in the construction of the violin. An hour is well spent in the workshop of Captain D. C. M. Goodsell. Having had ample time and means, he has applied himself assiduously to this pleasurable work, for the past twenty years, not a day passing that he has not given it some attention. During that time he has gained much knowledge relative to sound, and its distribution in the violin. A "chef" would hardly escape his eye unrecognized, yet his knowledge is likely to remain with him—and the same can be said of Gien under, of New York, and others, unless they choose to transfer their deductions upon paper, for the benefit of those to follow them.

Science, as well as time, has demonstrated that the wood in violins needs to be protected by varnish; not alone from dampness, but natural decay. The oil of varnish penetrating the wood and leaving an elastic, outward surface, arrests that decay as nothing else has been shown to do, and with age mellows and intensifies the tone vibrations—a fact which is often overlooked, or disregarded. Proper varnish is necessary, however, for this result; the finest varnish even, used in manufactures will not do for this purpose. Much more might be said to interest the lover of the violin in this "far" western coast, but for the present this must suffice.

A New Bergstrom Organ.

Bergstrom & Co., of this city, have recently finished the construction of a very fine large organ for the First Methodist Church of Oakland. It combines all the very latest improvements, and its exterior finish is of rich but neat design. The upper section is open, exposing the large diapason pipes, which are taste fully decorated in gold and colors to harmonize with the frescoing of the church.

The organ proper is divided into great, swell and pedal, each of which may be operated separately, or all coupled into one. It is provided with two banks of keys, of four and one-half octaves each, and two octaves of pedals. There are 18 stops, as follows:

Swell organ—Oboe, bassoon, flautina, flute traverso, stop diapason, viola treble, viola bass, trumpet and tremolo.

Great organ—Fifteenth, twelfth, flute harmonic, octave, melodia, open diapason.

Pedal organ—Cello, coudon.

General—Bellows signal, three sets of couplers, great forte, great piano (the last two worked by the foot), and swell.

The stops of the great and swell organ work directly upon 58 notes each, and those of the pedal upon 27.

The stops are so arranged as to give immediate and distinct response, and Mr. Sam'l Mayer, one of our most skilled organists, speaks highly of this feature. The couplers are adjusted between the manuals, and consist of three sets of two each, one to couple and the other to uncouple, the effect being produced in either case by a mere pressure of the thumb or a finger, which can be done without raising the hands from the keys. These couple the swell and pedal, the great and swell, or the great and pedal. The pedal couplers connect the entire great organ with the pedals, or shut it off, as the case may be. The swell organ is controlled by the foot, and is so arranged as to remain at any point of swell the operator desires, and without the necessity of securing the pedal. Thus the wing may be entirely closed, slightly opened, half opened, or fully opened, and the foot withdrawn without disturbing the effect. This also is a novel contrivance.

A Backus' water motor is to be supplied to furnish power. The air is first taken into one large bellows, and thence is distributed to six smaller ones, working independently, from which the air presses into the pipes by the action of the stops.

Messrs. Bergstrom & Co., makers of this fine instrument, have an extensive factory in this city where various styles of organs are made. They have supplied many of the churches and Sunday schools of this coast with organs. Mr. Bergstrom has introduced many features of his own invention in the instruments and they are highly spoken of by all who have heard them. This particular organ has an excellent tone, and at both the public and private exhibitions it was commended both by experts and amateurs.

The Valley Quail of California.*

Early in the morning of the next hunting day the enthusiastic quartet of nimrods and dianas were seated in their familiar vehicle, appropriately armed for the sport they were after. In a country so full of game they had not driven far when they suddenly noticed dark objects energetically darting and gliding over the emerald dotted ground, as the wagon rolled into the little valley that lay between two low ranges of hills. See how they vanish down the green vista among the sycamores, skim the sod in the arcades of elders, and dart among the bushes and up the velvet slopes that lead toward the hills. Here, there and all over, by twos, fours, dozens and scores they dodged, rustled and disappeared from view. And look at old Prince, who hangs 50 or 60 yards behind the wagon, with nose high up raised, tail nearly rigid, and countenance as serious as that of an incubating owl, waddling along as if the pinks and violets were New Jersey sand burrs. What sound is this that now rings from the hillside, shining with the orange glow of innumerable poppies, where the feciolas are just lighting their soft purple lamps of spring, and the orthocarpus is kindling its crimson fire along the ground, where the olive green of the ramiria is lovingly embraced by the rich pink of the wild pea, and the dark, glossy green of the sumac is twined with the lighter green leaves and the white showery blossom of the chilicayote, or the golden bell of the wild honeysuckle? It sounds like "O-hi-o, o-hi-o, o-hi-o, o-hi-o," blown from a silver flute and it is answered from the opposite hills, from up the valley, and from all sides, until the whole region is filled with calls for "Ohio."

How unlike any Eastern bird is this odd little combination of bluish slate, black, cinnamon, and white, with its long natty black plume! Yet the short, thick, curved bill, the full swelling breast, and graceful form, would all show it to be unmistakably a quail, even if we had not witnessed its gamey behavior. Who, that has not seen for himself, could realize the great numbers in which the birds are often found, and brain-befuddling extravagance of their whizzing presence, when one is in the midst of a large, scattered flock? And yet, if the reader will pause and reflect a moment, he will see that what appears like a "California yarn," of stupendous size, may be even below the actual truth. Consider that these birds are far beyond the orbit of market-shooters, the "big bag" louts, often miscalled sportsmen, and the netter and trapper, that they do not suffer from cold winters or wet breeding seasons, the "dry year" only suspending their breeding without destroying the old birds. Remember, too, that in the breeding season they are equally at home in the garden or the wildest canyon, the depths of the ravine or the high hilltops; equally happy among the rocks or brush, along steep hillsides or in the long grass or tangled underbrush of river and creek bottoms. In timber or out of timber, by water or miles from water, four thousand feet or one foot above sea level, all to them are the same. Then remember that they raise twelve or fifteen young, and sometimes nests twice in a season; that in the fall the separate bevies run together and form in packs like pinnated grouse; and that even these packs sometimes run together, so that sometimes all the birds bred on one, two or three thousand acres of ground, or even more, may be found in a single band; and when thus banded they are nearly always found in the little valleys, and no longer on the hills, where most of them were bred.

THE EFFECT OF HEAT ON FLOUR.—It frequently happens that wheat or rye flour, in spite of the greatest care in baking, yields an inferior loaf, and the failure is commonly attributed to adulteration; but when submitted to investigation, neither microscopic nor chemical tests reveal any adulteration. Such flour is returned to the miller or dealer as unfit for use. The miller says the flour was injured by the heating of the stones, and the dealer attributes the defect to the circumstances that the sun must have shone upon the sacks during transportation. It has been proved by numerous experiments that flour cannot bear the action of the sun, even when not exposed directly to its rays. When flour is exposed to the heat of the sun an alteration takes place in the gluten similar to that produced by the heating of the stones. For this reason it is advisable that the transportation of flour should take place, if possible, on cool days or by night, as well as that flour should be stored in a cool place. — Boston Journal of Chemistry.

THE Woman's Exchange is becoming a very popular institution. One has been established successfully at New Orleans and also at Indianapolis, and an exchange says of that at Cincinnati: "Our needy women have been quick to avail themselves of this market for their work, and we hear amazing reports of their success, especially of one young lady who has realized a clear profit of from $25 to $30 each week, from the sale of cookies made by herself. Think of that, ye who are constantly complaining that our girls of the present day know nothing of housework or cooking." This is an exceptional case, however.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W., and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN'S progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be part-takers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

Supreme Lodge.

First Day's Proceedings.

The Supreme Lodge, A. O. U. W., convened in Eleventh Annual Session in Buffalo, N. Y., June 5th. On the roll being called, fifty-two Representatives were found present, including the following Supreme Officers: J. J. Upchurch, Past Supreme Master Workman; Wm. H. Baxter, Supreme Master Workman; M. W. Fish, Supreme Foreman; Theo. A. Case, Supreme Overseer; M. W. Sackett, Supreme Recorder; S. S. Davis, Supreme Receiver; R. H. Flanders, Supreme Guide; R. M. M. Patton, Supreme Watchman; Wm. C. Richardson, Supreme Medical Examiner; Leroy Andrus, Alex. McLean, and John D. Vincil, Supreme Trustees.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Finance—J. H. Lenhart, M. D. Dawson, and S. B. Berry. Laws and Supervision—C. M. Masters, and S. B. Myers.

Representative W. G. Morris, of Illinois, was appointed Assistant to the Grand Guide.

The Supreme Master Workman, the Supreme Recorder, the Supreme Receiver, the Supreme Finance Committee, and the Supreme Medical Examiner, presented their annual report.

Report of Supreme Master Workman Wm. H. Baxter.

To the Officers and Members of the Supreme Lodge—BRETHREN:—Assembled as you are, in conformity to the constitution of the Order, I have the honor to submit a detailed report of the acts of the Supreme Master Workman during the recess.

One of the first acts was to promulgate the new legislation of our last annual session, and this was done in Official Circular No. 1, dated June 17th, 1882, great pains being taken to give it an extensive circulation.

In accordance with the expressed wish of the Supreme Lodge, Nebraska was added to the Grand Jurisdiction of Missouri, Dakota to Minnesota, and Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico were joined together.

The several Subordinate Lodges of the localities last named early appreciated the encouragement extended them, and unanimously petitioned to be permitted to form a Grand Lodge. The request was speedily granted, and a formal organization was effected at Denver, Colorado, on October 10, 1882. The Grand Lodge was instituted and the officers duly installed by Bro. J. H. Lenhart, who was specially deputized for the occasion.

In August last, Bro. J. W. H. Wilson, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, was commissioned a D. S. M. W. for that Province, and on the 18th of November, following, he instituted Winnipeg Lodge, No. 1. There is no doubt that ere long the Order will be still further extended in that part of the country, and if any legislation is required to infuse life into the movement, it should be done.

RELIEF LAW AND FUND.

The assessments made upon the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction during the first fiscal year aggregated twenty-four—the full maximum under the Relief Law—and these were insufficient to pay its death losses. Under the circumstances none of the relief afforded under call No. 2 could be returned to the treasury. Indeed, at one time it appeared quite probable that another relief assessment would have to be made to meet the exigency occasioned by the excessive death rate. The facts were duly submitted to the Relief Board, and it was the unanimous opinion of that body that it would be preferable to use the balance remaining undistributed in the treasury to the credit of the Relief Fund, than to make another assessment. In accordance with a resolution passed by the Board, this course was pursued, and the money paid out to proper claimants.

Although no positive instructions were given on the subject, it was assumed that the amendments made to our laws at the last session of the Supreme Lodge would become operative on the first day of July. Occasion having arisen for correspondence with the officers of the Grand Lodge of Indiana relative to the operations of the amendment to the Relief Law, I held that in that Jurisdiction twenty-four assessments would necessarily have to be levied during the fiscal year of 1882—ten for the first six months to comply with the original law, and fourteen in the last six months to comply with the new adjustment. The Jurisdiction named made twenty assessments, and, as a consequence, has not returned to the Relief Fund any of the relief afforded in 1881-82, the aggregate amount realized having been needed to pay losses occurring within its own limits. The question presented in this case is of more than ordinary importance, and entertaining grave doubts as to the duty of an executive officer in the premises, the matter is presented to you for such action as, in your wisdom, shall be deemed proper.

In Sections 10 and 11, Chapter 8, Supreme Lodge Constitution, it is provided that re-in-statements may be made under the conditions therein stated by a majority vote of the Subordinate Lodge having Jurisdiction. I have held that the voting herein referred to should not be by secret ballot, but by the usual sign of the Order.

There yet remains due from the Grand Jurisdiction of Oregon and Washington about $2,300, the proceeds of assessment No. 10, as fully set forth in the proceedings of the Supreme Lodge of 1882.

In August last my attention was called to the fact that two beneficiary certificates had been issued upon the application of Bro. Marcus Frankel, of Louisville Lodge, No. 6, Louisville, Ky. The first certificate is numbered 1,592, and was regularly issued when Bro. Frankel joined the Order. The second certificate is numbered 3,658, and was issued in obedience to the application of the same brother, who alleged a desire to change the names of his beneficiaries. It appearing that the second certificate was not issued in accordance with Section 17, Chapter 8, Supreme Constitution, I directed that it should be canceled, and held that if the brother still desired to make a change of beneficiaries he could do so. The correspondence now in my possession on this subject is submitted for your consideration.

EXPENSES.

The expenses attending the performance of my duty have been as follows: postage, $59.21; stationery and printing, $14.25; telegraphing, $8.49; expressage, $2.30. Total, $84.25.

PROGRESS OF THE ORDER.

The Order has made constant progress since last you met, and the membership generally seem to be imbued with a determination to increase its numerical strength and usefulness. Fraternity may be said to have been fully woven into the fabric of the Order and to have become a predominating feature of the organization.

At the close of the last fiscal year the total membership in round numbers was 105,000; now it is over 120,000. The net increase for the year was about 15,000, with an increase in lodges of 250. The receipts of the beneficiary fund for the year aggregated $1,793,937.40, and the disbursements were $1,792,603.34. For a more detailed statement of our finances you are referred to the exhaustive reports of the Supreme Recorder, Supreme Receiver, and the Committee on Finance.

Since its organization the Order has paid to the beneficiaries of its deceased members $7,103,000, with every cent accounted for. This is a magnificent showing, and words almost fail to express the praise due the contributing members and disbursing officers.

Conclusion.

I cannot close this report without specially commending the manner in which the labors of the year have been performed by the Committee on Laws and Supervision, the Committee on Finance, the Supreme Recorder, the Supreme Receiver, the Supreme Medical Examiner and the officers of the Supreme Lodge generally. They have always been found at their posts of duty, ready and willing to discharge the duties devolving upon them.

The trusts committed to my care I am now prepared to return to you who gave me your confidence. The record of my stewardship is before you, and you must judge of its merits or demerits. Whatever success may have attended the discharge of the duties devolving upon me, is in a great measure due to the officers and committees associated with me. To them, and to the members of the Supreme Lodge individually and collectively my warmest thanks and the assurances of my highest regard are fully and freely extended. My hope is that the blessing of a Divine Providence may always rest upon you as a body and also upon the great constituencies that you represent; that this session, like those which have preceded it, may be characterized by harmony and wisdom, and that the result of your labors may prove highly beneficial to our united Brotherhood.

STATISTICS.

I am pleased to note some improvement in the matter of annual reports for the various Grand Lodges, and as a consequence am able to present a very complete report of the business and progress of the Order for the last year. By the system of statistical reports kept since 1879, we are able to make some general averages and comparisons as to increase of membership, rate of assessments, death rate, etc., for a series of years. Should this plan be continued, it will result in much good in determining many questions about which we have heretofore had no reliable information.

I endeavored, in addition to other matters, to gather a general summary of the receipts and disbursements of all the Subordinate Lodges in the Order, through the semi-annual reports made to the Grand Lodges. In this I failed, owing to the fact that in a great majority of the Grand Lodges no detailed semi-annual reports are received from the Subordinate Lodges, and the Grand recorders were unable to give the facts required. I have received some reports, but not a sufficient number to warrant publication. This fact is to be regretted, as the Order disburses each year hundreds of thousands of dollars of which no general summary is now kept, and for which it fails to receive due credit.

DIGEST.

I again respectfully call attention to the matter of revising and publishing a new edition of the Digest. The demand for a new edition comes from all parts of the Order. I now have on hand one order for 100 copies as soon as published. Besides being a source of revenue to the Supreme Lodge, the best interests of the Order demand that we give this matter due consideration.

BOUND PROCEEDINGS.

Volume number two of bound Proceedings, containing the reports of the Supreme Lodge from 1879 to 1882, inclusive, is now ready for distribution, and members or Lodges can obtain the full proceedings of the Supreme Lodge on application to the Supreme Recorder.

ORDERS OF THE SUPREME LODGE.

The various orders of the Supreme Lodge at its last session have been duly executed.

In the matter of consolidation of territory the various changes made have proven very satisfactory, and a large increase in membership and interest is noted in most of the States that were consolidated last year. Transfers in all cases as directed were made, except in the case of Arkansas, Tennessee as yet not having taken action thereon. The Subordinate Lodges in that State still remain under the immediate jurisdiction of the Supreme Lodge.

The various amendments to the laws made at the last session were duly and promptly promulgated to all the States by official circular, June 17, 1882. Memorial on the death of Bro. S. J. Pecot, P. G. M. W., was properly engrossed and forwarded to his widow.

The appropriation of a part of the per capita tax to the liquidation of "Certificates of Indebtedness," in accordance with the direction of the Supreme Lodge, has been properly done, as will be noted by my report.

Relative to the order of the Supreme Lodge directing the Grand Lodge of Oregon and Washington to pay into the Beneficiary Fund of the Supreme Lodge jurisdiction the amount of receipts on assessment No. 10, 1881-82, no response has been had. The matter has been in the hands of the Supreme Master Workman, and no doubt a full report thereof will be made by him.

RELIEF FUND.

The transactions for the year in this fund are given in detail in my report. I am pleased to note that the collection of call No. 2 was much more prompt and attended with much less difficulty than call No. 1, made the year previous. This is due to a more complete and perfect understanding of the requirements of the relief law by Grand and Subordinate Lodge officers. Any future calls made I feel will be as promptly collected and paid over as are the regular beneficiary assessments.

CONTRIBUTED BENEFICIARY FUND.

In connection with this fund I am pleased to report much progress made during the year. As will be noted by my report, the quota of all the States has been settled except a balance due from Indiana, Illinois and Georgia, (the matter of Iowa not being considered). Since the close of the fiscal year, (as will be shown in my supplementary report), Indiana has paid $200 on its balance, and action taken by Illinois Grand Lodge indicate a speedy liquidation of its balance.

The payment of so large an amount of the "Certificates of Indebtedness" before maturity has given great satisfaction, and has established renewed confidence in the stability and integrity of the Order in those sections where the certificates are held. One year more, with a continued revenue as at present, will wipe out the balance due on this account.

MONTHLY REPORTS FROM GRAND LODGES.

These reports have, with the exception of Iowa and Oregon and Washington, been received with great regularity, and the monthly summary of the business of the Order has been more complete than at any former year. It is to be regretted that these reports are not entirely complete each month, as the membership at large watch with increasing interest our progress as the months go by.

I have been called upon to answer many inquiries why no later reports relative to the membership in Iowa were given. I could only answer that the report made at the last session of the Supreme Lodge was the last official report received by me. The reason given by the Grand Recorder for making no reports was, that having had no death losses he was unable to make a later report as to the number of contributing members.

The annual report from the Grand Lodge of Iowa has not as yet been received, and I am unable therefore to give items relative to that Jurisdiction in my published report. Should it be received before the meeting of the Supreme Lodge, I will present it to the body.

GENERAL PROGRESS OF THE ORDER.

The general progress of the Order, as will be noted by my detailed reports, continues most satisfactory for the year, showing a net increase of 282 Lodges and 14,377 members, making about twelve per cent increase in number of Lodges and fifteen per cent increase in membership. The total number of deaths has been 862, an increase of ninety-eight over last year. Settlement has been made of the death benefit in the average time of two months and fifteen days, an increase of time of payment over last year of only four days. The disbursements of Beneficiary Fund, exclusive of the Jurisdictions of Iowa and Oregon and Washington, aggregate the large sum of $1,792 34, an increase over last year of $289,047 54. My reports show a very slight advance in the death rate of the Order from 8.18 in 1881-82 to 8.82-83, but a decrease in the average assessments from 17 1-7 in 1881-82 to 16 4-5 in 1882-83.

As a matter of general interest and about which many inquiries are made, I have gathered as near as possible the total number of deaths that have occurred in the Order since its organization and the amount paid out to the widows and orphans of deceased brothers. The total number of deaths, exclusive of the Jurisdiction of Iowa and Oregon and Washington, has been to the end of the last fiscal year 3,588, and the amount paid out on death losses $7,103,000 00. Every member of the Order cannot but review this great work with pride, and resolve to renew his zeal in a work productive of such great and good merits.

I desire to again record my continued appreciation of the brotherly and fraternal courtesy extended to me in my official capacity by the membership of the Order, and to thank the Supreme Lodge for its confidence expressed by the trust reposed. To the Supreme Master Workman and other Supreme officers and members of committees, who have ever been willing to extend aid and counsel, I return my sincere thanks.

[Only the proceedings of the first day were received at the time of going to press. A more detailed account may be expected in our next issue.]

SELLING BLUESTONED WHEAT.—A farmer in the province of Saxony sold, a short time ago, a quantity of wheat, of which one-half had been steeped in vitriol, charging a lower price for the same. The merchant sold it again, after washing it, to a miller, and both were brought up before the county sessions at Erfurt, on the charge of dealing with an article of consumption which had been rendered unfit for use. Both pleaded not guilty, on the ground that wheat was not an article of consumption, but the defense was rejected and the grain declared an article of consumption, as in this case it was shown that it had been sent to the mill in order to be ground into flour.

A CHANGE in the overland time-table has been agreed upon, to go into effect July 1st. In a few days the schedule will be made public. The Central and Southern Pacific railroads are considering the advisability of running the Pullman dining cars in connection with the Pullman sleepers. There are 3,500 men at work on the Oregon railroad extension.

Bonfort's Wine Circular states that the arrival of California wines in New York by Panama steamers during the month of May amounted to 138,109 gallons; while in May last year the receipts were 128,417 gallons. In brandy the arrivals this May were 8,042 gallons, and in last May but 1,740 gallons.

SOME of the wells in Santa Barbara that have not been dry for thirty years, are now yielding no water, and several heretofore living springs upon the foothills to the north of the city are also failing. Does this foretell the coming of an earthquake?—Los Angeles Times.

BRO. WM. BEMAN, 32 O'Farrell street, manufactures the Elastic Cork Truss, which is used and worn as one that does not cause pain and inconvenience. He also manufactures braces for spinal curvature, abdominal and medicated pile supporters, cork limbs, shoulder braces, etc. The medical profession of this city have, in convention, adopted his goods in preference to others.

BRO. SAM BLACK, P. M. W., of Tombstone Lodge, Tucson, has opened a business as merchant tailor, No. 12 Leidesdorff street. His experience and reputation as an artistic tailor, will no doubt insure him prosperity in his new enterprise.

The Triennial Conclave.

The Triennial Committee is hard at work preparing for the approaching Conclave. The Wednesday evening meetings at the Baldwin are largely attended, and the headquarters at 26 Montgomery street, is a constant scene of bustle and activity. Few are aware, who have not taken the pains to look into the matter, of the infinite details that are in the hands of the various committees that domicile here. In one sense the Conclave is an assured success. The Committee on Hotels and Accommodations have thoroughly explored the field and know that they will be able handsomely to quarter the mighty army of Pilgrims coming here. But a mere "bread and butter" hospitality, however good in quantity and quality, will reflect very little credit on the wealth, intelligence and chivalrous feeling of our great city and State. Elegant trophies have been devised. The city should be richly and elaborately decorated. As this is the most attractive and showy feature of the Jubilate, it has been estimated that $25,000 should be expended in decoration alone, and the committee report that $15,000 is the least they can possibly get along with, without giving the whole thing the appearance of a "Cheap John" affair. And yet there is no need of disguising the fact that the contributions are not coming in as liberally as should characterize our people. Selfishness alone should cause the business men of this city to come down handsomely. It is safe to calculate that these Sir Knights will put from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 into circulation before they leave us. Then they are representative men, whose opinion of the State will carry more weight than all the tons of circulars sent out by the Immigration Commissioners. When it is thoroughly understood what this money is for, that it is in safe hands, and will be wisely and economically expended, we still hope that the Finance Committee, may be able to report that the aftermath is more abundant than the first gathering.

DECORATIONS.

The general plan of decorations the committee would like to carry out is as follows: Market street, from the bay to the city hall, together with Montgomery and Kearny streets over the business portion of each, and the lower portion of Post street and a portion of California street, are to be decorated by lines of banners, at the principal intersections, diagonally forming a St. Andrew's cross, the center caught up so as to throw the flags into a curve, and at the highest point to have a mass of streamers pendant; between each crossing suitably dividing the block, are to be three or four lines of banners, also caught up at the center, and having for the principal feature of each a large flag, in some cases equestrian, and in others illustrating something else of interest to the Order. The nave of the pavilion is to have at the crown of its arch in the center an elaborate ornamental piece, dividing the extreme length into two equal parts. These two parts are to have alternate lines of streamers, each sixty to eighty feet in length, radiating to all points of the compass from a common center. The pannels along the gallery, encircling the main promenade, are to be filled by banners, transmitted for that purpose by the various commanderies of the United States, and the space at the rear of the galleries is to be broken up by streamers and triangular flags. The eastern end of the nave is to have suitable decorations, and the western end having been assigned to the ladies of the Triennial Union, is to be fitted up and arranged as a garden, with flower vines, fruits, tropical plants, palms and ferns. The various rooms set apart for official purposes, together with those of the press, will be handsomely decorated. There are to be four magnificent arches. One of these has inscribed upon it "Welcome," and is intended as a hearty greeting to pilgrims upon their first entry to our city. Another entirely suitable to its purpose is inscribed "Grand Master," a free and customary tribute to the personal worth and official dignity of the highest officer known to our jurisdiction. A third is dressed in sombre hue, and is erected in memory of fraters deceased during the past three years, and is known as "Memorial." The fourth is not yet named. The exterior and interior of the Masonic Temple and the exterior of the Mechanics' Pavilion are all to be elaborately decorated.

Templar Chronicles.

Apollo Commandery, of Chicago, has arranged for a trip to Europe. They leave Chicago, on July 12th, and go by Niagara Falls to New York. The estimated time to be taken in the trip is 32 days, and it will cost each Knight $250.

The Detroit Commandery, of Knights Templar, have decided to abandon their proposed trip to San Francisco Triennial, on account of being unable to muster 60 swords, or a majority of members being unable to leave their business the length of time required for the trip. The Commandery has, instead, about decided to take a trip down the St. Lawrence, and to its principal cities. Some of the officers of the Grand Commandery, of Michigan, will go to San Francisco, and will be accompanied by a number of individual members of the different Commanderies throughout the State.

The Commanderies of Chico, Oroville, Red Bluff, and Susanville, have secured rooms at 511 Sutter street, for their headquarters during the Conclave, and will be pleased to meet their friends at that place.

The Grand Commandery, of Ohio, appointed the following Sir Knights as the committee to make arrangements for the Grand and other Commanderies of the State, for the pilgrimage to the Triennial Conclave, at San Francisco:

W. T. Walker, Grand Captain General, Toledo. Charles S. Ammel, Past Eminent Commander, Columbus. M. J. Houck, Eminent Commander, Dayton. Charles E. Stanley, Grand Senior Warden, Cleveland. Stephen P. Sands, Eminent Commander, Cincinnati.

The Grand Commandery, of Texas, held its Annual Conclave, on April 18th to 20th, 1883, at San Antonio, R. E. Sir John E. Elgin, Deputy Grand Commander, presiding. Grand Chaplain, Sir C. C. Chaplain, delivered an eloquent address.

We notice that the Masonic friends of W. J. Wilcox, of San Jose, have presented him with a magnificent Knights Templar jewel, as a testimonial of their high appreciation. The matter was inaugurated by Wilson Hayes, W. M., of San Jose Lodge, S. H. Wagener, High Priest, of Howard Chapter, and D. C. Dunn, E. C., of San Jose Commandery, and was kept an entire secret from Mr. Wilcox, until the hour of presentation.

The following is a copy of a circular sent to the leading railroads East:

SAN FRANCISCO, June 4, 1883. GENTLEMEN: The time has about arrived for us to begin to prepare for furnishing proper equipment for the transportation of the pilgrims who propose to attend the Conclave of the Knights Templar to be held in this city August next.

To enable us to be prepared with the requisite equipment at points of junction, such as Ogden, Needles, Deming, El Paso, and Vernillionville, will you kindly inform us at the earliest possible moment of any information you may receive, individually or collectively, of any large parties coming westward, and give me the nature of transportation required for same; that is, whether such parties expect us to furnish cars, or whether they will be traveling in chartered cars, or by special train, etc.

This information is particularly desirable on the part of the officers, and is also desired by the members of the Triennial Committee located here. So far, we have received positive information of but one party, that is the Boston Commandery. If you know of any large parties we may expect during this month and July, please advise me at your earliest convenience, and oblige. Very respectfully, T. H. GOODMAN, G. P. and T. A.

The following additional Commanderies have announced their intention of being present at the Conclave: Helena Commandery, Helena, M. T.; Clarence, No. 51, Pennsylvania; Hutchinson, No. 32, Pennsylvania; Reed, No. 6, Ohio; Columbian, No. 4, Connecticut; Clinton, No. 5, Ohio; Wyoming, No. 1, Wyoming Territory; Pulaski, No. 12, Tennessee; Hudson River, No. 35, New York; Mission, No. 36, Missouri; Emanuel, No. 7, Missouri; Connecticut Valley, Massachusetts; Alida, No. 1, Kentucky; Ivanhoe, No. 36, New York; Mary Commandery, Philadelphia. Wyoming Commandery, No. 1, Wyoming Territory, has been located at the American Exchange, Sansome street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co's. Express building. Marysville, No. 7, California; DeWitt Clinton, No. 1, Virginia City, Nevada; Mount Nebo, No. 11, Nebraska; Cœur de Lion, No. 9, California; De Paycus, No. 6, Iowa; Mount Sinai, No. 7, Colorado; Constantine, No. 27, Missouri; Jacobs, No. 10, Michigan; Clarence, No. 50, Pennsylvania. Judge S. C. Denson, has sent his handsome white riding horse to Oakland, as a present to ex-Governor Perkins. The Governor is now Grand Commander, of the Knights Templar, of California, and as custom prescribes that such officer shall ride a white horse, his friend, Judge Denson, deemed his well known and well trained animal to be a most appropriate gift for the Governor, who will ride him during the Triennial processions.

The Sir Knights of Chico Commandery, spent a week camping out under the oaks of Bidwell Grove, perfecting themselves in the evolutions.

Order Eastern Star.

Officers Grand Chapter—REV. A. F. HITCHCOCK, Gr. Patron, SUSAN, MRS. MARY A. FLINT, G. Matron, SAM JORD, MRS. KATE J. WILLAT, G. Secy, 207 Tenth St., San Francisco.

Recommendation of the Grand Chapter.

ORD, we heartily recommend it to the individual members of the Eastern Star as worthy of patronage.

"Prove all Things."

Our talented frater who edits the Masonic Chronicle, Columbus, Ohio, reading his Bible, as all good Masons do, came across the text: "prove all things, hold fast to that which is good." He laid it away as a place-keeper in memory, and started out to Indiana, timing his visit so as to be present at the session of the Grand Chapter of the Order of Eastern Star, at Indianapolis, and was captured by the fair daughters of Hoosierdom. He says:

Now having been admitted to the Order, and thoroughly investigated its mysteries, as well as being permitted to be present and witness the Grand Chapter in its deliberations, we are prepared to advocate, more strongly than ever, the introduction of the Order into Ohio.

We have fully proved, and are satisfied that it is good.

A number of years ago a certain form or ceremony was promulgated by one or more brethren, purporting to be a Ladies' degree. This was communicated to the families of Masons in their homes, but the idea was either very crude, or the belief gained ground that the ladies who were the recipients might believe that they were receiving some part of Masonry, or form some other cause, it was not received with much favor.

The Grand Lodge of Ohio, in 1868, adopted the following:

"Resolved, That the 'side degrees,' otherwise called 'Adoptive,' or 'Androgynous' Masonry, are not legitimate Masonic degrees, and do not entitle the recipient thereof to any of the rights and benefits of Masonry."

This, it will be seen, was fifteen years ago, and at that time, and for several years after, the O. E. S. had numberless difficulties to contend with, both from the outside and within her own borders, and we may say right here that the above objection is now entirely obliterated, for every candidate is duly impressed with the fact that the Order is in no way a portion of Masonry, nor does it claim to be.

The able expounder of Masonry in the Keystone, hearing perhaps of this pilgrims thrall in a strange land, gently warns the susceptible fraters of Pennsylvania as follows:

We do not know whether Knights Templar who expect to attend the Triennial Conclave of the Grand Encampment of the United States, at San Francisco, in August next, are aware of the possible perils that may encompass them by the way, and at the end of their Pilgrimage. We see it stated that the General Grand Chapter of the androgynous "Order of the Eastern Star," will meet at the same time and place, and that its members "will be carried at the same rates for transportation as Knights Templar." All Pennsylvania Knights will, of course, be watchful and beware, lest they be captured by the bewitching members of this, to Pennsylvanians, strange order.

In Mexico, each State has a Grand Lodge composed of masters and wardens, who are amenable to the Grand Orient. Officers are elected in December, and the Lodges all work in the Spanish tongue.

Of Women.

Mighty is the force of motherhood. It transforms all things by its vital heat; it turns timidity into fierce courage and dreadless defiance into tremulous submission; it turns thoughtless-ness into foresight, and yet stills all anxiety into calm content; it makes selfishness become self-denial, and gives even to hard vanity the glances of admiring love.—George Eliot.

A mind might ponder its thoughts for ages, and not gain so much self-knowledge as the passion of love shall teach it in a day.—Emerson.

Learned women are ridiculed because they put to shame unlearned men.—George Sand.

Oh, if the loving, closed heart of a good woman should open before a man, how much controlled tenderness, how many veiled sacrifices and dumb virtues, would be seen reposing there!—Richter.

Take the whole sex together, and you find those who have the strongest possessions of men's hearts are not eminent for their beauty.
It often happens that those who engaged men to the greatest violence are such as those who are strangers to them would take to be remarkably defective for that end.—Hughes.

God sends us children for another purpose than merely to keep up the race; to enlarge our hearts; to make us unselfish, and full of kindly sympathies and affection; to give our souls higher aims, and to call out our faculties to extend enterprise and exertion; to bring round our firesides bright faces and happy smiles, and loving, tender hearts.—Mary Howitt.

Women endowed with remarkable sensibility enjoy much, but they also suffer much. The greater the light the stronger will be the shadow.—Ann Cora Mowatt.

SELFISHNESS AND HAPPINESS cannot flourish on the same stem. He who cares only for himself never finds what he seeks; he grows narrow, stunted and mean, and becomes at length incapable of any but the meanest enjoyment.
It is as if he were surrounded by flowing streams, and, though athirst, has not the power to drink of them. It is only the man of generous impulses who can know what real happiness is; but to develop these impulses in the right direction and make them truly valuable to mankind, thoughtful intelligence and wise discretion are indispensable.

Baby is Dead.

"Baby is dead!" Three little words passing along the telegraph line, copied somewhere and soon forgotten. But after all was quiet again, I leaned my head upon my hand and fell into a deep reverie of all that those words may mean.

Somewhere—a dainty form, still and cold, unclasped by a mother's arms to-night. Eyes that yesterday were bright and blue as skies of June, dropped to-night beneath white lids that no voice can ever raise again.

Two soft hands, whose rose-leaf fingers were wont to wander lovingly around mother's neck and face, loosely holding white buds, quietly folded in confined rest.

Soft lips, yesterday rippling with laughter, sweet as woodland brook falls, gay as a trill of forest bird, to-night unresponsive to kiss or call of love.

A tiny mound in some quiet graveyard.
A silent home—the patter of baby feet forever hushed—a cradle-bed unpressed. Little shoes half worn—dainty garments—shoulder knots of blue to match those eyes of yesterday, folded with aching heart away.

A mother's groping touch in uneasy slumber for the fair head that shall never rest upon her bosom. The low sob, the bitter tear, as broken dreams awake to sad reality. The hopes of future years wrecked, like fair ships that suddenly go down in sight of land.

The watching of other babies, dimpled, laughing, strong, and this one gone! The present agony of grief, the future emptiness of heart, all held in those three little words, "Baby is dead!"

Indeed, it is well that we can copy and soon forget the words so freighted with woe to those who receive and send them. And yet it cannot harm us now and then to give a tender thought to those for whom our careless pen-stroke is preparing such a weight of grief.

PNEUMONIA.—One reason why pneumonia is so fatal in the spring is doubtless that people are not aware that the danger of contracting it does not pass off with the period of winter minimum temperatures. On the contrary, as an eminent medical authority has shown, "the latter part of the winter and the spring (during February and until June) is the season of pneumonia," especially of the disease in its compli-

Mining and Scientific Press.

THE MINING AND SCIENTIFIC PRESS is the leading mining journal in America, and enjoys a larger circulation among the more intelligent operators and workers in the gold fields of the world.

Established in 1860, it has firmly maintained its position as a reliable, progressive journal. The information given in its columns has saved millions of dollars to the practical miners, metallurgists, mill men, mine and shareholders
on the Western side of our continent.

Among its contributors are the ablest and most experienced mining engineers, superintendents and practical miners in this country.

The Press gives a condensed summary of Mining News
from the most important mining districts of the country.

New processes and methods of mining are described in its weekly issues. New mining machinery and improvements are frequently illustrated and explained in a manner to be of great value to all interested in mining.

As a scientific and mechanical representative of the Pacific coast it is decidedly popular, and a standard journal
with the most thrifty industrial people of the Pacific States and Territories. Its authority is of the highest order, and its usefulness in its special sphere unrivalled.

Every public library, mining engineer, metallurgist,
mining operator and intelligent mechanic and manufacturer, will find profit by its reading.

THE DAUGHTERS OF FARMERS.—May not the daughters of farmers be both beautiful and accomplished? Some of them are; for beauty is better than mere comely looks, and home accomplishments, likewise, excel those of more ornamental than useful kind. I think the farmer's daughters may, however, safely crave and strive for the ornamental and the mental. None of us must run in advance of our station, so far as to despise it. But we were all created with desires and faculties capable of much development. It must be right to allow the development, and aid it diligently. I have known of young women whose homes have always been upon farms, and still they have given attention to culture and mental growth, while not by any means neglecting the substantial occupations of the household. One young woman, upon whom devolves much of the responsibility of the farm family, has found, and is meanwhile pursuing, as best she can, her personal vocation. To her, brothers and sisters look for sympathy and assistance, yet she finds some hours, now and then, for her beloved art, and not few are the excellent pictures testifying to her persistence in study and work combined, as well as to her patience. In fact, besides the happiness she experienced in using well her God-given talent, she is now reaping the benefit pecuniarily, which she has doubtless, reason to value.—Hazel Wylie in Woman at Work.

BURIAL RIGHTS FOR WIDOWS.—EDITORS PRESS.—I noticed in reported proceedings of the Massachusetts Legislature, a few weeks ago, that "Senator Bruce, of Middlesex, introduced into the Senate a bill giving widows the same rights as heirs in burial lots." I am happy to be able to add that the bill has become a law.—C. I. H. Nichols.

Practical Hints about Glasses.

Persons finding their eyes becoming dry and itching on reading, as well as those who find it necessary to place an object nearer than fourteen inches from their face to read, need spectacles.

Persons under forty years of age should not wear glasses until the accommodating power of the eye has been suspended and the exact state of refraction determined by a competent ophthalmic surgeon.

The spectacle glasses sold by peddlers and by jewelers generally, are hurtful to the eyes of those who read much, as the lenses are made of inferior sheet glass and are not systematically ground.

No matter how perfectly the lenses may be made, unless they are mounted in a suitable frame and properly placed before the eye, discomfort will arise from their prolonged use.

There are three systems of grading spectacle lenses: the English, the metric, and the Prussian. Those made to supply the demands of the trade in this country are carelessly made, and are poor imitations of either the English or metrical system. The metrical scale has no equivalent, is not graded by any uniform rule of dividing the inter-focal spaces, and is therefore unsuited to the exacting demands of science.

The near sighted eye is an unsound eye, and should be fully corrected with a glass, notwithstanding the fact it may need no aid for reading.

The proper time to begin wearing glasses is just as soon as the eyes tire on being subjected to prolonged use.—Medical Herald.

The school authorities of Juniata, Adams county, Neb., have introduced reading daily newspapers in the schools, instead of the readers so long in vogue. The plan is said to work well.

David McClure.

We grace this page with a good portrait of our Grand Foreman, David McClure, and improve the occasion to give a pen-sketch of his life. He was born in Clark county, Ill., in 1843, and educated at the Chicago University. Came to this State in 1856, with his father, who settled at Napa. In his eighteenth year he began the struggle of life as a miner, on Powder River, W. T., and a year later we find him with pick and rocker searching for gold on the Salmon River, in Idaho. Those were restless times, and we soon find our young adventurer on a mustang and Mexican saddle, carrying the mail through the mining settlements and adding to his exchequer by selling the Old Sacramento Union at fifty cents a copy. We next hear of him at Guaymas, Mexico, clerking in a hotel. In a few months he received the responsible position of purchasing agent for the Menu Prieta mine located at San Antonio, 130 miles from Guaymas. While acting in this capacity the French invaded Mexico, the outlook was threatening, and he returned to California in 1864, and soon found employment as a clerk in the New Almaden mine, near San Jose. In 1865 he superintended an army of graders and shovelry along the line of the Western Pacific Railroad in the employ of Cox & Arnold. A few months later he was delving in the mines of Mariposa, and soon drifted to "Old Tuolumne." Here he made a little money, and concluded it was about time to drop anchor. Concluding to study law, he returned to Napa and entered the office of Hartson & Burnell. Hearing of the excitement at White Pine, he dropped Blackstone and Kent, and ran over there to see what was the matter, but soon returned to his legal studies, and was admitted to the bar of the District Court in 1869. Instead of hanging out his "shingle" he felt the necessity of being more deeply grounded in the principles of the profession, and went East, and attended the Law School of the Chicago University. Here he graduated in 1870, and was soon after admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of Illinois. He opened an office in Chicago, but the great fire of 1871 swallowed up office and library. Soon after he returned to California and formed a partnership with Robert Cranch, of Napa. In 1875 he came to San Francisco, and for three years practiced law in connection with Garber & Thornton, and then formed a partnership with the lamented ex-Congressman, John Coghlan. On the retirement of Judge Samuel H. Dwinelle from the bench, he joined him and formed the law firm of McClure & Dwinelle. As a lawyer, Mr. McClure has had a brilliant career. He seems to possess that intuitive ability that takes hold of the real principles of the case, and carries conviction to judge and jury. The Pinney case, perhaps first attracted general attention. The able defense of Duncan is still fresh in public memory. He has been since April, 1881, the special counsel of the city and county in collecting delinquent taxes.

In 1879 Mr. McClure entered political life, taking an active part in behalf of the Republican party in the campaign of that year. The next year his party sent him to the lower branch of the Legislature. It was during this session he prepared the celebrated McClure charter for the City of San Francisco, which the Supreme Court declared to be unconstitutional. In 1882 he was elected to the State Senate, where he occupied the front rank among the law-makers of the State.

Mr. McClure has ever taken a warm interest in fraternal organizations, and almost from the commencement of Society-life he was called to deliver public addresses on all important occasions. He was the first Grand Dictator of the Knights of Honor in this State, and was their Grand patient thought, has before him as bright a future as the most ambitious man could reasonably hope to possess.

It is now evident that the Fourth of July in this city will be celebrated in a manner worthy of the day. The arrangements are complete and will, no doubt, give satisfaction. Our Grand Foreman, David McClure, will act as Marshal of the day, and it is largely due to his patriotic energy that we have a celebration. Let our citizens make this anniversary an occasion worth remembering.

THE ORDER IN NEVADA.—The Reno Gazette, of June 20th says: "J. W. Kinsley, Grand Master Workman of the A. O. U.

W. who had the pleasure of attending the Supreme Lodge, at Buffalo, were glad to see the venerable form of J. J. Upchurch in the chair of the Past Supreme Master Workman. It is understood that the Supreme Lodge intends he shall permanently occupy that honorable position. Perhaps no man of this century has been the means of doing as much good, by quickening the fraternal sentiment, that was even languishing among religious bodies, causing the hearts of the widow and orphan to burgeon with joy and gladness, and the Order will rejoice to see him wear the coronal of honor.

THE official records conclusively show that J. J. Upchurch, was the originator of the beneficiary feature of our Order, and that one A. B. Robbins, who claims this honor, joined the Order four years after this feature had been adopted. There is consequently not a shadow of ground for his claim. The Supreme Lodge has declared that J. J. Upchurch was the founder of the Order, and placed the declaration upon records. This settles the question so far as the Order is concerned. It was a just and proper thing to do. Honor to whom honor is due.

ACCORDING to the U. S. census 756,893 persons died during 1880. The death rate for the whole Union was for that year 15.1 to the thousand. In 1870 the death rate was 12.8 per thousand, and in 1860 it was 12.5. The increase showing for 1880 is no doubt owing to the more perfect and complete returns for that year. At this rate, to-wit: 15 deaths in each one thousand it would only cost $30 per year to carry an insurance of $2,000, were the whole population of the United States members of the Order.

OUR Grand Master, J. T. Roger, is evidently very busy among the Lodges of Northern California. He made an official visit to Ukiah Lodge, No. 33, June 28th, and we understand that he will visit the Lodges on the coast as follows: Westport, No. 207, on Saturday evening, July 14th, when the new officers will be publicly installed; Mendocino, No. 70, on Monday evening, July 16th; Navaro, No. 200, Tuesday evening, July 17th; and Gualala, No. 221, Thursday evening, July 19th.

DURING the last week the nominations and election of officers have brought out a large attendance, and in some of the Lodges quite spirited elections. A majority of the officers, however, have been elected by rotation, excepting the Recorder, Financier and Receiver who, as a rule, have been re-elected.

WM. H. BARNES, P. G. M., of No. 30, is to be the orator at the Union celebration, at Meridian, same date.

CLAY W. TAYLOR, P. G. M., is to deliver the oration at Redding, on the Fourth of July.

WM. H. JORDAN, G. R., of Oakland, was appointed Chairman of the Committee on Good of the Order, by the Supreme Lodge.

DAVID MCCLURE, GRAND FOREMAN, A. O. U. W.

Representative to the Supreme Lodge in Baltimore, in 1881. For three years he filled with great acceptability the honorable position of Grand Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the F. and A. M., has advanced to the degree of Royal Arch Mason. His connection with the A. O. U. W. began in 1878, as one of the charter members of Spartan Lodge, No. 36, being its first Past Master Workman. Mr. McClure is also a leading member of the Independent Order of Chosen Friends, and the special law adviser of the Grand Council in its present legal complications. Brother McClure is fortunately blessed with a highly educated and amiable wife, who takes pride in her husband's success, and the charm of her home. In social relations he is genial, jovial, and is generous to a fault. He is in the prime of life, in excellent health, and with his acknowledged ability, finished eloquence, and habits of

W., installed Warren Lodge, No. 18, a. Carlin, Monday, June 18th, with twenty-one charter members. The following officers were elected: R. A. Kuhn, Past Master Workman; James Marshall, Master Workman; C. F. Williams Foreman; C. W. Hollobaugh, Overseer; A. R. Shively, Recorder; W. A. Perry, Receiver; Charles Hamer, Financier; M. McCabe, Guide; M. Callahan, Inside Watchman; T. W. Fitzgerald, Outside Watchman."

BRO. CHAS. E. CARROLL, P. M. W. of Hercules, has been appointed District Deputy of District No. 5. The selection is a good one and we are assured that he will at once enter into active duties of his office by visiting all the Lodges in his district.

THE officers of all Lodges in this Jurisdiction are earnestly requested to send in promptly their election notices, so that we may be able to correct their Lodge cards.

Home Miscellany.

Old Kitchen Reveries.

Far back in my musings my thoughts have been cast
To the spot where the hours of my childhood were passed;
I loved of its rooms, to the pantry and hall,
But that blessed old kitchen was dearer than all.
Its corners and its table, none brighter could be,
For all its surroundings were sacred to me.
To the nail in the ceiling, the latch on the door—
And I loved every crack on the old kitchen floor.

I remember the fireplace, with mouth high and wide,
The old-fashioned oven that stood by its side,
Out of which, each Thanksgiving, came puddings and pies
That rankled the dainties and dazzled my eyes.
And then, too, St. Nicholas, slyly and still,
Came down each Christmas on stockings to fill.
But the dearest of memories I've laid up in store,
Is the mother that trod on the old kitchen floor.

Day in and day out, from morning till night,
Her footsteps were busy, her heart always light,
For it seemed to me, then, that she knew not a care,
The smile was so gentle her face used to wear.
I remember with pleasure what joy filled our eyes,
When she told us the stories that children so prize;
They were new every night, though we'd heard them Before.

From her lips, at the wheel, on the old kitchen floor.

I remember the window, where mornings I'd run,
As soon as the daybreak, to watch for the sun;
And I thought, when my head scarcely reached to the sill,
That it slept through the night in the grass on the hill;
And the small tract of ground that my eyes there could view,

Was all of the world that my infancy knew;
Indeed, I cared not to know of it more,
For a world of itself was that old kitchen floor.

To-night those old visions come back at their will,
But the wheel and its music forever are still;
The hand is moth-eaten, the wheel laid away,
And the fingers that turned it lie mould'ring in clay;
The hearthstone, so sacred, is just as 'twas then,
And the voices of children ring out there again;
The sun through the window looks in as of yore,
But it sees stranger feet on the old kitchen floor.

I ask not for honor, but this I would crave:
That when the lips speaking are closed in the grave,
My children would gather theirs round by their side,
And tell of the mother who long ago died;
'T would be more enduring, far dearer to me,
Than inscriptions on marble or granite could be,
To have them tell often, as I did of yore,
Of the mother who trod on the old kitchen floor.

The Deacon's Elopement.

"Good gracious, Betsy, if there don't come Brother Skeels riding down the road in his buggy! And as sure as I live and breathe, he's all dressed up."

"Like enough he's drove round to git some flowers to put on Mrs. Skeels' grave," added she, sarcastically. "You lie down there, Tiger, and keep quiet."

The deacon, after a prolonged contention with an offended mare, had persuaded her to be tied, and was now walking up between Maria's beds of pinks and larkspurs, straight toward the front door, instead of coming round to the kitchen, as folks usually did except on very ceremonious occasions, which proceeding on the part of the deacon caused Maria to exclaim:

"My sakes alive!"

"What does all you, Maria? Do set down that bucket of milk and go and open the door for the deacon, can't you?"

"For the land's sake, Betsy, you don't expect me to let in Brother Skeels looking like this, do you? You just go and open the door, while I go and slip on my other dress."

And before Betsy could remonstrate, Maria had climbed up the creaky staircase, and there was no alternative but for her to receive the deacon.

"It does beat all how women will act when there's men folks around," mumbled Betsy, as she proceeded to pull up the Venetian blinds, and open the front door for the worthy deacon, who had been lingering for some time under cover of the honeysuckle vine, which grew on a frame over the entrance, to draw on a pair of black cotton gloves.

"Good day, Sister Elizabeth. A warm day."

"Yes; right warm, I should think, to be riding around the country with gloves and things all on," said Betsy, with great fierceness.

"Jess so!" he replied, abstractedly.

"I reckon you come to see Brother Anson," said Betsy, to his further discomfiture;
"he is just out in the potato patch, hoeing; I'll call him."

"Oh, never mind! don't disturb him, Sister Elizabeth," said the deacon, somewhat hastily;
"I just dropped in as I was going past to see how you were all getting along. I can't stop long.
Hem, it's quite warm."

"You seem to feel the heat amazing, Mr.
Skeels. 'Pears like you would be more comfortable in your store, daytimes, than riding around the country," said Betsy, in a thorny way, that pricked the very heart of what little self-possession he had left; and he was about to withdraw, utterly discomfited, when the low door leading from the "entry-way" opened and Maria appeared, dressed in a manner that would have undoubtedly elicited some satirical comment from her sister's sharp tongue, had not that worthy lady at that moment espied a family of vagabond pigs entering the front gate, which the deacon, in his excitement, had forgotten to fasten, and darted out after them, waiving her sunbonnet wildly, crying, "Shoo!
hie, there! shoo, there!"

Maria seemed a little embarrassed, and the deacon, too, at first, not having recovered his equilibrium, was not quite at his ease, and occupied some little time with his hat.

"Like as not, I'm hindering you from your chores, Sister Maria," said the deacon, finally, having deposited his hat on a copy of "Fox's Martyr's" which lay on the table.

"Oh, no! not in the least, Brother Skeels; I'm right glad to see you," said Maria, in such a modest, coy, coquettish way, that the deacon felt encouraged at once, and moved his chair a little nearer the settee upon which Maria was sitting.

"You have been quite regular to prayer-meeting of late, Sister Maria; its very soothing-like to my soul to see you there so frequently."

Whether the deacon had also divined Maria's motives, and attributed her religious enthusiasm to his eloquent prayers and exhortations "in meeting" cannot be known, but certainly the tender and sympathizing glances she had cast over to his side of the church had their effect upon his susceptible bosom.

"Sister Marier," said he, "this is a miserable world."

"Yes, Brother Skeels," said the maiden sympathetically.

"I don't take no sort of pleasure in nothing since I lost my partner; life seems so lonesomelike," said the deacon. "Scripture says it ain't good for a man to be alone."

"I don't reckon as how you'll never find no one to take her place," said Maria, timidly.

"Ah! Sister Marier, there is them as could make me happy once more, as it were, and make me forget my grief for her as lies in the burying-ground with the long grass waving over her," said the deacon in a burst of eloquence.

But at this juncture the swallows in the big chimney flew up with a loud whirr that caused Maria to start up with a little scream albeith she had been accustomed to these summer swallows from childhood—and the good deacon could not refrain from clasping his arm about her firm waist and entreating her not to be alarmed.

"Don't move till you're calm, Sister Marier."

Whereat Miss Parrat, instead of becoming calm, showed signs of increased agitation, as was perhaps natural under the circumstances.
The large palm-leaf figures on the bosom of her gown heaved wildly and she burst into tears;
then the summer coat sleeve tightened about the round waist, and the maiden's head sank lower and lower, until finally the cheek rested upon the bombazine bosom, and the deacon's voice whispered:

"Marier, you are the being I would have for my second partner; will you become Mrs. Skeels, and make me happy?"

Without waiting for her lover to repent of the offer, Maria whispered gently, "Yes."

It was night. Squire Anson Parrat's oats had been cut and piled in little stacks about the field adjoining the old farm house. The chickens in the cherry tree, beside the kitchen porch, slept peacefully on their perch, and the pale lights of the new moon shone softly over the scene. The inmates of the little house seemed to be resting likewise under a peaceful spell, and all appeared to slumber. Not so, however.
One wakeful being beneath that quiet roof was tossing, restless on her high posted couch. This was no other than the gentle Maria. She was just doing her back hair when Tiger gave a growl, then a loud bark, on hearing what sounded to him very much like the wheels of a rickety chaise, rattling some distance down the pike.

"We are diskivered," said the agitated Maria to herself, in great alarm.

But no. Tiger stopped to listen for the near approach of the wheels, but either he had been mistaken in the noise or the chaise had stopped, for all was quiet.

Maria went on with her dressing. Finally the last touches were added to her midnight toilet; she had tied on her head a coquettish bonnet of a previous fashion, and all was in readiness.

And here let us explain. On the occasion of his recent call, after the tender scene of wooing described above, Deacon Skeels had elicited from the romantic maiden a promise to meet him at the end of the "cow pasture" on the present night, and go off "quiet-like" and be united in the holy bonds in the cosy little sitting room behind his shop. Whether he was prompted to this course by the dread of encountering Elizabeth, or of facing the wrath of some of the other sisters in the neighborhood, who had their eyes upon him since his bereavement, does not appear. At all events, he wished the deed to be done quickly and quietly, and this midnight elopement so pleased Maria, so far exceeded her wildest hopes, her most romantic wishes, that she readily consented to the plan, and hence we find her tonight, skipping along the cowpath to meet her waiting lover, with all the blithesome agility, if not the grace, of a young girl.

She hurried across the pasture so rapidly that when she reached the trying place by the lane fence, where the deacon, the chaise and the old mare were awaiting her, she was entirely out of breath, and had to lean for some minutes against the fence for support, while her lover embraced her through the rails. As soon as Maria recovered somewhat, she mounted to the top of the fence with what little assistance the deacon could render her through the opening between the rails, and prepared to leap into his open arms. She did spring, or rather dropped, but the skirt of her gown caught on the end of a post, and there she hung suspended, her tan-colored gaiters, with attendant ankles and hose, dancing in mid-air, in a vain effort to find a resting place for their soles, while the recreant bonnet fell on her shoulders and her too-fatal false teeth, insecurely fastened, flew out with the violence of the jerk she received. The agonized deacon stood below, uncertain whether to fly or remain.
Gallantry, however, overcame his modesty, and with the encouraging admonition to his love,

"Hold fast there Marier, and I'll unhitch yer clothes," he proceeded to release her.

Maria was likely to "hold fast." She remained a miserable fixture until the deacon hoisted himself to the top of the fence, and by dint of great effort succeeded in "unhitching" the dress, when Maria fell to the ground in a heap, nearly fainting in dead earnest. Only the sight of the moonbeam playing on the silver plate of her front teeth saved her from a deep swoon. She clutched wildly at them, and before the deacon had descended from the fence, had them in their place again. That worthy person had backed slowly and cautiously down, and, when certain of standing firmly once more on level ground, looked around eagerly for the luckless bride, who still lay in the corner, an object of pity as well as of admiration to a bridegroom.

Finally they were off, Maria leaning helplessly against his bosom, and declaring vaguely that she would "rather a' died," referring no doubt to her lover having seen her stockings and underwear and false teeth.

When the happy pair entered the little shop, Hymen seemed to smile on them, and the small sitting room seen just beyond, ablaze with the beams of a lamp looked like a glimpse of paradise to Maria. The hour had come for which she had prayed and longed for years. She was to be a bride. Henceforth she would be the envy of at least a dozen spinsters of the village and neighboring country. Her cup seemed full of happiness.

The reverend gentleman, whom the deacon had imported for the occasion from "Kaintuck," in a skiff, the previous afternoon, was aroused from a sound sleep into which he had fallen in a wooden rocking chair by the open window, and the brief ceremony was performed which converted Miss Maria Parrat into Mrs. Deacon Skeels.

Let us pass over the scenes that followed,
when the news of the elopement was spread through the village of L— the next morning.
Excitement ran high, and it was not until after the funeral of the oldest inhabitant, some weeks after, somewhat diverted the public mind, that the startled citizens recovered from the "turn" it gave them.

Mrs. Skeels greatly enjoyed the sensation she had occasioned; and took frequent walks past the corner grocery, where she was regarded by the assembled boys and clerks somewhat in the light of a circus. When Betsy became aware of the true state of affairs, on the morning after the eventful night of the elopement, she broke vials of her wrath and poured out the contents, so to speak, and then, dressing herself in her best clothes, stalked like an avenging demon into the village, and, appearing before the frightened Maria in the little sitting room behind the shop, then and there forgave her, and took her and the deacon home to tea, when a metaphorical calf, in the form of a fatted chicken, was hunted down and served up, a savory peace-offering on "the big blue meat dish" in honor of the returning bride.—

Tornadoes.

Sergt. John P. Finley, Signal Service officer at Kansas City, Mo., has published, in a pamphlet on tornadoes, some useful directions concerning the course to be taken to escape the attending danger. The inhabitant of a tornado-frequented district must be watchful in the season of visitations, for he can never know when the destruction will come upon him. On the first sign of the approaching vortex he must run —always to the north, unless by going in that direction he will have to cross the entire path of the storm. If he is nearer to the southern edge than to the center of the probable path, he may go south, bearing slightly east, but in no event run directly to the east or northeast. It is impossible to save any building which may lie in the path of the tornado, or any property that cannot be got out of its way. No material, no method of construction, can be competent to resist the raging destruction. Nothing rising above the ground can escape it.

The most practicable measure of precaution is to construct a "dug-out" at some suitable point, within easy distance from the house, to serve as a place of refuge or shelter. The retreat should be entirely underground, with a roof at least three feet thick, not rising above the surface of the earth, and entered from the northern or eastern side. A "cellar cave" may be constructed from the cellar, if the house has one, to serve as a substitute for the "dug-out." It should be excavated from the west wall of the cellar, toward the west, and should be made as complete and secure as the "dug-out." If, however, the storm cannot be escaped, if no refuge is at hand, or there is not time to get to it, the safest thing to do is to place one's self against the west wall of the cellar, face toward or against the south wall, as near the southwest corner as possible. The northeast quarter is in any case a fatal position, and should always be avoided. If one is actually overtaken by the tornado, his only resource is to cast himself face downward upon the ground, with his head to the east and his arms thrown over his head to protect it. If a stump or large stone, or anything heavy, that the wind will not blow over, is near, he may get a trifle of protection by throwing himself to the eastward of it. If in a house with no cellar, he should get into the west room, on the ground floor, if possible, and away from all stoves and heavy furniture.

The people of towns might find it to their advantage to provide for having a watch, to be on duty on all days when the air bears the pre-monitory symptoms of a violent wind-storm, to give a signal to the whole population on the appearance of the first real threatening signs. The signs of the formation and approach of a tornado cloud are distinct and sufficiently suggestive to afford opportunity for timely and concerted action. Sergeant Finley, is continuing, his investigations of the phenomena of tornadoes, and he has prepared three full schedules of minute inquiries calling for the facts attendant upon the appearance of the storms, which he sends to persons who were within the path of one, who were on the outer edge of the path, and who were within 10 to 100 miles from it.

Wanted—a Tale Bearer.

(Written by ELISE ANGEL.)

Two sisters sat together at the sitting-room table. There were pens and ink, writing paper, and a host of school books. Any one looking in would have seen a pair of studious girls conversing about their lessons; but Aunt Lizzie, sewing by the window, knew better; for she had been listening to their talk for some time.

Not that they knew it, for dearly as they loved their companionable young aunt, they did not want her to know what they were saying on that occasion. It was a secret, and a very important one. If she had not seen them casting stealthy looks in her direction, followed by their heads coming in contact, while they whispered in each other's ears, she would not have cared a straw, but she was woman enough to know that mischief of some kind, was brewing, and she was determined to find out what it was. So she chirped to her bird, and hummed a little tune over her work. She even turned her chair to see what was going on in the street. The stratagem had the desired effect, for her nieces stopped whispering, and conversed in a subdued tone, not too low, however, for her to catch the drift of their talk.

"Yes," said Edna, nodding her brown head decidedly over her history, "the best thing we can do is to put a note on Miss McNutt's table. Then she can watch Clara for herself."
"Yes," responded Dora, nodding back over her arithmetic; "if we must report her, that will be the pleasantest way, and she will never know who told on her."

"Shame, girls!" exclaimed aunt Lizzie. "I hate tattlers!"

Two very red faces were turned toward the window. They could do nothing else but try to vindicate themselves then.

"Why, auntie! All the girls in the class are down on Clara, because she cheats so terribly."

She peeps in her books, and takes notes of her lessons, and stands so high every month, that we are just tired of it. Miss McNutt thinks she is a model of perfection, and it is more than the rest of us can swallow, for we study hard, and are too honest to act as Clara does."

Edna paused, out of breath, and her sister chimed in:

"Yes, auntie; and there is a perfect rebellion in the class. So to-day, at recess, we were discussing the matter. Some wanted to take action at once; just get up an indignation meeting, you know, and expose Clara's trickery. But that seemed too cruel, and for another thing, we want Miss McNutt to discover for her herself, in a way which will implicate no one in the matter."

"I have heard it all," said aunt Lizzie, in her driest tones. "Then you conclude among you, to drop an anonymous note on the teacher's desk, and wound and humiliate the poor girl in the meanest way you possibly could. Edna, Dora, my dear children, I am ashamed of you! For my part, I would rather be Clara Dowling, than one of the girls to take such a sly, underhanded way of lowering her in the estimation of her teacher. Do you know how guilty you would feel after such an act! Why, you could never look Clara in the face again!"

"What would you have us do then?" asked Edna, faintly.

"I would have you honest and kind, my dear. Go to Clara, as you would to your sister. Tell her of the dissatisfaction among her class-mates, on account of her resorting to the means she does in reciting her lessons. Tell her what you have thought of doing. Give her a chance to redeem herself, instead of disgracing her. She will thank you for it, believe me."

A silence of some moments ensued which was broken by Dora. There was a serene light in her blue eyes, a sweet smile about her lips as she said:

"I will speak to Clara. It will be kinder than to report her to the teacher."

Then her sister added—"And I will persuade the girls to give her another chance."

A soft hand was laid approvingly on each head; on Edna's brown braids and Dora's sunny curls as Aunt Lizzie said:

"Now you are my own precious nieces again, and I am proud of you. I do not think your lessons will suffer if I give you half an hour to come and chat with me."

The girls gladly left the table to sit in the pleasant bay window with their aunt, for they loved to hear her talk, and this is what she said to them:

"Do you know, dears, I think a girl, however bright she may be as a pupil, however beloved in her home, if she will tattle about the shortcomings of a classmate and report her slyly to the teacher, that goody-goody girl will do something mean in her turn. I will give you a leaf from my own experience to illustrate this:

"When I went to school there was a pupil in our class like Clara Dowling. She was a nice girl and a smart one, too. All the girls liked her until they found that she stood at the head of her class every month, when some grew jealous and whispered among themselves as you have been doing to-day.

I was very fond of Jessie; indeed, we were bosom friends. I knew there were certain little wiles she employed in reciting difficult lessons; but she was so sweet-tempered and generous that I excused them in my love for her.

Neither Jessie nor myself knew how she was being watched and talked about. If I had known, how soon my friend would have been warned of the danger she was in; and if she had suspected what was taking place I am pretty sure she would not have peeped in her history, or have written the dates on her cuffs. Well, these girls thought of doing all kinds of things; but when they started they didn't have the face to carry out their plans. One said, "Let us tell Mr. Knapp;" but the one that suggested it did not want to do it herself. Another said, "Let us write a note and place it on his desk." But when the note was written, not one would put it there. Don't you see they knew they were taking a mean advantage of a schoolmate?

At last, one of the girls suggested that they should seek for help in another class. She knew that Sarah James was willing, for she had asked her. Now, Sarah was considered a model girl. She was one of those priggish damsels, who, instead of indulging in healthy play or recreation in the school yard, was always hanging about her teacher, and I am sorry to say that Miss Smith encouraged it. So the girls of our class went into league with Miss Goody-Goody, and she carried the tale to her dear teacher. I suppose Miss Smith thought it was her duty to report Jessie to Mr. Knapp, and she did so. Just think of those unkind girls dragging the matter into another class!"

"Oh, that was dreadful," exclaimed Edna and Dora.

Everything went on as usual until the beginning of another month, when Jessie found herself number two instead of number one. She looked over her report, and found that it did not tally with the one she had kept herself. She arose, and walked to the teacher's desk, and, of course, all eyes followed her. To make matters worse, a visitor was present.

"Mr. Knapp," said Jessie, "there is a mistake in my monthly report. I have been perfect in history and spelling, and here I am not."

"There is no mistake, Jessie. Some of your credits have been deducted because you consulted your books during recitation," he answered.

Poor Jessie. She walked to her seat with a swimming head and flaming cheeks; and when she dropped her blushing face upon her desk and wept, I am sure there was not one of those girls but felt ashamed of herself.

A few weeks after this occurred I passed in a composition. I had spent a great deal of time over it and thought it was an exceedingly fine production. Mr. Knapp had a different opinion, however, and did not give me full credits. I was indignant and threw it into the tank for waste paper.

On Friday afternoon, the different classes assembled in the large hall for general exercises; and among other things on the programme, there was a composition to be read by Sarah James. She went forward in a very embarrassed manner, and it seemed such a trying ordeal that she read too low for any one to hear. Miss Smith was so sorry for her pet pupil that she begged Mr. Knapp to excuse Sarah, and offered to read in her place, as she considered the composition too creditable an effort to pass unheard.

Of course we were all anxious to hear it, especially as Sarah was so modest about displaying her ability with her pen.

You can imagine my surprise when I heard my own composition word for word. I thought I must be dreaming until I saw the sensation among my class-mates, for they knew it was mine. Mr. Knapp pricked up his ears as the reading progressed, and then, catching sight of my astonished face, he smiled grimly, and surprised Miss Smith by saying:

"Please pass me that essay. I have a little business to transact in connection with it."

Sarah and I were called forward. Explanations followed, and she was humbled in her turn. You see, she had taken my composition from the tank, copied it, and passed it in as her own, thinking that, as she was in another class, no one would ever know of her deception.

There's my story, girls, and it is a true one. Now, go back to your books, and remember it tomorrow when you start for school.

Edna and Dora did not forget it, and by their firm stand in the matter Clara was not reported to Miss McNutt.

As Aunt Lizzie had said, Clara did thank Dora, and although it came very hard for a while, she did no more cheating.

"I always knew it was wrong," she said to Dora, one day, as they walked arm in arm about the school-yard. "But I used to get so afraid I would miss my lessons, I often peeped in my books from sheer nervousness. It was a dreadful bad habit, and I blush when I think of it. I can never thank you enough for speaking to me, instead of telling Miss McNutt. O, Dora, that would have killed me, I know that it would!"

Among their Christmas presents that year there was one received in common by the two sisters. It was a simple gift. Only a motto, worked in blue silk; but as it was hung over their bedroom door, the eyes of both were wet as they read the inscription: "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."

Fireside Chats on Health.

I noticed in a weekly paper a short time ago the mention of a possible cure for neuralgia by the eating of raw oatmeal soaked in milk. If oatmeal taken in that way would keep the bowels open it might cure many aches and pains, for constipation brings on so many diseases. But the item I refer to reminded me of the directions given me by an experienced nurse, for making oatmeal gruel for my sick boy.

"No, don't cook it much," said she, "the more you cook it the more binding it will be. Let it just barely come to a boil, then turn it out and take it up to him. Don't strain it, make him eat the meal and all if you want to cure constipation. I suppose he won't relish it so well when cooked so little, but then it isn't bad for a medicine, and anybody could get used to it so as to like it after a while, I reckon."

This was a new doctrine to me, for when I first learned about making oatmeal mush I was duly impressed by my teacher as to the desirability of cooking it two hours or more; so I supposed that half an hour for gruel, after it began to boil, was none too much. But now I think I have had some proof that mush is more healthy when cooked only half an hour. I wish some of your Scotch readers would tell me how it is prepared in Scotland.

Night Sweats.

A simple remedy for night sweats, which I have tried on more than one occasion, is the drinking of cold sage tea, a few swallows at a time, during the day and evening, and did not have to use more than one or two cups a day for a few days, before the cure was effected. This remedy was given me by a physician, but whether it would cure a case of long standing I cannot say, but think it worth trying.

Vomiting.

As the fruit comes on, if your children are taken with pains in the stomach by eating unripe or overmuch fruit, give them lukewarm water until they vomit. Or, if they are taken with vomiting, it is a sure sign that there is something in the stomach that needs to be thrown off, and the vomiting will often be stopped the sooner if you assist in the cleansing process by the free use of warm water, instead of being frightened and dosing them with all sorts of medicine to stop it. For several years I never gave my children a drop of medicine; sometimes they would ask for the drink of warm water or a wet compress at night, if they felt unwell. Of course I paid attention to their bathing and tried to give them plain good food to eat, at regular times. The vomiting of infants is often caused by too frequent nursing. Nurse or feed them once in two hours for the first two weeks, then once in three hours; then, if they cry, you may know it is not because they are hungry. I am sure they are sometimes nursed, when their stomachs are already overloaded, just because they cry.

Diarrhea.

When I was quite a small girl, I read that eating from three to six strawberry leaves would cure this disease, and after that if I was ever taken sick in that way, instead of complaining to my mother I used to gather and eat my strawberry leaves, and was very soon well again. Since coming to California I have used cultivated instead of wild strawberry leaves. I have met people who refused to eat green corn because it produced the same effect upon them as a dose of physic; but they would take the physic and suffer the consequences with all the equanimity possible. Let them try the green corn again. I believe they will find themselves the better for it.

Grape Cure.

I have heard several times about the grape cure as practiced in Germany, but can learn nothing of the method. I would be glad if any one knowing about it would tell us what disease it cures, and whether patients are allowed any other kind of food, or do they live on grapes alone? And do they swallow the skins or seeds of the fruit? California has such delicious grapes, let us make all the good of them we can.

Household Hints.

Fruit Canning at Home.

The following was read by Mrs. A. Loomis, at a recent meeting of the Fruit Growers' Association of the Santa Cruz mountains.

Canning fruit, particularly home canning, is a subject in which we are all more or less interested, especially the ladies. I think it is about thirty years since the idea of canning or hermetically sealing up fruit for preservation was first introduced. The old method of preserving with sugar, pound for pound, was the only way, except drying. Then a comparatively small quantity of fruit was preserved and it was carefully put away, and seldom brought out for use, except for company or extra occasions. Now it is as common as any other article of food and a dish of canned fruit on the table is considered indispensable. It can be put up so cheaply that it is within the reach of all, and is in quality, almost equal to fresh ripe fruit. This is in consequence of the cheaper and more perfect manner of preserving or sealing in jars or cans.

My first knowledge of preserving fruit in this manner was, I think, in 1854 or 1855. I saw some on exhibition at a meeting of the Genesee Valley Horticultural Society at Rochester, N. Y. It was exhibited by Mr. Yeomans, in bottles of his own invention, called "Yeoman's fruit bottles." Whether he was the originator of preserving fruit in this way, I do not know, but I had never heard of any before. The fruit was greatly admired and created quite a sensation. These Yeomans fruit bottles were what I used in my first experience, although attended with a little more labor, I have found nothing since that suited me better.

They were made with large mouths and a shoulder for close-fitting corks to be covered with sealing wax. My first year's experience was not very satisfactory for I lost several bottles. I did not understand that I must have the corks thin enough to press down even with or below the top of the bottle before I put on the wax. I soon discovered the cause of my failure, and afterwards had no difficulty. I used tin cans for several years with good success, until they were made of such a poor quality of tin that the effect of the acid on the tin, caused the fruit to spoil, especially strawberries, blackberries, &c. I now consider them dangerous to use and have discarded them altogether.

Since I have been in California, I have used the Mason jar, with the porcelain lined top and like them very well, the only fault I find with them is this: The top of the fruit will sometimes taste of the rubber, which is put on below the cover. Last year I experimented a little, some of the rubber rings had become hardened, with long use, so I left them off, and after screwing down the cover as tight as possible, I brushed a little hot wax around, just below the zinc cover. I was so well pleased with the result that I shall try it again this year. The covers are easily removed by holding a hot cloth on them to soften the wax.

I have been asked, what is your system of canning fruit? I do not think a person can follow set rules in canning fruit only to a certain extent, but there are some things necessary in order to make the canning of fruit a success: First, a person must have a suitable pan or kettle to cook in. I have tried several kinds, and have found nothing I like so well as a large, shallow dish pan, the more surface it covers on the stove the better. The fruit being spread out thin it cooks quickly, and does not require stirring, except to bear it gently under the juice with a large skimmer.

The jars or cans should be clean and sweet. As the fruit is used out of each can or jar, it should be washed clean and thoroughly dried before putting away, particularly tin, as the least dampness is ruinous to them.

The best and purest sugar should be used.

The fruit should be, as far as possible, of a uniform ripeness. If peaches, apricots or pears I want them as ripe for canning as for eating in a raw state. Here some will probably differ with me; there are some who think they must use their peaches green, or before they get soft at all in order to have them keep their shape in the can, which I think is a mistake. I think a peach well ripened on the tree and used as soon as picked, will keep its form better than a green one, if you cook the green one long enough to make it tender, and certainly it is more palatable. There is no flavor to a green peach, and we would never think of eating a green one; why should we use them in a green state for canning?

As to the best varieties, I consider the early and late Crawford, the yellow Alberge, the Morris White, and the variety known here as Burrill's late are the best for canning. Plums I like to use before very soft, but fully ripe. It is a difficult matter to cook plums, without having them break to pieces some, and the only way I know of to prevent it is to melt the sugar, and pour it over them and let them remain over night; this will toughen the skin and prevent them coming to pieces. That might answer if any one only wanted to put up a few, but where there was a good many to be canned it would be a tedious process, and they taste no better. I have tried several varieties in California, and like the yellow egg, Washington, Coe's golden drop, imperial gage, and the late damson the best. The Columbia, Bradshaw, and all the varieties of prunes are better for drying than canning.

Blackberries, raspberries and strawberries I think should be as ripe as possible for canning. I have a way of my own for canning berries which I like better than the old of putting them up whole. After looking them over I put them in the preserving pan, put the sugar with them dry, then with the potato masher, or something that will answer the purpose, I mash them as fine as I can, or try to break every one. This extracts the juice and no water is necessary. My reason for this is so that the berries will not rise to the top in the cans and become bleached and lose their flavor, which they will do if left whole, particularly strawberries.

As to the amount of sugar I use, for any fruit, I am guided by my taste entirely. As for pears, every one knows there is nothing equal to the Bartlett for canning, they retain their flavor better than any other, and require very little sugar, although the Vicar of Wakefield and Duchesse D'Angouleme are good. I also want pears ripe for canning. If large I cut them in quarters or smaller, and only boil them long enough to cook them through sufficiently. Care should be taken to cook them as evenly as possible; if there are some pieces that are only half cooked through I think it would cause the whole can to spoil.

I have heard several complain that their fruit did not keep well in the Mason or glass jars of any kind. I cannot account for the loss as I use nothing but glass, and I never lose any fruit. I am particular to put my fruit in the cans boiling hot, put the cover on immediately, screwing it down as tight as possible, then in 10 or 15 minutes, while they are still hot, I turn the covers again. They will most always move a little. If they are air tight then I feel sure that the fruit will keep; if they are not air tight at the second turning of the covers, by tipping the can or jar, you detect a slight sissing noise, when that is the case, the cover or rubber is not perfect and it will have to be done over again with a new rubber, or leave the rubber off and put on wax as I said.

I always keep fruit in a dark, cool, dry place. I do not like a cellar as the dampness is liable to give the fruit a musty taste.

All I know about canning is what I have learned by experience; every housekeeper has a way of her own. I presume a good many have ways that are better than mine, and I would like to hear from others on the subject, and particularly on making jams and jellies.

DRILLING GLASS.—For drilling holes in glass, a common steel drill, well made and well tempered, is the best tool. The steel should be forged at a low temperature, so as to be sure not to burn it, and then tempered as hard as possible in a bath of salt water that has been well boiled. Such a drill will go through glass very rapidly if kept well moistened with turpentine in which some camphor has been dissolved. Diluted sulphuric acid is equally good, if not better. It is stated that at Berlin glass castings for pump-barrels, etc., are drilled, planed and bored, like iron ones, and in the same lathes and machines, by the aid of sulphuric acid. A little practice with these different plans will enable the operator to cut and work glass as easily as brass or iron.

PRESSURE BATTERY.—A. P. Zazareff has addressed a note to the French Academy relative to an electro pressure battery. The production of electricity is due to the passage of a solution of glycerine, under the action of a pressure which is more or less severe, through a mixture of coal and anthracite. Comptes Rendus.

Memorial, No. 174

In the numerous and various Orders, in this city, we, as Workmen, point with pride and satisfaction to this thrifty Subordinate. Started as it was by a few enthusiastic Workmen in the prime of life, they have added to their membership a large number of young men, and, as a result, the average age of the members of Memorial, 174, is less than any Lodge of Workmen in this city. As to the numbers they have passed the 130 mark, and are steadily, but slowly, adding to their membership. On Monday evening, June 25th, the M. W. degree was given to one candidate and the work was unexceptionably good. The meetings are always interesting, and frequently their orators and parliamentarians, of which they are well supplied, take but little notice of the flying moments; oftentimes to the chagrin of the staid and solid men of the Lodge. It is a notable fact that from the institution of this Lodge they have always had very efficient officers. And the present M. W., Bro. John Blohm, and his corps of assistants, have proved themselves worthy of their important trust and equal to any administration that has preceded this one. A practice and pleasing feature of this Lodge is a marked politeness and fraternal courtesy exhibited to visitors especially those who live outside of the city.

Valley, No. 30.

The term of this Lodge was closed on Wednesday evening, June 27, with a meeting worthy of this Grand Subordinate. Three petitions received for the degrees, three received the M. W. degree and the business closed for the protection of 960 members, without a suspension of a member or a beneficiary certificate. The line that is formed on the last meeting night of each month, reaching to the ante-room is a regular feature in this Lodge. C. N. Singer, M. W. has proved himself an executive officer worthy of his honored place, and will pass into the history of this Lodge, as one of the best Master Workmen who has taken the ivory gavel in Valley, No. 30.

Hercules, No. 53

In the Western addition, corner of Geary and Steiner, in Hamilton Hall, this worthy and thrifty Lodge meets. Here is planted as a sentinel on our western out post, in a little world by itself, Hercules, No. 53, an honor to our Order and the pride of over 250 Workmen who are on her roll of membership. On June 13th, several applications were received and the M. W. degree given to one candidate.

We expect to have a new hall soon, in union with the Good Templars of this place. Bro. Rogers, G. M. W., will pay us a visit on July 19th, and give us a public lecture in behalf of the A. O. U. W. We expect a large turn out, which there is no doubt of, and expect it to be the means of adding new members to the A. O. U. W. More anon.

General Items.

This is the way a Buffalo paper put it: "The Supreme Lodge was opened in ample form on the Grand Lodge degree."

Bro. J. J. Upchurch, founder of the A. O. U. W., attended the Supreme Lodge.

The Censor says the tide is turning in Iowa. "It is believed that many other Lodges are debating the question of a return to the Supreme Lodge." Here is the telegram: "Dallas Lodge, No. 98, of Perry, Iowa, re-organized with thirty-four members; arrears fully paid; new officers elected and installed."

The membership of the Order is now over 120,000.

Correspondence.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 18, 1883.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—Our Lodges in this semi-tropic clime, like "our vines, and our wines, our oranges, lemons and limes," are in a most flourishing condition, and enjoying a season of great prosperity.

You have already given an account in your journal of the institution of a new Lodge, at our neighboring town, the lively, go ahead, prospering and pretty Pomona, which, by the way, it is said is to be in the near future, the second place of importance in this beautiful county of Los Angeles; and as El Pueblo de Los Angeles, (the City of the Angels), is conceded to be, by impartial and unprejudiced travelers who should certainly know, the second city of California in point of general prosperity, improvement, growth, activity of trade, amount of capital being invested, and actual amount of business being transacted; I say, therefore, Pomona is destined to be no inconsiderable place in our great commonwealth, and our Lodge of A. O. U. W., now established there will doubtless have a wide field of operations for the advancement, enlargement and general good of our beloved Order, and judging from her most auspicious commencement, we have good reason to expect that she will be no laggard in the work before her. So much for Pomona, No. 222, long may she wave. I would ask permission here to say a word as regards our District Deputy, Brother Al. Cobler, who is attending to the duties of his important trust, in a manner which is worthy of our heartiest commendation. Besides being a "hale fellow well met" carrying jollity and good feeling with him everywhere, he is also proving himself an untiring, dauntless worker in the cause, a veritable warhorse, and by his attendance at our Lodge meetings, his genial countenance, his cordial manner and his kindly suggestions and advice, he is doing a great work in building up, strengthening, encouraging and speeding the cause of the A. O. U. W. throughout his entire jurisdiction.

A splendid jolly good time was had here (Los Angeles), on the evening of 12th of June, when our Degree of Honor Lodge, Fidelia, No. 11, gave its regular monthly social—this one, I believe, to be the last of the season. The D. of H. gatherings have come to be regarded as the social events of the city, and last Tuesday evening's pleasures were but an augmentation of those which have preceded at the several parties given by the ladies of this Lodge since its organization last fall. The place of the social was in Odd Fellows' Hall, said to be one of the finest Lodge halls in the State, and unquestionably by far the best, largest, and most handsomely furnished in Southern California. On this occasion it seating capacity was taxed to the utmost, but the efficient ushers proved themselves quite equal to the occasion and the large assembly were well provided for and comfortably seated. The hall was decorated in the ladies usual tasteful, elegant, and unapproachable style, and throughout the evening the singing of birds, placed in cages throughout the hall, the fragrance of flowers, and the sweet strains of music from the orchestra, could not but awaken most pleasurable feelings in all who were there. A short programme of musical and literary exercises was gone through with, of which without particularizing, it can be said was of a choice character, and well received by the audience. And then there came the solid enjoyment of the evening, for though it was "tripping the light fantastic," it was certainly solid, unalloyed enjoyment, and if you had but been with us that evening, WATCHMAN, and had the pleasure of dancing with some of our Angeles girls, I think you would have gone home, feeling, as we did, that the D. of H. social was in every way a "huge" success, and look forward, as we do, to the coming of the next. Adios.

CHAS. A. BASKERVILLE.

Picnic Given by the General Relief Committee.

The picnic given by the Relief Committee at the Seaside Gardens and Harbor View Park, on Thursday, June 21st, was an unequalled success. These new places of resort are situated close by the Bay shore, near the Presidio, at the terminus of the Union St. Cable road. The ride was a very enjoyable one combining the cable route and steamcars, and there was ample accommodations for the vast throng in attendance, which was variously estimated from 5,000 to 7,000. The assemblage was made up principally of Workmen and their families and invited friends, and the picture presented as this vast throng of Workmen assembled in groups around the festive board or tripped the light fantastic, was one that is seldom seen. There was a spirit of emulation to please each other, a cordiality and bonhomie manner, exhibited that seemed to cover every face with happiness and contentment. There were three brass bands in attendance to discourage music, and the happy company spent their time as suited their desire in either resort, the Harbor View Park having the preference, as their extensive and more desirable grounds, and races for the prizes which were held here made Harbor View Park the center of attraction on this gala day. All day everything went along smoothly without an incident or accident to mar the festivities. The worthy Workmen and committees who labored so hard to bring about this happy result, we herewith give:

Supreme Lodge.

Second Day.

The Supreme Lodge was called to order at 9:15 A. M., S. M. W. Wm. H. Baxter, in the Chair. After prayer, the Lodge was declared opened. On the roll being called sixty-four Representatives answered to their names, including Supreme officers and Standing Committees.

The Supreme Master Workman read the following telegram:

To the Supreme Master Workman—Buffs, New York:—An unwavering loyalty to the sovereignty of the Supreme Lodge is acknowledged by every Workman in California.

J. T. RODGERS,

Grand Master Workman.

Rep. F. E. Burke, of Georgia, chairman of the special committee, presented the following report, which was adopted by a unanimous vote: Your Committee to whom was referred the resolutions of Representative Myers, of Pennsylvania, touching the contest now prevailing in the State of Iowa between the Grand Lodge of that State and the parties and so-called Lodges claiming to be the Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., of that State, beg leave to report:

That we deny the right or authority of the so-called Iowa Grand Lodge to use or employ the name of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, or any of its rights, privileges or franchises, and that this Supreme Lodge is determined to contest this right before every legal tribunal before which the matter may come, and with this object in view the incoming Supreme Master Workman and the Finance Committee are instructed to employ such counsel as may be necessary for a vigorous prosecution and vindication of the rights of this Supreme Lodge and its Grand Lodge in that State.

That the Counsel thus employed be directed to use all diligence in bringing the proceedings now pending in that State to a speedy hearing, and, if necessary, appeal the case to the Courts of last resort.

That it is the unanimous conviction of this Supreme Lodge that the seceding parties and Lodges of that State acted hastily and unadvisedly, and that, in their attempt to usurp the rights and privileges of this organization, they will be resisted in every way known to the law, by this Supreme Lodge.

We further recommend that should any of the seceding Lodges, as Lodges, desire to return to their allegiance to this body, through its recognized and legal Grand Lodge of Iowa, that authority to do so be granted, upon written application of such Lodge, by the Grand Master Workman of that State, whenever such petitioning Lodge or Lodges pay up all relief calls and arrearages due. Such written application shall set forth specifically the financial condition of the petitioning body or bodies, the number of Master Workman degree members thereto belonging, and such other information as may be deemed necessary to a full showing of the status of the petitioning Lodge or Lodges.

We recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the loyal Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., in the State of Iowa, reorganized by the authority and operating under the supervision of this Supreme Lodge, is again declared to be the only legal Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W. in that jurisdiction.

Resolved, That we hereby affirm and announce our unalterable purpose to maintain and defend the rights and claims of said Grand Lodge as the only legitimate body of our Order in Iowa, and the only one entitled to use our name or confer our privileges.

Resolved, That in the maintenance of the principle involved in the controversy now pending in the jurisdiction of Iowa, this Supreme Lodge hereby pledges its unflinching encouragement and all necessary material aid.

The morning session was otherwise occupied with routine business, and no measure of importance coming before the Supreme Lodge, it adjourned at noon until Thursday morning at 9 o'clock.

Third Day.

The Supreme Lodge was called to order, Supreme Master Workman, W. H. Baxter in the chair. The report of the Committee on Laws and Supervisions was taken up.

Section 9, Art. 8, of the Supreme Lodge Constitution was so amended that the failure of a member to pay his assessment on or before the 28th day of the month in which said assessment was issued, will stand suspended, without any action on the part of the Lodge or any officer thereof. A proposition to re-instate suspended members upon payment by them of their assessments to the proper officer without any vote of the Lodge was rejected. A proposition to reduce the age at which applicants will be admitted to the Order from 50 years to 40 years was referred back to the Committee on Laws, to report at next annual session. Grand Lodges were authorized to confer the Grand Lodge degree upon Grand Medical Examiners.

The following resolution was offered and adopted:

Resolved, That the action of all Grand Lodges in conferring the degree of Past Master Workman upon Recorders and Financiers of Subordinate Lodges, who have served for two consecutive terms, under the authority attempted to be conferred by this Supreme Lodge, at its session in 1881, be and the same is hereby ratified and declared valid and legal.

The hour for election of officers having arrived the following nominations were made and officers elected. The nominations for Supreme Master were M. A. Fish, of California, and Leroy Andrus, of New York; result of election: Fish, 109 votes, Andrus, 72. ## Gilt-edged Society.

There will never come a time when money will not command the homage of respect, and the man who has a large share of it, be awarded a high social position. The feeling is instinctive. Even in aboriginal society the Indian who has the most ponies, the most showy wampum, or the finest hunting or scalping equipment, is considered a big "bug," and a desirable "catch" by all the dark-eyed belles of the tribe. It is well. In a new country where nearly everybody starts in the struggle of life from the bed-rock, wealth represents industry, sagacity, economy, good habits, and an indomitable will, qualities which deserve to wear the crown of honor. And then the lusty oburgations and outcry we hear against wealth on every hand is an exhibition of the basest hypocrisy. There is not one in the communistic lodge from Herr Most down to the laziest, dirtiest drunken loafer and bummer in the gang who would not instantly and gladly renounce his incendiary doctrines and wild schemes for the reconstruction of society for a marble front and a good bank account.

But while we freely make these concessions, it cannot be denied that our homage of money, as a social endowment is a good deal strained. We are in fact a nation of Mammon worshippers; poverty is the only hell an average American fears, and to miss one's way through the world and come out with a small amount of baggage, is the most unpardonable of sins. And it is not strange that society should globe itself around a big sack of twenty-dollar pieces. There is such magic in them. Not only does society put on its most perfumed manners, but even pew doors fly open and the preacher softens the "terrors of the law" a little, when the millionaire enters. Only the other day, when the engagement of a young lady in the city was mentioned, we heard the remark, "is it a good match." Of course all know what that means. It was not an inquiry after the young man's health, sobriety, good morals, habits of temperance, and economy, but whether he had lots of ducats or great expectations. Possessing the latter, society congratulates the young lady, though her "intended" may be a noodle, a scapegrace, an old debauchee, or a dude the range of whose information is the sweep of an opera glass. Verily money hides a multitude of sins.

Certainly the time has come, and our civilization is ripe enough, when people can afford to give a little attention to other things than the acquisition of money, and should demand something more than its possession in those who ask for social position. The time has come to have a higher comprehension of the true social position, and to choose companions, not because they belong to a certain set, and have a metallic jingle, but because they really possess some mental and moral worth, and can give something to society in return for what society gives them. Mr. George W. Curtis very neatly puts the idea. Mrs. Grundy proposes to introduce a cosmopolite who desires to get the most possible out of life to "a rich man" and is surprised at the cool manner he receives the proffered courtesy. The following delicious bit of conversation shows how philosophically the cosmopolite views this sort of thing: "You say he is very rich?" he asked. "Enormously—fabulously," replied Mrs. Grundy, as if crossing herself. "Will he give me any of his money?" Mrs. Grundy gazed blankly at the questioner. "Give you any of his money? What do you mean?" "Mean?" answered the cheerful cosmopolitan; "My meaning is plain. If I am introduced to a scholar, he gives me something of scholarship; a traveler gives me experience; a scientific man, information; a musician plays or sings for me; and if you introduce me to a man whose distinction is his riches, I wish to know what advantage I am to gain from his acquaintance, and whether I may expect him to impart to me something of that for which he is distinguished."

Mrs. Grundy, who is easily discomfited by an unexpected turn to the conversation, looked confused, but said presently, "Why, you will dine with the Miduses and Plutuses." "But they are merely the same thing," said the cosmopolitan gayly. "You know the story; Mr. and Mrs. MacSycophant, Miss MacSycophant, Miss Imogene MacSycophant, Mr. Plantagenet MacSycophant, Miss Boadicea MacSycophant, and more of the same. One MacSycophant is as good as twenty, Mrs. Grundy, and as I know the Miduses already, and find them amazingly dull, why should I know the Plutuses, who are probably even duller?"

Music of the Future.

The famous Thomas Symphony Orchestra, the grand chorus of five hundred voices, and bevy of notable soloists, have had a brilliant season in San Francisco. Many have fully appreciated this magnificent rendition of the sentiment of the great Masters, many have enjoyed it only in parts, and to many this mighty wave of sound was resolvable into no distinct impression. They submitted to be patiently bored for the sake of fashion. But the grand musical festival reminds us of an old idea we picked up somewhere years ago, that we hand out to the musical esthetes for what it is worth. It is well known that there is a wonderful analogy between sound and color, and that the diatonic scale has its counterpart in the prismatic hues of the rainbow. Not long ago it was asserted by the Philadelphia Ledger, there are both octaves and semi-tones of odor, and that odors may blend into such tuneful harmony with the soul as to awaken vivid memories and reminiscences of the "Long Ago." Now, why may not music, color, and odor be so combined as to afford a triple pleasure to the lovers of harmony. Prof. Maelzel demonstrated some years ago before a delighted audience in an Eastern city, that color was as manageable as sound in producing brilliant effects. Why, then, should there be any mechanical difficulty in the way of so arranging a hall that sound, color, and odor may be made to combine in rhythmic order, and produce a most delightful species of enjoyment? It seems possible that the whole field of sound, from the most dulcet tones to the crash and furore of brass bands and brazen instruments may be accompanied or contrasted by color and odor of equal range of combination. The realm of musical enjoyment is vast, but if harmony could be made to play simulta-

Camping Out.

To the person who has camped out in the California redwoods, a description of the delights attending a vacation under such circumstances, would be tame indeed; and to one who has not done so, mere words would hardly convey the proper idea. The testimony of those who have camped out and slept in the open air, is that this sort of life builds up rapidly and radically. Three months of camping out and sleeping in the open air will do more for the restoration of exhausted brain workers than six months of the usual seaside or mountain hotel life, while the expense of camping is merely nominal.

This is the month for camping and as we write there are hundreds of parties enjoying themselves in the woods and beside the streams in all parts of California. The Santa Cruz mountains are particularly adopted for this amusement owing to the abundance of wood and water accessibility, roads, etc. Up in Mendocino, Lake, and Sonoma counties, up towards the Yosemite, down in Santa Cruz and Monterey counties, are camping parties without number. In some places are camps of 50 families or more as at Felton, Soquel, and thereabouts. But a small party with wagons, tents, etc., is probably the most enjoyable way of camping, there being frequent change of scene and variety of surroundings.

Here in California from the latter part of April, no rain falls for six months; during the other six there is more or less rain, though sometimes in the middle of winter, when

The Sycamore Disease.

Many have noticed the effects of some malady on the sycamore trees, how they were bereft of leaves and generally afflicted, so that they lost their beauty. The work has been attributed to unseasonable frosts, to insects and to other agencies, but Dr. H. W. Harkness, of this city, a noted mycologist, has found the trees to be affected by a destroying fungus. The following paper, from his pen, gives the results of his observation and investigation:

"One of the most interesting of the parasitic fungi, and one whose effects have attracted almost universal attention, is that which annually attacks the sycamore trees of this as well as of the Eastern States. At the usual time the tree puts forth leaves which, to all appearance, are perfectly healthy, nothing unusual occurring until the leaf has attained nearly one-third its growth, when it is struck with a blight which destroys it with the suddenness of a conflagration. The leaves, becoming shriveled and brown, soon fall, the trees in many cases becoming as leafless and bare as in the winter season. After a time, however, new leaves appear, which are comparatively free from disease. This curious process has been repeated annually for the last fifteen years or more, in this State, while in the eastern States it has existed, as Professor Asa Gray affirms, for more than thirty years, and has been variously attributed to frost, the ravages of insects, deficient vitality, etc., but the real cause remained a mystery until about two years ago, when, on examining the sycamores at Niles station, I succeeded in tracing the disease to a minute fungus, a variety of Gloeosporium verrisquum, which attacks the twigs, petioles and nerves of the leaves, producing somewhat different effects, according to the part affected. When the twig is attacked and the mycelium ramifies in the whole circumference of the cortex, the cluster of leaves dies so quickly that the fungus, which can only grow in a living plant, remains undeveloped. When the petiole is infested, the individual leaf dies and falls, but when the leaf itself is invaded, the fungus follows the course of the nerves, appearing to the naked eye like a row of minute dark specks. The leaf is killed for a variable distance on each side of the nerves, but the intervening portions live for a considerable time. Under the microscope these minute spots are seen to be composed of an immense quantity of pale, irregular, club-shaped pores, which are borne on slender pedicels and somewhat adglutinate together. These spores are the reproductive bodies—are, of course, invisible to the naked eye—and are borne by the winds in all directions. The class of fungi to which this belongs, a very large one, is found only in living plants. In April of last year I found a nearly related one upon the scrub live oak of the Golden Gate park.

This, which I have called Gloeosporium quercuum, makes an infested oak thicket look exactly as if scorched by a neighboring fire. It is now becoming a serious question as to how long the sycamore can survive this infliction. Great numbers of the trees at the present writing seem to be absolutely dead, not possessing a single leaf. The tree, which was formerly graceful and symmetrical, has by the continual destruction of the terminal twigs, become scraggy and unsightly, and unless nature provides a remedy for the disease, seems to be in danger of gradual extinction."

THE WIND AND THE WHEAT.—The Stanislaus News gives the following account of the experience of a Merced county farmer: He had 350 acres of winter sown in a sappy and excellent condition; when the heated term commenced it was actually cured as if in a furnace. It still retained a green color, but the stalks if touched would snap and break like pipe-stems. It was in such a condition that he could not handle it as ordinary hay, but had to gather it with headers and header wagons. He said that it was so cured that even the stalks were sweet as sugar cane.

TO PROTECT BRICK WALLS.—Bricks are very porous, and paint very expensive on such a surface. Still brick houses with unprotected walls are always damp after a protracted rain. A cheap preparation that would prevent the water from permeating the brick might be made by mixing a thin wash of Portland or Rosendale cement, with preference for the former. It may be applied in the same way as whitewash.

A CAMP IN A CALIFORNIA REDWOOD FOREST.

neously upon three senses, its possibilities would be infinite! We may here catch a glimpse of a musical festival in the future. Some great master of drill and arrangement may arise, who will bring all the effects possible in music into harmony with the rhythm and cadences of color and odor.

FAST WORK IN A CARRIAGE SHOP.—At the annual dinner of the Carriage Builders' National Association, in Philadelphia, Hon. Phineas Jones told of fast work he had lately witnessed in a carriage factory that turns out from 15,000 to 20,000 carriages a year. He said: "I saw them setting tires. I noticed how fast they put the tires on the wheels. They put on fifty-three sets of tires in fifty minutes. This is work, and a fact. One man put the tires into the oven and took them out after they were heated. There were about sixteen tires heated all the time in the oven, and then there were two rollers driven by a belt revolving all the time, with a strong fire at the rear of it, and when the tires were taken out two other men stood there and put them on. I timed them, and they put on a set a minute. And the man told me that one day, when the tire setter wanted to be away the next day, and it was then five o'clock in the afternoon—he told him those wheels had got to be tired the next day, and he said: 'I will tire them to-night.' There were fifty-three sets of them, and he put them on in fifty minutes. Those are facts. I noticed one man setting tires, and I timed him with my watch. He lit the forge and put on a tire a minute. I said that is lively work."

rain is expected, and most needed, not a drop will fall in two months.

The nights in California are strangely cool. The thermometer may be 100 degrees at noon, and at night, if sleeping out, you will need thick blankets. Snow is very rare on the coast and in the valleys, but upon the mountains it often falls to the depth of sixty to eighty feet. There is really not much need of a tent in summer. Our engraving shows a scene familiar to most campers, and is calculated to make those who are tied to their desks and business long for the fresh air of the mountains and the freedom from care felt by all who camp out.

MOVEMENTS OF SUBMERGED BODIES.—In defending his hypothesis against the attacks of French academicians, Dr. Siemens refers to the experiments of Froude, at Torquay, under the direction of the English Admiralty. He arrived at the unexpected result, that a submerged body, if it moves with a uniform velocity through a perfect fluid, will encounter no resistance whatever. By a "perfect fluid" he understood a fluid free from viscosity or quasi solidity, and in which no friction is caused by the gliding of its particles over one another or over the surface of the body. The luminiferous ether is presumably such a fluid, and the discussion of Siemens' theory cannot be settled until all the consequences of perfect fluidity are duly settled.—Comptes Rendus.

Our National Day.

It is one of the noblest endowments of our nature, that while standing on this fleeting point of time we can look both ways. By memory and history we may in some degree recall the past, and by hope and imagination anticipate the future. We are now concerned with only one great event in the past. Next Wednesday is the natal day of our Republic. There are days that come to us all fraught with such special reminiscence, that it seems to be a duty to put ourselves into an attitude to breathe what is healthful in the passing air. We are such slaves of association that we can most easily think and feel the stir and thrill of great ideas in our country's history, upon the day that comes most fragrant with national memories. And yet it is not possible in a brief article to lift the veil of Time and tell the old story, how two millions of people moved by one patriotic impulse, forsook the plow, shop, counter, and home, to follow the fortunes of their new-made flag over many a bloody field, till victory crowned their efforts at Yorktown. But we shall find the spirit that animated them embodied in the events that immediately led to the declaration of independence. Let us watch the process of a nation's birth!

The movement for independence was not any sudden explosion of heated passion, nor was it the work of any one man or set of men. For months it had been talked over as a "consummation devoutly to be wished," by the mechanic in his shop, the fisherman along the northern coast, the planter in the sunny south, and the pioneers and hunters of the west. It had been warily discussed in town meetings, social parties, in the pulpit, newspapers, by the Committee of Safety, and the Provincial Legislatures. The members of the Colonial Congress were no company of reckless adventurers, who had everything to expect and nothing to lose by a revolution. They were slow, cautious men, who long hesitated and were silently borne on the current of events. June 7, 1776, Richard Henry Lee, in the name and by the special authority of Virginia, proposed this resolution:

"That the United Colonies are and of right ought to be free and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is and ought to be dissolved." This was the first step. It was intended as a feeler. The lightning was in the hearts of the people and only needed an electric touch to cause it to flash upon the world. That touch had been given. But how timidly the great actors in this mighty drama came upon the stage. The resolution was seconded by John Adams. A long and warm debate followed. Many members were afraid to take the decisive step. They still hoped that the eloquence of Chatham, and the influence of Rockingham might effect an honorable reconciliation. It was finally agreed to adjourn the discussion of the question until the first day of July. The time arrived to consider the resolution. Fifty-four members were in their places. The outlook was ominous. The business of the day began by reading a letter from General Washington, who returned the whole number of men under his command who were fit for duty as seven thousand, seven hundred and fifty-four. Many of these were volunteers for a year, whose time of service was nearly out; all needed money, clothing, and ammunition, and Congress had no credit, and no power to levy a tax. Sir Henry Clinton had just arrived before Charleston with a line of battle-ships, and the safety of the place was in doubt. New York was threatened by Lord Howe, with a formidable armament that had already arrived at Sandy Hook. General Montgomery had panted out his brave soul under the walls of Quebec, and the little army that had invaded Canada with fair hope of success, was on the retreat, badly shattered by disaster and disease. The Indians on the frontier were already on the war-path. As yet no foreign power had sent a word of sympathy that could kindle a ray of hope in the bosom of the most sanguine. Such was the state of affairs on the morning of the first of July, 1776. Is it any wonder when the order of the day was announced that for a few moments there was a profound silence. Who could foresee the future? There might be defeat, confiscation, and the scaffold lurking in the silent coming months. John Adams broke the solemn stillness by a speech, which tradition says was impressive, impetuous, and powerful, and like a mighty torrent, swept away every objection; and on the evening of the second day the resolution passed, only one dissenting colony, New York, not yet able to concur. The Rubicon was crossed. The old thirteen British Colonies stepped forth among the nations of the earth free and independent States. A committee was immediately appointed to prepare a formal statement of the reasons of the separation. Mr. Jefferson drew up the paper, and showed it to Adams and Franklin, who made only a few verbal corrections, and Congress entered upon the consideration of the document. For two days its statement of principles and reasons were sharply analyzed, and every word critically scanned. On the Fourth of July, 1776, it received the approval of Congress, and copies were ordered to be sent to each State, and that it be read at the head of the army, and it was everywhere received with an unbounded, spontaneous enthusiasm by the people. As long as this day is cherished in patriotic memory, and the sentiments of that memorable document burn and glow in the hearts of the people throughout the land, the stability of the Union is assured, "One as the Sea but multitudinous as the waves."

A DYING Order like a dying man catches at a straw. The organ of the seceders in Iowa, recently claimed that they were recognized by the Order in Wisconsin. The statement is pronounced by the Wisconsin Advocate as utterly false. All the foundation there is for it, is as follows: A former resident of Monroe, in this State, died in Iowa. His remains were escorted to Monroe by a number of the seceders. The deceased was held in high esteem, and out of respect for his worth as a citizen, the brethren in Monroe, tendered the usual courtesies to the escort and a number attended the funeral. That was all, and the effort of the Iowa organ to make capital out of the kindness of the brethren of Monroe, shows clearly the contemptible straits to which they are reduced.

About Bonds.

In the last issue of the WATCHMAN we had something to say incidentally about the system of requiring bondsmen to secure moneys put in charge of elective officers, and to utter some disparaging remarks in relation to said system. Scarcely had our words found their way into type when the astounding intelligence came that the City Treasurer of Oakland had been found to be a defaulter for a large amount. We venture the prediction that the amount of this defalcation will be lost to the city, and why should it not be so? Dods was elected by the people of Oakland, in 1879. He was reputed wealthy and honest. We believe he was both. He gave what was deemed good and sufficient bonds. The men who became his sureties had a right to expect that the people in their representative capacity would do at least something to protect those who took the responsibility of standing between the aforesaid people and their own acts. They had a right to expect that for a guaranty of the people against loss, they should not be unnecessarily imperilled, by putting absolutely no safeguard or restraint around a public officer to guard him against temptation. The people knew, or ought to have known that no man is so strong that temptation may not overcome him. They knew, or ought to have known that money tempts more men to destruction than most other things combined. It was the business of the city authorities to have instituted a system of monthly, or at least quarterly examinations of the accounts of all city officers who handle money; and the money should have been counted. Had such a system prevailed James Dods would be to-day an honest man, and the City of Oakland nearly $50,000 better off. Had such a system prevailed in the county government of Alameda county, Maro P. Kay would not now be in San Quentin for forgery, and the county would be some $20,000 better off than it is. We know of several instances where the A. O. U. W. has lost valuable members because such a system does not prevail in our Subordinate Lodges. The bond system is a failure. It is wrong in principle and wrong in practice, and should be done away with. Elect men to positions of trust in whom you have confidence, but remember no man is so strong that he will not fall if tempted beyond his strength. He who wilfully exposes another to temptation is as guilty if the man falls, as is the fallen. "Bring us not into temptation but deliver us from the evil one."

So long as our law stands as it now does, Lodges must require bonds of their financial officers. Our advice would be, make them small—very small—but at once make a by-law requiring the Finance Committee to examine the accounts of such officers and report to the Lodge every month, and let such report be conclusive and a bar forever against any proceedings to punish a defaulter for a defalcation afterwards discovered, and a release of bondsmen from any liability up to the time of such report. Such a system would secure good, honest work on the part of the Finance Committee and save many a worthy, but weak or overconfiding brother from wreck and ruin. The end is worthy of the means.

If counties or municipalities, or Lodges, lose money because of their own neglect of duty, and fail to recover from the innocent bondsmen they should have protected, we must be excused if we do not weep our eyes out. Let the guilty suffer, but if the innocent escape, why should we wear sack-cloth and fill our hair with ashes! An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure every day in the week. Let us prevent defalcations instead of trying to get even on our losses by trying to cinch it out of somebody else. Somehow it don't look exactly honest.

WE have paid since the organization of our Order to the heirs of deceased brothers over $7,000,000. Just think of it.

Supreme Lodge Items.

THE proposition to reduce the age of applicants to forty instead of fifty years, was referred to the Committee on Laws, to report at the next annual session.

THE proposition to re-instate suspended members upon payment of back assessments without a vote of the Lodge was rejected by the Supreme Lodge.

SECTION 9, article 8, of the Supreme Lodge Constitution is so amended that on the failure of a member to pay his assessment on or before the 29th of the month in which such assessment was issued, he will stand suspended without any action on the part of the Lodge or any officer thereof.

THE salaries of the Supreme Receiver and Supreme Recorder were fixed at the same amount as last year.

S. M. W., M. W. FISH was presented with a very unique gavel, a relic of the prehistoric days of Niagara, in a very felicitous speech by Bro. Ackner, of Albany.

THE name of the Grand Lodge of Georgia was changed from the "Grand Lodge of Georgia" to that of the "Grand Lodge of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, the Carolinas and Florida."

THE rule requiring that all propositions to change, amend, or alter the Constitution and Laws of the Supreme Lodge shall be forwarded to the Supreme Recorder at least three days before the time fixed, etc., as appears at page 633, was repealed.

THE next session of the Supreme Lodge will be held at Toronto, beginning on the second Tuesday of June, 1884. We hope that the Order by that time will be 150,000 strong.

THE Representatives to the Supreme Lodge were given a pleasant excursion to Niagara Falls. They were met at the Falls by local members and conveyed in carriages to points of interest, and afterwards were served with an elegant supper. There was also, later on in the session, a carriage drive around the city and an excursion in the evening on the lake.

MANITOBA was added to the Jurisdiction of Minnesota, and Arkansas to Texas. These changes were advisable, and will result in good.

THE members of the Supreme Lodge presented to the retiring S. M. W., W. H. Baxter, a magnificent gold-headed cane, elaborately carved, and his Michigan associates presented him an elegant badge.

THE Constitution of New York, with one or two verbal alterations, was approved, and the Grand Jurisdiction and the Supreme Lodge are thus in perfect accord and harmony. A serious conflict at one time seemed imminent.

THE Supreme Lodge was dependent upon Brooks and Vincil, two Doctors of Divinity for their morning devotions.

THE Supreme Lodge, by a unanimous vote instructed the Supreme Master Workman and Finance Committee, to prosecute vigorously the seceding Grand Lodge, of Iowa. It is determined that these secessionists shall not masquerade under a name that does not belong to them. They are labeling their wares with a pirated trade-mark. They are sailing the sea under false colors. It is only in the courts that the rights of the Supreme Lodge and the Grand Lodge of Iowa, can be vindicated. It is clearly a case of usurpation that the courts will not countenance. The delays and quiddities of the law are proverbial, but the final result cannot be doubtful. In the meantime it is understood that the seceding Grand Lodge is in a state of disintegration, and the Supreme Lodge has recommended easy terms upon which the Grand Lodge may permit the seceding Subordinate Lodges to be taken on board the "Old Ship."

Grand Recorder's Department.

HEADQUARTERS of Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., Rooms 40 and 41, St. Ann's Building, corner of Eddy and Powell, San Francisco. H. G. PRATT.

REMITTANCES for the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN can be forwarded to the Grand Recorder. Always enclose statement, separate from the Grand Recorder's, of the amount sent for different purposes. Don't forget this.

HENCEFORTH Receivers will not be entitled to receive the Grand Lodge degree. The law now gives the privilege to Grand Medical Examiners who are members in good standing, of some Subordinate Lodge of the Order. Recorders and Financiers who have served three consecutive years, and are recommended by their respective Lodges. Of course none of these officers will be eligible as Representatives to the Grand Lodge till they have received the degree, as it is optional with Grand Lodges whether they confer the degree or not.

BY official circular the time for the new Degree of Honor Constitution to go into effect is fixed at August 1st, prox. The necessary books and blanks cannot be sooner prepared. If our membership take hold of this business with their accustomed energy there will be a boom in this degree. The beneficial system is simple and admirable—the best in many respects, it is believed, ever devised.

THE cost of organizing a new Lodge of the Degree of Honor, and furnishing it with a full set of the necessary books and blanks has not yet been determined, but will be as soon as the Finance Committee shall fix the price of supplies. It will probably be below fifty dollars including fee of Deputy.

THE new edition of the Constitution will be issued in a few days, and contain the changes made in the general laws of the Order, made by the Supreme Lodge at its recent session. Lodges can now send in their orders and we will fill them as quickly as possible.

A RELIEF assessment for the assistance of the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction may be expected soon. It will be for a small amount.

Degree of Honor.

At last we are in position to give the Degree of Honor a fair trial. We have a Constitution which has been approved by the Supreme Lodge, making the degree beneficial to such as desire it, and are eligible, and a complete code of laws for the government of the Lodges of the degree. No doubt the Grand Master will soon proclaim the new Constitution, when it will at once go into full force. Books and blanks are being prepared with all possible speed by the Grand Recorder, so that the Lodges may be put in good working condition at the earliest practicable moment.

The changes are many and important. The titles of the officers are nearly all changed, and one (the Financier), added. There are some positions in a Lodge of this degree that may be filled either by a gentleman or lady; some that can be filled only by ladies, and some only by gentlemen. The following list will make the matter better understood:

Past Chief of Honor, gentleman or lady.
Chief of Honor, gentleman or lady.
Lady of Honor, lady only.
Chief of Ceremonies, gentleman or lady.
Recorder, gentleman or lady.
Receiver, gentleman or lady.
Financier, gentleman or lady.
Sister Usher, lady only.
Inside Watchman, gentleman only.
Outside Watchman, gentleman only.
Adviser to Chief of Honor, gentleman or lady.
First and Second Maids of Honor, ladies only.

The ritual of necessity will have to be changed to meet the case.

As in most, if not all cases, the officers for the coming term will be elected and installed before the new Constitution will go into force, a Financier will have to be elected and installed afterwards.

The terms in all cases will end on the last of June and December of each year.

The beneficiary feature of the degree is peculiar:

The amount guaranteed to each member of the beneficial department is $500 if there be so many beneficial members at date of death; if not, then one dollar for each of such members.

Each member on applying to become beneficial, must pay one dollar into the beneficiary fund, and one dollar for beneficiary certificate. After that, in lieu of assessments, a monthly payment of fifty cents is to be made by each beneficial member.

Each month the entire sum of all these payments is to be forwarded to the Grand Recorder, and the members have till last meeting of the successive month in which to make another payment to the fund, but no longer.

If these monthly payments and remittances accumulate a fund in the Grand Lodge of one thousand dollars more than sufficient to pay the current death losses, then the Grand Recorder is to notify the Lodges to cease remitting, and the members to cease paying till further notice.

On the other hand, if the funds by the regular process do not come in fast enough to meet the current death losses, then, and then only, is an assessment to be levied in amount sufficient to meet the necessities of the case. It is believed that assessments will rarely, if ever be needed, as fifty cents per month to meet a guaranty of $500 is equal to twenty-four assessments a year in our other Lodges to meet a guaranty of $2,000.

This system has the advantage of extreme simplicity, economy, regularity of payments, and besides will enable the Grand Recorder to settle death losses with more promptness than any other yet devised. It also makes it equally practical for Lodges to meet weekly, fortnightly, or monthly, and probably most of these Lodges will prefer to meet monthly, and on the same night and in the same hall that some Subordinate Lodge meets, the latter adjourning early for such purpose.

We trust our good Workmen will read the Constitution of the Degree of Honor. It can be found in the appendix of the journal of proceedings of last session of the Grand Lodge. Ask your Recorder or Representative to the Grand Lodge to see the journal for this purpose.

Now, if the Degree of Honor does not prove a grand success, we shall despair of the pronounced success of any fraternal society in which the sexes are mingled on equal terms and privileges. We believe there is a glorious future now before the Degree of Honor. All Lodges will not succeed, but most will, we are sure, under anything but the worst possible management, or most adverse circumstances.

It will now be in order to begin the organization of new Lodges all over the State wherever the Workman's altar has been erected. No time should be lost. The quicker we have a grand success or a flat failure the better for the Order.

THE present number of the WATCHMAN contains all that is important in the Supreme Lodge proceedings, besides a large amount of Order miscellany. The editorials dwell on patriotic and fraternal themes of immediate interest. The selected matter, as usual, has been carefully made in view of edifying the home circle. It is not too much to say that in typographical execution, literary merit and as an enuciator and promulgator of fraternal principles the WATCHMAN has no compeer.

STATE SENATOR VROOMAN, of Oakland, and Grand Lecturer, has gone to visit Blue Canyon and other places in the Sierras.

Local Items.

THE A. O. U. W., of Amador, are making arrangements for their grand Fourth of July blow-out, and it is to be hoped that they will get everything in better running order than the fire company did, and that they will see to it that the accommodations are of a kind that strangers coming to the town can get something to eat.

THE Supreme Lodge was emphatically a business one, doing its work this year in an expeditious manner, and doing it well. The Boston session took ten days, the Detroit session seven, the Cincinnati session six, the Buffalo session five. This is marching forward in the right direction.

THE A. O. U. W., of Middletown, intend giving a grand celebration picnic and ball in the evening at that place on July 4th. They mean to do the event full justice.

ASHLER LODGE of Workmen held their regular semi-annual reception on Saturday evening, June 30th, at their hall in the Odd Fellows' Building, corner Park street and Santa Clara avenue.

BRO. EASTMAN made a visit last week to Los Gatos, under a professional engagement as elocutionist at an entertainment given for the benefit of the new Episcopal Church at that place. From him we learn that the brethren of Los Gatos Lodge are getting along nicely, and expect a good increase in membership this term.

BRO HENRY HOEBER, P. M. W. of Valley Lodge, No. 30, A. O. U. W., has been elected Secretary of the Odd Fellows' Mutual Aid Association, in place of Daniel McLaren, resigned. His large experience and extensive acquaintance seems to be a wise selection for this worthy institution.

The Fraternal Institute.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 24, 1883.

EDITOR WATCHMAN:—I desire to say through your columns that the A. O. U. W. Fraternal Institute still lives, moves and has its being, and met as usual on Saturday, 16th inst., in Protection Hall, 32 O'Farrell street, where it will continue to meet on the first and third Saturdays of each month. The meeting was called to order by the President, Bro. E. F. Loud, who upon reaching the proper order of business, called to the Chair, Bro. D. Henderson, M. W. of Bernal Lodge, No. 19, and appointed as Foreman, Bro. Smith, of Golden Gate, No. 8; Overseer, Bro. Crosthwaite, of Memorial, No. 174; Guide, Bro. Herring, of Excelsior, No. 126, who exemplified the work of the Master Workmen Degree in a manner both creditable to themselves and pleasing to those witnessing it; especially can this be said of the M. W., who in the rendering of his part showed a proficiency that could have been reached only through close, careful, and persistent study, a course that will, sooner or later, of followed, insure a high degree of excellence in anything we may undertake. Upon reaching "Good of the Order," Deputy G. M. W., Bro. Wilson, was called on, and in the course of his remarks stated that he had received a communication from the G. M. W., Bro. J. T. Rogers, who desired him to say that he (the Grand Master),

Was in Full Accord,

Not only with the aims and objects of this Institute, but with the manner in which those aims and objects were carried out. This I think ought to be satisfactory to any of my brothers who may have had doubts as to the legality of this Institute, or its right to exist, believing as they said, that it had not the official sanction of the Grand Lodge. Now it being the special prerogative of the G. M. W. to discharge the executive functions of the Grand Lodge in the interval between sessions, and in seeking the interests and welfare of the Order, possessing large discretionary powers, his words and acts carry with them all the weight and importance of that august body, and the late

G. M. W., W. H. Barnes,

Having not only by his consent, but by his presence, counsel, and advice, sanctioned and approved this Institute, it has clearly received, to all intents and purposes, the official sanction and approval of the highest authority in this State. And further proof, if wanting, exists in the fact that the said G. M., in his report to the Grand Lodge at its last session, recognized the existence of this Institute, and to use his own words: "The plan and idea met my hearty approval and under the law permitting the G. M. to hold special meetings etc., I authorized such gatherings to take place," and this report, as we all know, having been unanimously adopted, his action in this matter fully sanctioned by the Grand Lodge in legislative body assembled, the legal right of this Institute to meet in the name of the Order is as clearly and firmly established as that of any Lodge working under a Chapter.

And now comes our present Grand Master with a full knowledge of our manner of working, and with due deliberation throws the weight of his own personal intelligence, together with the dignity of his high official position into the balance in favor of the Institute, and in confirmation of what has gone before. He thus recognizes it as an auxiliary to the proper carrying out of that part of his official duties, requiring him to establish uniformity of work throughout his Jurisdiction: See Art. 6, Sec. 2, Grand Lodge Constitution; and in pursuance of our present course we are but doing our duty as Workmen, by assisting our Grand Master in the discharge of at least one of the many duties that occupy his time and attention.

No one doubts the desirability of a perfect and uniform manner of doing the work—that goes without saying, and I think you cannot but admit that this is the readiest and surest way to attain that much to be desired end.

Then brothers, rally around our standard and assist the Deputies in making the work, in this District, at least, a credit to our organization, second to none in existence.

Let the beginning of this coming term be an epoch in our history, marked by the renewed effort on the part of every officer to become proficient in his work on the principle that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well. Hoping to see at our next meeting a large representation of our brotherhood, each vying with the other in the race for perfection.

I remain yours, fraternally, J. D. T.

Other Jurisdictions.

The St. Louis Overseer says: "We have not lost faith yet in there being 10,000 members of the Order within the Grand Jurisdiction of Missouri before the next meeting of the Grand Lodge."

Massachusetts, in point of numbers, stands tenth in the list of Grand Lodges.

The Overseer says: "The cause for the excessive death rate in Ohio and Kentucky has been the lack of care exercised in the admission of members. There were incompetent medical examiners and gross negligence on the part of existing members. Perhaps, too, the drinking habits of a large share of the brothers assisted and invited the ravages of disease. All that is needed is to guard the portals vigorously, and admit no one who has habits tending to the shortening of life, or who is tainted in any way."

The membership of Maryland, New Jersey and Delaware Grand Lodge Jurisdiction on June 1st was 2,964—a gain of twenty over the preceding month.

Only one Lodge in Maryland reported a loss in membership on the 1st of June as compared with the previous month, and that was loss of but one. The remainder increased or retained their former standing.

The Wisconsin Advocate says: "From all parts of the States come the most cheering news: 'Our Lodge is increasing its membership.' This is good, keep up the work, look well to the material, and the 6,000 will be enrolled before January 1, 1884. Three new Lodges have already been instituted, and five more are under way."

The first death among the loyal members of the A. O. U. W., in Iowa, occurred last month. The beneficiary of $2,000 was promptly paid. This settles the question as to the number of loyal members being sufficient to maintain the standing of that Grand Lodge.

Only seven Lodges of the A. O. U. W., are at present in existence in Nebraska. That ought to be a good field for labor.

Notice of two assessments was given to the Lodges of Pennsylvania, on June 1st. There were 14 deaths.

PERSONAL:—Mr. A. T. Dewey, of the firm of Dewey & Co., proprietors of this journal, is residing at Highland Springs, Lake county, with his family. Mr. Dewey is taking a much needed rest from business cares, and his employees trust he will return from his vacation with renewed health and energy.

The Coming Conclave.

The Eastern press is predicting a brilliant event for our coming Conclave. The New York Sun speaks of it as follows: "These Conclaves have gradually increased in importance until they have passed into the rank of public pageants independently of their special interest to their own members. Indeed, when it is considered that about fifty Commanderies are to take part in the San Francisco display; that 4,000 Knights are to go from the East, thus swelling the numbers of those on the Pacific coast to 8,000 or 10,000; that many of these Templars will be accompanied by their wives or children and that visitors will throng to the show from all quarters, it is not surprising to learn that the local Lodges expect to expend $100,000 on the affair, and that the accommodations of the city will be strained to the utmost."

Triennial Committee.

The weekly meeting of this committee is regularly held at the Baldwin Hotel, and well attended. The Committee on Reception has reported its organization with William Center, as Chairman; W. W. Morrow, Vice-Chairman; Henry Cluskey, Secretary. A committee of five Sir Knights was appointed by the Chairman to attend each incoming train and escort the visiting Knights to their quarters and tender all necessary courtesies. The Secretary was instructed to correspond with Sir Knights at Ogden, Reno, Sacramento, Los Angeles, and Tucson, and request their co-operation in the matter of giving Sir Knights passing those points all the information in their power, and to acquaint them with the action of the committee at San Francisco. The Secretary was authorized to procure proper books for registering the names of Sir Knights attending the Conclave. The Reception Committee will meet every Monday, until further notice, at No. 26 Montgomery street, at 4 o'clock P. M.

At the suggestion of Captain Merry the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the intent and purpose of the Triennial Committee be the fund collected from the sale of San Francisco, and only be used in a manner beneficial to our city and State in the public reception of the visiting Knights from all parts of our country; therefore be it

Resolved, That the general fund of the Triennial Conclave, contributed by the citizens of San Francisco, be relieved of any expense for account of the grand banquet, the cost of which shall be borne from funds contributed exclusively by the Knights Templar of California.

Resolved, That the Executive Committee be informed of the adoption of this resolution by the Secretary of this committee.

The Committee on Horses and Equipments reported that the horses for the Ascalon Club, St. Louis, has been secured. The following was presented as requirements for the grand parade, viz: Horses—For Grand Master, one white horse; for two Past Grand Masters, two gray horses; for one Captain-General, one black horse; for five Heralds for officers, five bay horses; for eleven officers of Grand Encampment, eleven black horses; for ten Marshals of divisions, ten black horses; total, thirty horses.

Equipments—For Grand Master, purple saddle-cloth, gold trimmings and cross in corner. For two Past Grand Masters, same as above. One Past Grand Captain-General and eleven officers of Grand Encampment, white saddle-cloths and trimmings, with black border, and cross (either gold or scarlet cloth) in corner. For Grand Commander and Captain-General, scarlet saddle-cloths, gold trimmings, Templar cross in gold in corner. For eighteen officers and Past officers of Grand Commandery, white saddle-cloths, black border, with Templar cross of scarlet cloth in corner. For ten Marshals of divisions and five Heralds, same as above, except passion cross instead of Templar cross. Five guidons (or insignia pennon flags) for Heralds to Grand officers, as follows: One for Grand Master, two Past Grand Masters, purple silk, one Grand Master cross painted in gilt; one Past Grand Commander, one Grand Captain-General scarlet silk, with Templar cross painted in gilt. After the parade the guidons to be placed in the Pavilion.

Conclave Items.

It is announced that Osage Commandery, No. 19, of Iowa; Ionia Commandery, No. 11, of Michigan; and Holyrood Commandery, No. 32, of Ohio, will participate in the August Conclave. Boston Commandery will arrive in this city on the 15th of August, and St. Bernard Commandery, of Chicago, on the 18th. Dr. Joseph W. Morey, of Santa Rosa Commandery, and C. C. Mason, of Chico Commandery, will act as aids to the Grand Captain-General.

Some three years since an effective organization was formed under the title of the Triennial Union for the purpose of arranging the necessary details for the proper reception and entertainment of the ladies of visiting Sir Knights. The Union has increased materially since its first inception, until now it has assumed an important position in the coming celebration.

A very handsome banner has been placed in front of the Triennial Committee headquarters, No. 26 Montgomery street, inscribed as follows: "Triennial Conclave Committee Rooms," a Maltese cross in the center, with "In hoc signo vinces," 1883 being on each side. It is a prominent decoration of the street.

The Last Sad Rites

Last Saturday afternoon the funeral ceremony over the remains of the late Hon. Jonas Seely, took place under the auspices of Oakland Commandery, No. 11, of Knights Templar, acting for DeWitt Clinton Commandery, No. 1, of Virginia, Nevada. The impressive service of the Episcopal Church was performed at the late residence of the deceased, No. 1403 Jackson street, corner of Durant, by the Rev. Hobart Chetwood, Rector of St. Paul's. The pall-bearers were Sir Knights ex-Governor Blaisdel, Judge Lewis, John Skae, and A. V. Comstock, of DeWitt Clinton Commandery, and Sir Knights Gaskell, Benton, Jones, Wright, Emery, and Shattuck, of Oakland Commandery. At the grave the Templar service was performed by Sir Knight O. C. Wheeler, Grand Prelate of the Grand Commandery of California, assisted by Sir H. B. Sears, Prelate of Oakland Commandery.

Masonic Notes.

The Masonic Grand Lodge of Wisconsin convened at Milwaukee, June 12, in annual session, with about 400 delegates. A strong convention was expected, owing to an alleged shortage in the accounts of Grand Secretary John W. Woodhull. When a report was made on Woodhull's accounts, it was learned that he was short at present about $1,600, having borrowed $1,700 in 1881 to make up a deficit which, in all, would be over $3,000. The funds taken are divided among the Grand Lodge, Grand Chapter and Grand Commandery. It is proposed to break up this trinity of offices in one by allowing each grand body to elect its Grand Secretary. A resolution has been passed to give nothing to the press, and even the names of delegates are suppressed.

A Lockport correspondent of the New York Times reports the finding of a most interesting Masonic relic, the existence of which was unknown until a few weeks ago. It is the Book of Records of Ames Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, No. 88, from March 25, 1824, to Dec. 18, 1851. The records contain the original entry of the visit of General Lafayette, his son, and private secretary to the Chapter on the 6th of June, 1823. The book is now in possession of R. W. Bro. John Hodge, 33d degree, of Lockport, who will, at an early day, hand it over to the officers of Ames Chapter.

The Crown Prince of Germany is an earnest Free Mason, and recently delivered an address before the Royal York Lodge in Berlin, which caused a great sensation and drew forth much comment. The burden of his remarks was that Free Masons should be more progressive, and that instead of clinging to old traditions, whose only importance is their antiquity, they should distinguish themselves by being in the foremost rank of seekers after new and living truths.

One of the oldest Free Masons in England at the present time is Bro. Collier, living in Mottram. He was initiated in the Lodge of Loyalty, No. 320, on the 5th of December, 1821; passed 2d January, 1822; and raised 6th Feb. 1822; he has consequently been a member of the Craft sixty-one years. He became W. M. of the Lodge in 1837, and has been Tyler to it since 1860.

COMPOSED of the best known tonics, iron and cinchona, with well known aromatics, is Brown's Iron Bitters. It cures indigestion, and all kindred troubles.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W., and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN'S progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be partakers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

SELFISHNESS AND HAPPINESS cannot flourish on the same stem. He who cares only for himself never finds what he seeks; he grows narrow, stunted and mean, and becomes at length incapable of any but the meanest enjoyment. It is as if he were surrounded by flowing streams, and, though athirst, has not the power to drink of them. It is only the man of generous impulses who can know what real happiness is; but to develop these impulses in the right direction and make them truly valuable to mankind, thoughtful intelligence and wise discretion are indispensable.

A SURE cure for impoverished blood, pimples, and sallow complexion, is Brown's Iron Bitters. It will produce a healthy color, smooth skin, and is absolutely not injurious.

Supreme Lodge.

Pennsylvania, was re-elected by acclamation. Supreme Receiver, S. S. Davis, of Ohio, was re-elected by acclamation. Nominations for Supreme Guide were Flanders, of Georgia, Forde, of Kansas, Pressnell, of Minnesota, and Carter, of Ontario; result: S. H. Pressnell, 106, R. H. Flanders, 74. W. R. Graham, of Iowa, was elected Supreme Watchman by acclamation. T. F. Temple, of Massachusetts, and Samuel Eccles, of Maryland, were elected Supreme Trustees. Wm. C. Richardson, of Missouri, was elected Supreme Medical Examiner by acclamation.

The Committee on Laws and Supervision presented the following report:

Under consideration the following Resolution presented by the Committee on Laws and Supervision: New York and Vermont:

Resolved, That Section 2 of Article X of Supreme Lodge Constitution be amended by inserting in the 4th line of said section, between the words "and" and "returned," the words "if approved."

The Committee recommend the adoption of the resolution, and that the Constitution be amended accordingly.

On call of the roll the resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote.

The following report was received by the Committee on Laws and Supervision, was received and ordered to be placed on the Records of the Supreme Master Workman's Report under the head of "Relief Law and Fund," which was referred to them, respectfully report: That they approve the action of the Supreme Master Workman and Relief Board in the using of the balance in the treasury to the credit of the Relief Fund for the purposes stated in said report. They approve the decision of the Supreme Master Workman relative to the number of assessments required to be levied in the State of Indiana during the fiscal year of 1882, and only 22 assessments having been levied in that State during said year, we are of opinion that four more assessments should at once be levied, to make up the deficiency.

APPEALS DECIDED.

The Committee on Appeals and Grievances made the following report which was adopted:

BRETHREN.—Your Committee on Appeals and Grievances respectfully report relative to the appeal from the action of the Grand Lodge of California, in the case of R. Pengelly, Document No. 2, p. 23, et seq., that said appeal should be sustained, and the action of the Grand Lodge of California reversed. We are of opinion that, having accepted the Clearance Card of Bro. Pengelly, the Grand Lodge of California cannot suspend the brother for the non-payment of antecedent assessments maturing within the Jurisdiction of California, while this member was a subject of the Jurisdiction of Nevada.

Second.—In the matter of the appeal in the case of Volney Engle, your Committee are also of opinion that the action of the Grand Lodge of California should be reversed, and that judgment of expulsion should be pronounced.

Engle was confessedly a defaulter, having by his own confession converted Lodge funds in his custody to his personal use.

Restitution was made of the funds, and a reprimand administered in lieu of more severe punishment.

Your Committee are of opinion that expulsion was the only punishment which could be administered under the laws governing such cases. They are of opinion that Yerba Buena Lodge, with the concurrence of the California Grand Lodge, or its Grand Master, may restore Volney Engle to his membership in the Order, after having first pronounced judgment of expulsion, but they believe that expulsion must necessarily follow as the judgment in every case where it is shown by proof, or by the confession of the accused, that funds belonging to the Order have been appropriated by its lawful custodian. Recess till 9 A. M., Friday.

Fourth Day

The Supreme Lodge was called to order at 9:10 A. M., S. M. W., Wm. H. Baxter in the Chair. Report of Special Committee on Amendments was received. The following amendments, among others, were adopted:

That the form of application in Section 2, Article 8, Supreme Lodge Constitution, be amended in the third paragraph by striking out all after "order" in the third line and adding thereto and until my Medical Examination has been approved by the Supreme or Grand Medical Examiner or Examining Board." Section 17 of Article 8 is changed by adding, provided, however, should it be impracticable for the Recorder to witness the change desired by the brother, attestation may be made by a Notary Public or an officer of a Court of Record, seal to be attached in attest.

Section 41, of Laws of General Application was amended by the addition of the following:

When a brother has been expelled from the Order under a misapprehension of facts, and such error becomes known to the Subordinate Lodge by whose decision he was expelled, such Lodge may, with the consent of the Supreme or Grand Lodge, as the case may be, or the Supreme or Grand Master Workman, during vacation, reinstate such brother, or order a rehearing in the case, provided, that before such brother can be reinstated he must comply with the provisions of the Beneficiary Article.

The Committee on Laws and Supervision reported that a compliance with the resolution of the Grand Lodge of Georgia, permitting said Grand Lodge to elect five Past Grand Master Workmen, would be in violation of the provisions of the Constitution, and therefore should be disapproved. The recommendation was adopted. The following recommendation of the Special Committee was adopted, to wit:

That the latter clause of Section 8, Article 8, of Supreme Lodge Constitution be amended as to read: Any Subordinate Lodge failing or declining to make returns as above, so as to insure their receipt by the Supreme Recorder during the first week of each month, shall again be notified by the Supreme Recorder, and second notice shall be mailed to the Master Workman, the Foreman, the Recorder, and, if there be one, the District Deputy of such Lodge in arrears, and should such returns fail to be made within one week from the date of said second notice, all certificates under the Jurisdiction of said Lodge shall stand suspended until said returns are made.

The Committee on Good of the Order, to which had been referred the question of reinstating suspended members after they have passed the age of fifty years, made the following report which was adopted:

Section 13, Article 8, Supreme Lodge Constitution provides the only method whereby one suspended from the Order for nonpayment of assessments can be reinstated, viz: by making application in the same manner and form as prescribed for admission to membership. This form of application distinctly states that the applicant is under fifty years of age, hence could not be executed in good faith by one who had passed that period.

The following presented by Rep. Forde of Kansas was adopted.

WHEREAS The Jurisdiction of Indiana has levied

Jurisdictions, and that those existing or falling below the requisite number be forever merged in the Supreme Lodge; was referred to the Committee on Statistics, with instructions to report at the next annual session. Supreme Representative McLean, of Illinois, moved to select the next place of meeting, and the ballot was taken with the following result: Toronto, 116; St. Louis, 15; Chicago, 44.

The following resolution, presented by Past Supreme Master Workman Myers, was adopted:

WHEREAS, Certain papers, and some of them official organs of the A. O. U. W., are publishing a statement or statements, to the effect that a certain person or persons, other than Brother Upchurch, were the originators of the present system of co-operative insurance as applied to the A. O. U. W., thereby leading the public to believe that to them as well as Bro. Upchurch are we indebted for one of the fundamental objects of our Order, when the fact is, that so far as the same applies to the A. O. U. W. the Fraternal and Beneficial features of the Order are the result of the deliberations and efforts of Bro. Upchurch, and to him and him alone, are we indebted for the laying of the foundations upon which our charitable and fraternal superstructure has been erected; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Supreme Recorder be instructed to place upon the minutes the record of the organization of our Order, together with the objects o

for the first year the number of assessments required under the Relief Law, under which it received aid, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the said jurisdiction be released from any obligation to levy any further assessments for said year, providing such assessments have been legally made; and the Finance Committee are instructed to settle with such jurisdiction upon that basis; and it is hereby further

Resolved, That such jurisdiction shall levy twenty assessments for the three years, as provided by such Relief Law.

Memorial from the Committee on Laws and Supervision of Grand Lodge of New York, presented by Supreme Trustee Andrus, made the order of business to be taken up 9 o'clock next day. On motion recess was taken until the next morning.

Fifth Day

The Supreme Lodge was called to order at 9:20 A. M., S. M. W., Wm. H. Baxter, in the Chair. The roll of Jurisdictions was called for the introduction of new business. Representative Conner presented the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Master Workman of each Subordinate Lodge be required to ask this question on the first meeting in each month, in open Lodge: Has the last Beneficiary Assessment been duly forwarded to the Grand or Supreme Lodge?

A document presented by Representative Burke, of Georgia, setting forth that as the A. O. U. W. is a national organization, there should be a total abolition of all governmental or State lines, and that no more Grand Lodge Jurisdictions be allowed as separate Beneficiary jurisdictions, as well as the fact as to who prepared and submitted the original constitution and ritual.

A lengthy report on the Good of the Order, presented by Representative Jordan, of California, was separately considered and adopted. The special committee to whom was referred the recommendation of the Supreme Master Workman in regard to publishing a new digest of the laws of the Order, reported it necessary to the welfare of the Order. Report adopted. The following report of the special committee was adopted:

When a Grand Lodge shall have under its jurisdiction two thousand M. W. degree members in good standing, such Grand Lodge may petition the Supreme Lodge to be set apart as a separate Beneficiary Jurisdiction, with power to collect and disburse, within itself, the Beneficiary Fund, subject to, and in accordance with the General Laws and Regulations of the Supreme Lodge, which petition so made, may be granted by a majority vote of the Supreme Lodge, at an annual meeting. Whenever any Grand Lodge shall have three thousand members in good standing, the Supreme Master Workman shall declare such Grand Lodge to be a separate Beneficiary Jurisdiction with the same Beneficiary Jurisdiction set apart upon petition. Provided, however that no Grand Lodge shall be set apart as a separate Beneficiary Jurisdiction unless the combined number of M. W. degree members in good standing still remaining under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Lodge shall be not less than three thousand, and provided further, that such Grand Lodge so set apart shall, fully comply with the specified conditions.

The effect of the foregoing will be the compulsory separation of Ohio as a beneficiary juris-isdiction as that was the special object of the resolution.

The motion to approve and adopt the constitution and laws of the Grand Lodge of New York was adopted.

Supreme Trustee Vineil, on behalf of the officers and members of the Supreme Lodge, presented Past Supreme Master Workman Baxter, a beautiful gold-headed cane, as a memento of their appreciation of his sterling merits.

Past Supreme Master Workman Samuel B. Myers, at the request of the S. M. W. took the Chair and duly obligated and installed the officers elect for the ensuing year.

The Supreme Master Workman appointed the following committees for the ensuing year:

Finance and Mileage—J. H. Lenhart, of Pennsylvania; W. Warne Wilson, of Michigan, and Thomas F. Temple, of Massachusetts.

Laws and Supervision—Leroy Andrus, of New York; Geo. W. Badgerow, of Ontario, and E. M. Forde, of Kansas.

Representative Wilson presented the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the per capita tax for the current year be ten cents, and that the Supreme Master Workman, with the concurrence of the Supreme Lodge Finance Committee, shall be instructed to apply to payment of the outstanding certificates of indebtedness of the Supreme Lodge, such portion thereof as is not in their judgment necessary to meet the current expenses of the Supreme Lodge.

The thanks of the Supreme Lodge were tendered to the officers and standing committees of the Supreme Lodge who had served the past year.

The thanks of the Supreme Lodge was also tendered the Subordinate Lodges of Buffalo, for the use of their hall, and to the Grand Lodge of New York, and the Subordinate Lodges of Buffalo, for their hospitable entertainment.

The business of the Supreme Lodge being finished, the Supreme Master Workman declared the Supreme Lodge closed, to meet in the city of Toronto, Ontario, on the first Tuesday in June, 1884.

The Closing Scene.

We present our readers with the closing scene of the Revolution. It is Washington taking leave of his generals. There was a cessation of hostilities in 1782. Though general orders announced the cessation of hostilities, and the news was received with almost extravagant demonstration of joy by the army at Newburgh, there were months of weary delay before actual peace was declared and all the worn out soldiers were permitted to return to their homes. Many were discharged in the course of the summer and autumn, but the whole army was not discharged till December. On the 25th of November, New York was evacuated by the British, Washington with so much of his army as remained and Governor Clinton, with the other civil officers of the State, marching in to take possession. On the 4th of December, a ceremony of less pomp, but involving far deeper feeling, took place at Fraunce's tavern, in Broad street, where the Commander-in-chief parted with his companions in arms. In October he had taken leave of his army in an affectionate address; but the parting now was from those officers, with many of whom he had been in the most intimate personal, as well as official relations. Such a separation could not be without great emotion on both sides. "I cannot come to each of you," he said, after a few words of farewell, "to take my leave, but shall be obliged if each of you will come and take me by the hand." Not another word was spoken—hardly was another word possible at such a parting of such men.

Our illustration is copied from an engraving in Bryant's History of the United States.

BRO. J. MEREDITH DAVIES, General Agent for the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, has been a resident of our city for three years. He is known as a prominent and honored member of the leading fraternal societies, and by his general manner, politeness, integrity, and honest dealing with the traveling public, has become a great favorite. Parties desiring information or a trip east will be correctly equipped by applying to J. Meredith Davies, No. 2 New Montgomery, Palace Hotel. Com.

CREAM OF ROSES.—Bro. John R. Williams, chemist and druggist at Stockton, is proprietor and manufacturer of what is known as balsamic cream of roses, for beautifying the complexion, softening the skin, and producing that natural freshness that belongs to the rosy tint of good health. It is not used as an artificial means to change the natural complexion, but as a remedial agent to impart a healthy action to the skin and body. It will produce a glow and freshness of complexion that make the old look young, and the young, fair and rosy. The demand for it is increasing largely. Orders are given for it from cities east of the Sierra Nevada.

BRO. WM. SCHLOTHAN, proprietor of the Potrero Ranch Dairy, supplies pure country milk at the lowest rates. We recommend this dairy to families who wish a first-class article of milk. His depot is at the corner of Third and Howard streets.

A. O. U. W. Financier's Cash Book and Itemized S. A. Report Book.

A Combination of Receiver's Receipts to Financiers, Financier's S. A. Reports to Lodges and Reports of Auditing Committee

[Compiled, Copyrighted and for sale by C. P. HITCH, Paris, Illinois.]

The above two books constitute a complete set for the use of Financiers of the A. O. U. W., and are so necessary for the proper time and labor-saving methodical transaction of Lodge business that every Financier should use them. Lodges, one and all, who have adopted the use of these books are unanimously of the opinion that these most valuable books should be used by every Lodge, in order to make A. O. U. W. bookkeeping uniform throughout the Order. The following Lodges in California are now using these books exclusively:

Sample sheets of the books have been sent to every Lodge some time since, and Lodges not having the books should, in their own interest at once procure them. A complete set will be sent to every Lodge for the very low price of $5. Expressage prepaid by ordering of C. P. HITCH, Grand Recorder, Paris, Illinois.

I most heartily recommend the adoption of the above books, and trust that every Lodge in this Jurisdiction will avail themselves of this new and most simple system of keeping their accounts. The "CASH BOOK" will last a Lodge of 100 members six to eight years, and the "S. A. REPORT BOOK" will last Lodges meeting weekly, 10 years, and those meeting semi-monthly, 20 years.

H. G. PRATT,
Grand Recorder of California.

Music Store and Piano Warerooms.

Anybody desiring of purchasing a musical instrument of any kind should not fail to address or call in person at this leading establishment, located at 420 Twelfth Street, Oakland. The genial proprietor, Mr. E. A. James, or his obliging assistants, are always ready and pleased to display their wares. An examination of the Weber, Decker, and Haines Bros. pianos, and Estey and Sterling organs, kept by this house, will strengthen the reputation they have already gained of being the "leading makes" in the world. A first-class piano and organ tuner, maker and repairer connected with the house. Prompt attention to packing and moving pianos.

Successful Patent Solicitors.

As Dewey & Co. have been in the patent soliciting business on this coast now for so many years, the firm's name is a well-known one. Another reason for its popularity is that a great proportion of the Pacific coast patents issued by the Government have been procured through their agency. They are, therefore, well and thoroughly posted on the needs of the progressive industrial classes of this coast. They are the best posted firm on what has been done in all branches of industry, and are able to judge of what is new and patentable. In this they have a great advantage, which is of practical dollar and cent value to their clients. That is this understood and appreciated is evidenced by the number of patents issued through their Scientific Patent Agency (S. P.) from week to week and year to year.

We are frequently asked this question: "Which is the best route overland?" To this question we invariably refer to Bro. J. Meredith Davies, General Agent of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. Passengers for England and the Continent of Europe should, on arriving at San Francisco, ask or send for J. Meredith Davies, Palace Hotel, and he will assist in the exchange of their prepaid orders or purchase tickets across the American Continent.—Com.

COMPLIMENTARY SAMPLES OF THIS PAPER are occasionally sent to parties connected with the interests specially represented in its columns. Persons so receiving copies are requested to examine its contents, terms of subscription, and give it their own patronage, and, as far as practicable, aid in circulating the journal, and making its value more widely known to others, and extending its influence in the cause it faithfully serves. Subscription rate, $2 a year. Extra copies mailed for 10 cents, if ordered soon enough. Personal attention will be called to this (as well as other notices, at times,) by turning a leaf.

TO TRAVELERS.—We are in receipt of the current number of "TRAVEL," a monthly magazine for the use of travelers, published at 162 Broadway, New York, by the American Exchange in Europe (Limited), of which Senator Joseph R. Hawley is President, and Henry F. Gillig, General Manager. It contains much valuable information for tourists all over the world, put forth in elegant style.

SEASIDE, LINCOLN Co., Cal., May 30, 1883.

Most Respectfully & Warmly,

37 Market St., San Francisco.

GENTLEMEN:—I was much troubled with my work when the Seeder arrived, but I put it at work and found it just what you agent, Mr. D. M. Glover, claimed it to be. I was used to think I had been working myself so hard, when one of my little boys, only eleven years old, could do the same work with perfect ease, and, in fact, do it better. Hoping all your implements are as good as your Seeders, I am,

Yours respectfully,

S. G. ALEXANDER.

GENTLEMEN:—I have tried the Spring-Tooth Seeder I bought of your agents (Smith & Cox) in fall and spring plowing, and for even sowing and thorough cultivating I have never seen its equal. My growing grain proves this assertion, and is noticed by all passersby.

Truly yours,

O. R. JEAN.

Learning to Swim

The great difficulty to the beginner is to learn to keep the proper position of the body after attaining it. This difficulty can only be overcome by using the proper stroke after having placed the body in the correct position.In the use of the arms, the only direction that can be given is to remember that when the arms are thrust forward at the beginning of the stroke, such positions of the elbow and hands should be taken as will make the least resistance to the water. To accomplish this, the hands should be placed palm to palm, and the elbows made to come quite close together, starting them from under the chest. In making the effective part of the stroke, our object is to get a forward motion only. The arms and hands should be so placed as to produce the greatest resistance upon the water. To accomplish this, the palms of the hands should be thrown outward, and the plane of the direction of the stroke of the arms made parallel to the surface of the water.The most important and the most often defective point in swimming is the mode of using the legs. It would be well for a beginner to observe the swimming of a frog, for undoubtedly the same method of using the legs should be adopted by man as is displayed in the model swimming of that amphibian.In analyzing the stroke of the frog, we notice that there is no vertical motion; the whole direction of the force is in a plane exactly horizontal, and is accomplished by virtually opening and closing the space between the knees—offering the sole of the foot as a resistance while kicking, and placing the feet in a position of least resistance while recovering.In accomplishing the first of these conditions —the opening and closing of the space between the knees—the knees should be thrown out, and the contraction of the legs made slowly, in or-der to cause as little resistance as possible to the headway already attained.It will be found that, if we alternate the stroke of the arms and legs by giving propulsion with one while recovering with the other,
a more constant buoyancy will be attained, and for long swims it will be found far less fatiguing. — *Popular Science Monthly.*SHALL WE SMELL BY TELEPHONE? Who shall say that the principle of the telephone may not be applied to other senses than that of hearing and sight? "A few years ago," said a distinguished electrician, recently, "the distance at which you could hear a sound was limited.
Now it is practically without limit. You can smell a flower only at a short distance. I do not see why a telephone for the nose might not enable you to smell a rose in New York, even though you were located in Atlanta. So of the taste and touch. A new application of the principle of the telephone might enable you to remain in Atlanta and kiss your wife in London, or taste a berry in Paris. The telescope has already made a clumsy step in this direction for the sight. We would have thought the man crazy a decade ago who said you could stand in New York in 1883 and hear every note of a concert in Boston. Quite as crazy as the man who now predicts that in 1903 you may sit down in Atlanta, see a theatrical representation in Cincinnati, smell a bouquet in New Orleans, taste a fresh oyster in Baltimore, and shake hands with a friend in Savannah, all at the same time. In these days it is only the impossible that happens."PAINT FOR KITCHEN WALLS.—For a paint or varnish suitable for kitchen walls, that will wash or can be cleaned in some easy manner, where the walls are not hard finished, use linseed oil paint, that is, any colored metallic oxide graded in linseed oil.

Patent Agency.

Inventors on the Pacific Coast will find it greatly to their advantage to consult this old experienced, first-class Agency. We have able and trustworthy associates and Agents in Washington and the capital cities of the principal nations of the world. In connection with our editorial, scientific and Patent Law Library, and record of original cases in our office, we have other advantages far beyond those which can be offered home inventors by other Agencies. The information accumulated through long and careful practice before the Office, and the frequent examination of Patents already granted, for the purpose of determining the patentability of inventions brought before us, enables us often to give advice which will save inventors the expense of applying for Patents upon inventions which are not new. Circulars of advice sent free on receipt of postage. Address DEWEY & CO., Patent Agents, 252 Market St., S. F.

Astrological Predictions.

The papers are again reviving an interest in the Star of Bethlehem re-appearance theory. Not long ago the Inter-Ocean came to this office loaded down to the guards with a learned disquisition on this subject. This theory in brief is, that the star which appeared at the birth of Jesus re-appeared at intervals of about 315 years, up to the year 1572, and that it will blaze upon the world again August 1887, causing a commotion unparalleled in history.

As an evidence that the theory must be correct, the writer in the Inter-Ocean quotes at great length the observations of Tycho Brahe about a strange star that appeared in 1572. But this great astronomer speaks of it as a new star that had suddenly appeared, and diminished in brilliancy until at the end of sixteen months it had wholly disappeared. That star has not been seen since, and all the predictions and speculations of biblical astrologers are based on this one record of a wonderful star.

But one fact noted by astronomers is that the place of this strange star in the heavens during the whole time of its appearance remained unchanged, and that it had no annual parallax. This of course destroyed the comet theory which had been used to account for the wonderful meteoric appearance at the birth of Christ, and it throws discredit over the astrological theory as well. Astronomers have classed the star of 1572 as a remarkable instance of a temporary star, and put it in the list with that wonderful star that suddenly appeared in the right foot of Ophiuchus, in 1604. The star of 1572 was at first very white, afterwards became a reddish-yellow and finally faded into a leaden white like Saturn. The star of 1604, was of the first magnitude and went through all the phases of color as that of 1572. The biblical astrologers find it inconvenient to include this star in their speculations as it certainly destroys their theory of a Star of Bethlehem coming minished, and it is now seen as a star of the ninth or tenth magnitude. They account for the so-called new stars of 1572, and 1604 on the same theory as that of 1866. An unseen star owing to some local disturbance suddenly twinkles with unusual brilliancy and then gradually disappears because the brightness is explained by the fact that at intervals large spots form upon the surface of these distant orbs as upon our own sun.

Were there any records of a star appearing in 312, or 627, or 942, or 1257, or were there any dim traditions of such a starry apparition, astronomers could easily explain its periodic flashes, as in the case of the star Mira, or that of T. Coronæ, to which attention was called in 1866. But the human mind loves the strange and marvelous, and this belief in the Star of Bethlehem has taken such a hold upon the imagination of many, even those not inclined to run after every supernatural Jack-a-lantern that comes along, that it is most likely that astronomers will be more or less drawn into the discussion, and we shall have considerable Star of Bethlehem literature, until after the appointed time in August, 1887, has come and gone.

Yosemite Scenes.

We give on this page glimpses of portions of the Yosemite valley. One is Sentinel rock, called "Loya" by the Indians, meaning "watch tower." Sentinel rock divides the honors with El Capitan and the Half Dome, and is a matchless mass of perpendicular granite tapering off into a peak over 3,000 feet above the level of the valley on the right, and seemingly points its summit into the very sky.

On a partly obscured side of the Sentinel is a fall of water, which descends in a series of cascades 3,000 feet, and on account of its appearance, has been termed "Buttermilk Falls."

The other view is of a towering eminence—El Capitan—which stands at the entrance to the Yosemite. El Capitan is 3,300 feet high, and fills the visitor with awe and admiration as he approaches the wonderful valley.

The Wisconsin prohibitionists talk of running a candidate for the Presidency.

at intervals of 315 years. In 1866 another apparently new star suddenly appeared in the Northern Crown, but close observation soon developed the fact that where this star blazed into prominence, there had been a star of the tenth magnitude in that place. Astronomers were all agreed, that this star was for a short time surrounded by burning hydrogen or hydrogen intensely heated. After shining a short time as a star of the second magnitude its luster rapidly di-temporary cause of the luminosity had ceased.

There is another illustrated theory in what are called periodic and variable stars, like Mira, which varies in luster in a period of 33½ days from the second magnitude to a faintness that requires a powerful telescope to reveal it. It also changes its color as well as brightness. These periodic changes have been carefully observed and recorded with great precision. In such cases the loss of

Wee Maggie.

Dedicated to Miss John Rutherford.

Wee Maggie is 'pepin' on mither's soft knee,
The mother is smilin' a sweet lovin' gleam;
The tears drop down fallin', baptizin' wi' love
The darlin' wee Maggie sent dune frae above.

MOTHER'S SONG.

"The angels are smiling on spirits so fair,
Thy smile sheds a halo on rich, golden hair.
Smile on, sweetest Maggie, my heart loves to see Love's ripple on dimples so charming to me.

Dream on, my fair Maggie, my great love is thine;
Thou art pure as the angels who bow at God's shrine.

Thy immortal spirit is seen in thy smile,
To brighten our pathway and lone hours beguile.

Oh, angels of purity! guard Maggie through life,
When fairest of maidens, or idolized wife;
And that innocent smile, so full of child love,
May expand and enrich Eden homes high above.

Oh, sleep, dearest Maggie! thy clear eyes of blue Shall gaze on God's gardens, to thee ever new,
Though cares may oppress me, thy love is still mine,

Wee Maggie so lovely, thy smile is divine.

I will sing sweetest Maggie a lullaby song,
While sleeping on sweetly, 'midst dream's fairy throng.

Life's sun sheds a splendor o'er life young and fair,
When angels and mother tend with guardian care.

Wee Maggie is smilin' on mither's soft knee,
And gazing in depths of mother's kind eye.
The tear drops now fall not, sweet kisses are given,
And the home and the hearth become a bright heaven.

Polly's California Chickens.

Written by Helen Dreeshner.

"Now, Polly, there's a good chance for you if you're going into the chicken business," said Aunt Pauline. "Widow Wimple is going to move away and offers a dozen nice looking hens at a very low price; half a dozen pullets also, if you would like them."

"Oh, that's good; I'll tell papa, and I must know he'll let me have 'em. But what are pullets anyway?"

"Why, Polly Fletcher, what a baby you are," laughed Ray.

"Well, how could I know? I was never very intimately acquainted with hens till auntie began to keep 'em. Of course, I've heard her talk about her pullets, but I didn't like to ask about them, though now I'm going into them myself, I've got to be posted."

"O, Pollyanthus Fletcher, how you do talk!" groaned Bess, hiding a giggle behind her hat.

"Pullets are young hens just beginning to lay eggs," said auntie, with a real broad smile.

"Then I guess I'll take the pullets too, if you think it would be a paying investment. Papa thinks a good deal of your opinion."

"If you take good care of them, I've no doubt you could soon sell eggs enough to repay him the first cost, if you wish to own them quite independently."

"Yes, I'd like that; just think of the lots of nice things I can have when I get them all to myself; quit claim property, to have and to hold, and so forth."

"Do look at her!" laughed Ray. "Why, Polly, you are actually tossing your head like the fabled milkmaid."

"No matter," said I, "so long as there's no milk on top of it to get spilled. I like to build castles. But there, that makes me think; we haven't any hen house. What in the world shall I do?"

"Jack is coming home for the vacation, and I will send him over as soon as I can spare him, and he will put up one for you. You know he built mine during his last holidays. As for lumber, I should think that there were old boards enough in your back yard, if your father does not want them for anything else."

"Oh, aunty, what a gorgeous contriver you are!" cried I, "I believe there are enough boards out there; there were piles of 'em, but I've been splitting them up for kindling. I'm glad now I was so lazy and always picked out the smallest pieces. How distressed I should be if I had whacked into the big ones, or cut up a cord at a time; why, I shouldn't have had a splinter left for my chicken house if I had."

In a week Jack came home. Meanwhile, I had been out in the back yard every day taking account of stock. I stinted the girls as to the amount of their kindling wood, and made them burn all the rubbish I could rake up. I suddenly developed into a regular diplomatist—not that I know what that means—but the girls said I ought to have a diploma for practical economy, or something like that. Anyhow, Jack came home and we soon began our castle-building. I was to the raising and helped a good deal. I held up the uprights and the cross pieces, while Jack nailed them fast and firm. And I helped level the underpinning and nail on the scantling and arrange the stanchions—no, come to think, I guess stanchions are something they use for cows. Well, any way, I learned ever so much about carpentering for a girl only fourteen years old, Jack said I did; but he wouldn't let me help shingle the top roof for fear I'd fall.

My hen house has two roofs, it is a real aristocratic two-story castle, and the hens roost in the top part. They walk up outside on a board with cleats nailed on it; you ought to see them waddling along all in a row up those hen stairs when it is their bed time. We had to put them up there the first night, but they learned the way to go up themselves in just a little while. Their nests are in the lower part, and it is all clean in there, so I can go in and walk around and get the eggs and take care of the little chicks.

Aunt Pauline gave me all the items she could about taking care of my fowls, and it wasn't her fault at all that I overdid the matter. You see, she told me that I must look out and not let my poultry get any vermin on them; that I must change the straw or shavings the nests were made out of once in awhile, and whitewash the boxes often, and put sulphur in their food sometimes, and if all that did not keep them clean, I must rub a little kerosene, or coal oil, on their legs and under their wings. Well, I knew that their house and everything was clean, so I thought I would begin with the kerosene, because "a pound of prevention is worth an ounce of cure" any day.

I took a rag and a little kerosene—not much more than half a pint, I guess—and I drove the hens into the lower part of the hen house; and then I would catch them one at a time and rub the oil in good on their breasts, and legs, and under their wings, and just a little mite on top of their heads. As quick as got one finished, I would put it out of the door and take another. Of course they got frightened and flew round and round, and when I was putting out the seventh one, the door got out of my hand somehow and all the rest made a break for it and got away; so I thought I'd have to doctor them some other time. But the next morning when I opened the little door and called them down to breakfast, those seven didn't seem to respond worth a cent. They walked as though they had wooden legs, and their feathers where the oil had bathed them were all sticky and draggly; oh! how they did look! worse than drowned rats.

"I've just about killed 'em sure enough!" I gasped, as Jack came through the gate with a feeding trough he had been making for me.

"Why, good heavens! what's the matter?" he exclaimed, looking at them as though he was fairly puzzled.

"I only kerosened them a little last night, your mother said it was good for them."

"But, you must have put on too much, they're fairly blistered." "How did you do it?"

"I dipped the cloth in the oil and sopped it around among the feathers some."

"My goodness, I should think you did!" and then Jack actually laughed, when he knew I felt so bad.

"Whatever can I do for them, Jack? Will they get over it do you think?"

"Oh, yes, I reckon they will in a week or two. Don't they look funny, though, with their pantalettes torn up that way?" He meant the stringy feathers that showed their bare legs through.

I didn't tell the girls and papa anything about the kerosened department in my henery. I didn't want to harass their minds before it was necessary. I hoped the poor things would get better by the next day, but they didn't; they were worse if anything, and had not been onto their regular roost at all. So, then, I began to try to tell, but they didn't give me any good opening, and I hadn't said a word when Aunt Pauline came over to look at them. Jack had told her all about it, and the first thing she said to me was:

"Well, Polly, how are your unfortunate biddies?"

Of course, papa and the girls looked at her, and then at me, and said, kind of as though they were talking in their sleep:

"Unfortunate biddies?"

"So then there was an opening, and I told as fast as I could, and they all had to begin to laugh, and the next thing was to rush out and see them. The poor things were so stiff and hot, I suppose, that they couldn't seem to settle down and burrow in the dust and ashes as the others did, but there they were sitting on their tails with their legs stuck out before them like sticks. You'd have thought they were some new breed of hens just imported with all their foreign manners."

"Well, when the folks caught sight of them, their laughter at first was nothing to the way they laughed then. The girls fairly shouted, and papa leaned up against the fence and shook, and shook, and shook. I can't say but what the hens did look desperate queer. I couldn't help laughing myself, and when auntie handed me a picture of my chicken-house that Jack had drawn for me, I sat right down on my old chopping block determined to immortalize the poor things by putting their pictures along side of it. I named them the Californias. You see I began to feel more lively, now they all knew it, and didn't scold—they couldn't—because they had to laugh so hard. And then Aunt Pauline said they'd be sure to get over it."

"You ought to write a poem about them," said Ray, as she came and looked over my shoulder. "How would this do?"

"This is the house that Jack built.

These are the hens that lay in the house that Jack built.

This is the oil that blistered the hens that lay in the house that Jack built.

This is the cup that contained the oil that blistered the hens that lay in the house that Jack built. This is the Polly that held the cup and sopped the oil that blistered the hens that lay in the house that Jack built.

These are the girls, so heartless and gay, who laughed at Polly, who gave herself away, when she held the cup and sopped the oil that —"

But I won't afflict you with any more of that poem, though she kept adding and adding line upon line till I was sick of it, and told her I wished she would go off; so she went right home with aunt Pauline, to spend the day; Bess had slipped off to school some time before. I went up stairs to sweep the back bedroom; from the window I could see papa fussing around the trees in his nursery, and while I was looking, there was a man came through the east part of the orchard and began to talk to him. I think the man must have jumped over the fence, from the road. I could hear their voices, papa's on a tenor key and his on a bass. I finished my room and sat down to rest, and then pretty quick I saw them leave the nursery and come through the chicken yard toward the house. I dropped the curtain, but of course I looked out through a little parting, and I saw the man stop suddenly, and heard him ask:

"What—what kind of hens are those?"

Then papa began to shake again directly, and I whispered to him, "O, don't mention my name!" but of course he didn't hear, and of course "Polly" was the first word he said. "Polly calls 'em her new breed of Californias! ha! ha! ha! She kerosened 'em, you see, and—" Just then I ducked my head for fear they might possibly look up and see my baleful eye gleaming upon them, for they were coming through the gate into the garden. But before my head went down, I saw that the man was a stranger and he wasn't old. When they had passed on down to the front gate, I went into the kitchen to get papa's dinner. At the table I asked who the man was, and papa said, "Mr. Clay, of Clay's ranch, up the river."

About two months after that my hens were laying quite a good many eggs; the Californias had been well a long time, and one of them had ten little chicks. I had about thirty chickens in all, after the cat had caught six and two got drowned. It was rather late when I got the hens, so aunt Pauline said I had best not try to raise many till I got used to taking care of them. I began to pay papa on the installment plan—a dollar every month or more, if I wanted to, but I didn't want to then, as I was trying to get enough egg money to buy me a new hat for the Fourth of July.

Well, one afternoon papa went into town to get the mail, and Bess and Ray went to call on a new young lady, who had moved into the neighborhood. Bess had a vacation now, that is why she could go. I locked the front door after them and then went to feed my chickens. I wanted to gather the eggs, but I had only a little quart can to put them in, and all the pullets had laid that day, so I had five eggs over when my can was full. I didn't like to go after another dish, so I thought I'd put them in my apron pocket. I said to myself I couldn't forget them. I'd be sure to think of them when I put the other eggs away, even if I didn't tie a string on my finger. I went serenely toward the gate, when all of a sudden the old white hen popped in before me.

"Shoo! shoo!" I said, but she only made a big fluttering and hit the gate, which flew open because it was not quite latched, and, with a great squawk and a cut-cut-cut, she cut through the garden without the least remorse of conscience. I ran and set my pan of eggs on the back porch and started after her. She took refuge in the shrubbery, and I ran noiselessly down the path close to the house with my eyes fixed on her, thinking to head her off, when, without the slightest warning, I came spat against some warm brown cloth and buttons and coat-sleeves. It almost knocked me down, it was so sudden; but the coat-sleeves caught me, steadying me for a second, and then I pushed them away and staggered back a few steps, till I saw a face under a hat. It was the same man whom papa had told about my kerosening the hens. It was Mr. Clay.

"I beg your pardon, child; I hope I've not hurt you," he said earnestly. "I had been knocking at the front door, and as no one answered, I thought I would rush round the back way and see if I could find your father. I would have gone away, but I live quite a number of miles from here, and hated to leave without seeing him. If I've hurt you, however, I shan't forgive myself."

"No, I'm not hurt at all," said I; "only I think I was dizzy half a minute. Now I'll let you in, and papa'll be here pretty quick, because he left me alone and said he'd be right back."

Our key had a string to it, and I had happened to hang it on my neck so I could open the door. I took him in the parlor and offered him the armchair, but he said, "Take that yourself," and then he went and sat by the window.

I had not intended to sit down. I thought I could slip away and leave him. But when he said that I did not know as it would be polite to go, so I sat down in a frightened, sideling sort of way, when crack, crack, crack came from my big apron pocket.

"Ow!" I said; in a sort of whispered scream, and then I caught up my apron and rushed out of the room. I got a dish and emptied my pocket into it. I dare say some of the eggs got cracked when I ran after the hen, but now every one was broken. I washed my pocket and the spots out of my dress. Then I didn't know but I ought to go back to the parlor. I hated to go, yet perhaps Aunt Pauline would say I ought not to leave a visitor in such an impolite way without apologizing. I tiptoed to the door, and took hold of the knob. I couldn't bear to turn it. I wished papa would come. Then I thought of my hair, and tiptoed to the looking-glass to make it smooth; when that was done, I set my teeth and walked fast to the door, opened it and made my boot heels click along the hall as though I wasn't afraid of anybody. The parlor door was open, and I was there in a second. The young man was standing before a picture with his hands behind him. He turned around when he heard me, and I felt my face get as red and hot as a coal almost, for all at once I remembered how I had bounced against his vest. Strange as it may seem, the broken eggs had put that out of my mind till now.

"I—I hope you'll excuse me for rushing out of the room in such a—such a—" I stammered, and couldn't say another word, which was really wonderful for such a rattle tongue as I am.

"Pray don't mention it," he said kindly. "But you must think—" I began to blunder again.

"I promise not to think anything; this, with a little re-assuring nod, was so much like Jack that I couldn't help laughing and said:

"I don't care if you do know, there. It was eggs in my apron pocket. I thought I could bring them in, and then the hen got out into the garden and I forgot all about them till I sat down in that chair."

"That was too bad," said he.

"But it is just like me, for I'm Polly. The one that kerosened the hens you know. I happened to look out of the window and saw you, and heard papa tell you."

"Well, you do seem to have rather a hard time of it."

"Hard? I should think so. Unlucky things just sprout up without my planting them at all. Papa says I'm heedless."

"Never mind, everything will come smoother after awhile. And now that I know you are Miss Polly Fletcher, I will tell you that my name is Wilmet Clay, and I have come to learn how to bud trees, and have a little talk with your father about taking care of them. I think likely you know more about them than I do."

"I have helped papa bud and graft them, too. I get along nicely with budding, but I tipped over the grafting wax twice and made an awful mess on the kitchen floor."

Just then papa came and I was so glad, but not quite so glad as I would have been half an hour before. I did wish that Bess and Ray had come home so that they could have been introduced to Mr. Clay. Perhaps he would have come again if he had met them.

I got my new hat for the Fourth, the prettiest one I ever had. Jack said it was a stunner! Jack came home on an excursion train and he was going to walk into town with Ray and I, but a young man was coming to take Bess in a buggy. Bess was all ready when he stopped at the gate and she looked just beautiful when she took her seat beside him. Mr. Fairbanks is his name, but he is not so good looking as Mr. Clay. They were going to start when Bess said:

"Polly, dear, I've left my shawl, won't you please bring it? I think I laid it out somewhere."

I rushed away toward her room, when I happened to catch a glimpse of it in the sewing room on the machine. I caught it up and ran and tossed it into Bessie's lap. She thanked me and shook it out, and then all at once her face was as red as a beet, and her eyes were full of reproach and horror, and everything.

"Oh, Polly, how could you?" she exclaimed, wapping it up and flinging it out to me.

I saw what it was, and I wanted to sink into the earth; but I only rushed back into her room, and there was her shawl on the bed. I looked at it six times as I trotted out to the buggy, to make sure it wasn't something else. They drove off, and I got myself into the house, flung my bran new hat on the table, leaned my head against the wall, and began to cry more like a funeral than fourth of July. Jack came bouncing in, and Ray rustled down the stairs buttoning her gloves.

"Why, good heavens!" cried Jack; "what's the matter of Polly?"

"Are you hurt, Polly?" asked Ray, anxiously.

"She's sprained her ankle and can't go; you bet, that's it," said Jack, dolefully.

"No-o-o it aint," I sobbed, "but you can't guess what I gave Be-o-ss 'stead of her shawl."

"What was it? Do tell," demanded Ray, beginning to look right and left. "Was that it? Was it papa's shirt?" pointing to where I had flung it sprawling on the floor.

"Ye-e-s" sobbing harder than ever.

"Oh, Polly! But did Mr. Fairbanks see it?"

"Ye-e-s, that's the worst of it. Be-o-ss shook it out and Mr. Fairbanks said 'Permit me, Miss Fletcher,' and was just going to take it to thro-o-w gracefully o-ver her shoulders."

"Ain't that a prank?" said Jack, with a shout of laughter. "But don't you cry any more Pollykins. They'll just make a joke of it and it'll be all right. Do you suppose I would want anybody to cry if such a thing should happen to the girl I was going to take out riding? Of course not. I should just think it was a high-flying lark."

"But Bess was dreadfully mortified. I know she was. And whatever papa wanted to get black and white plaid shirts for is more'n I can tell," I said, trying to swallow the lump in my throat.

"I suppose Bess was mortified just at first," said Ray, "but she's got over it by this time, and is feeling sorry for you now; so bathe your face and come along. You know you want to see the Calathumpian performances."

We saw the Calathumpians, and I had a better time than I expected. When we were eating our picnic dinner, Bess was very kind to me and let me sit by her, and Mr. Fairbanks was real jolly, and did not seem to remember that anything had happened in the morning at all. Mr. Clay was there, and I introduced him to the girls.

Nature in Siberia.

"The history of animal and vegetable life on the tundra," says our author, "is a very curious one. For eight months out of twelve every trace of vegetable life is completely hidden under a blanket six feet thick of snow, which effectually covers every plank and bush—trees there are none to hide. During six months of this time, at least, animal life is only traceable by the foot prints of a reindeer or a fox on the snow, or by the occasional appearance of a raven or snow-owl wandering above the limits of forest growth, where it has retired for the winter. For two months in midwinter the sun never rises above the horizon, and the white snow reflects only the fitful light of the moon, the stars, or the aurora borealis. Early in February the sun only just peeps upon the scene for a few minutes at noon, and then retires. Day by day he prolongs his visit more and more, until February, March, April and May have passed, and continuous night has become continuous day. Early in June the sun just touches the horizon at midnight, but does not set any more for some time. At midday the sun's rays are not enough to blister the skin, but they glance harmlessly from the snow, and for a few days you have the anomaly of unbroken day in midwinter. Then comes the south wind, and often rain, and the great event of the year takes place—the ice on the great rivers breaks up, and the blanket of snow melts away. The black earth absorbs the heat of the never-setting sun; quietly and swiftly vegetable life awakens from its long sleep, and for three months a hot summer produces a brilliant Alpine flora, like an English flower garden run wild and a profusion of Alpine fruit, diversified only by storms from the north, which sometimes for a day or two bring cold and rain down from the Arctic ice."—Chambers' Journal.

The Man of the Future.

There is little use in dreaming about the man of the future, for, for anything we know or can help, some horrid little teredo or other evil-minded insect may learn how to eat the silica-covered grasses, produce a corn disease, and alter all human destinies; but granting that present conditions continue for a thousand years, three changes in man are at least within the range of possibility. The peoples, brought close by electric railways, steamers and education, will, in all human probability, give up the prejudice of race, and largely cross their blood. Past evidence shows that when that occurs, as it did once in India, the dark races give the white races their tinge, but take their outline of form; and the usual man would be a well-formed human being, slighter and rounder than the present European, and with skin of a very light brown, dark eyes, and hair uniformly black. Then the human race will be crowded, and, being crowded, will have a fierce struggle for means, and in that struggle will develop the enduring power of the Chinaman, the best industrious of the world, who will work sixteen hours a day and put will into his labor all the while. The slight, brown man will, therefore, be very strong and industrious. And, finally, he will have had a thousand years of brain toil, will have begun to reject such toil in self defence, and will tend to intellectual quiescence. In short, he is much more likely to resemble a slightly handsomer and browner Chinese than either the European of to-day or Mr. Kay Robinson's hairless, toothless, club-toed, timid, and non-locomotive monstrosity.—London Spectator.

WHEN the late Rev. Samuel Johnson was preaching in quaint old Salem, many years ago, there was a certain member of the congregation, a portly retired whaler, who invariably slept calmly through the whole service. This at length awakened the ire of one of the good deacons and one morning he located himself in the pew of the worthy captain, who, coming in himself a few moments later, promptly went to sleep. The deacon leaned over and shook his arm. "Come, come, wake up; don't sleep in meeting." "Eh! what's the trouble?" says the captain. "I say," repeated the deacon, "wake up." "What's the matter?" responded the captain, "ain't Johnson in the pulpit?" "Yes, of course he is; why?" "Wa'al, then I guess things is going on all right." And the captain calmly resumed his slumbers.

"SAY, Pat, whatever made you go to work for old Uncle Dan? He's the meanest man in the country." "Mane is it?" said Pat; "why, shure an' he's the finest, aisyest-goin' master iver I had, bedad; he gives a man fifteen hours to do a day's work in."

Only a Cent.

Uncle Harris was a carpenter, and had a shop in the country. One day he went into the barn where Dick and Joe were playing with two tame pigeons.

"Boys," he said, "my workshop ought to be swept up every evening. Which of you will undertake to do it? I am willing to pay a cent for each sweeping."

"Only a cent!" said Dick. "Who would work for a cent?"

"I will," said Joe. "A cent is better than nothing."

So every day, when Uncle Harris was done working in the shop, Joe would take an old broom and sweep it. And he dropped all his pennies into his tin savings bank.

One day Uncle Harris took Dick and Joe to town with him. While he went to buy some lumber, they stayed in a toy-shop, where there were toys of every kind.

"What fine kites!" said Dick. "I wish I could buy one."

"Only ten cents," said the man behind the counter.

"I haven't even a cent," said Dick.

"I have fifty cents," said Joe, "and I think I will buy that bird-kite."

"How did you get fifty cents?" asked Dick.

"By sweeping the shop," answered Joe. "I saved my pennies and did not open my bank until this morning."

Joe bought the bird-kite and a fine large knife, while Dick went home without anything. But he had learned not to despise little things, and he was very glad to sweep the shop whenever Joe would let him, even though he received for his work only a cent.

OUR BIRDS.—It would be well if a little more information were imparted in our schools on the subject of our birds, song birds especially, for the amount of good work done by insect-eating birds is something wonderful. A writer in Good Words gives an illustration of the enormous appetite of the bird. A thrush will eat at a meal the largest snail that England produces. If a man could eat as much in proportion, he would consume a whole round of beef for his dinner. The redbreast, again, is a most voracious bird. It has been calculated that to keep a redbreast up to his normal weight, an amount of animal food is required daily equal to an earthworm 14 feet in length. Taking a man of average weight, and measuring bulk for bulk with the redbreast, and assuming a sausage nine inches in circumference to be a fair equivalent of the earthworm, it is found that the man would have to eat 67 feet of such sausage in every twenty-four hours. By these two examples it will be seen what slayers of insects our birds are, and it seems almost beyond belief that they should be slain. If information such as the above were more widely disseminated, we should hear less of the practice, injurious as it is, of bird's-nesting and bird-catching, in which boys and young men take only too much delight.

Hints on Sleep.

The question of chief importance to most people in these overwrought, wakeful days and nights is how to get good sleep enough. Dr. Corning drops a few simple hints which may be of value. In the first place, people should have a regular time for going to sleep, and it should be as soon as can well be after sunset. People who sleep at any time, according to convenience, get less benefit from their sleep than others; getting sleep becomes more difficult; there is a tendency to nervous excitability and derangement; the repair of the system does not equal the waste. The more finely organized people are, the greater the difficulty and the danger from this cause. The first thing in order to sleep well is to go to bed at a regular hour, and make it as early as possible. The next thing is to exclude all worry and exciting subjects of thought from the mind some time before retiring. The body and mind must be let down from the high-pressure strain before going to bed, so that nature can assert her rightful supremacy afterward. Another point is, never to thwart the drowsy impulse when it comes at the regular time by special efforts to keep awake, for this drowsiness is the advance guard of healthy, restorative sleep.

Sleep is a boon which must not be tampered with and put off, for if compelled to wait, it is never so perfect and restful as if taken its own natural time and way. The right side is the best to sleep on, except in special cases of disease, and the position should be nearly horizontal. Finally, the evening meal should be composed of food most easily digested and assimilated, so that the stomach will have little hard work to do. A heavy, rich dinner taken in the evening is one of the things that murder sleep. Late suppers with exciting foods and stimulating drinks make really restorative sleep next to impossible. Narcotics are to be avoided, save as used in cases of disease by competent physicians. The proper time, according to Dr. Corning, to treat sleeplessness is in the daytime, and it must be treated by a wise and temperate method of living rather than by medicines. This is good common sense, says the New York Star, from which paper we copy, and doubtless a vast deal of the debility, nervous derangement, and the insanity of our time would be prevented by more good, restful, natural sleep.

HOW TO REMOVE BLACK WORMS FROM THE FACE.—A contemporary says: The black points, flesh worms, or comedones, which are found in the face, and especially near the nostrils, are not at all produced by the accumulation of the particles of dirt or dust, as has generally been believed, but by pigmentary matter, which is soluble in acids. The following treatment has been recommended: kaoline, four parts; glycerine, three parts; acetic acid, two parts, with or without the addition of a small quantity of some ethereal oil. With this pomade cover the parts affected in the evening, and if need be, during the day. After several days all the comedones can be easily expressed; most of them even come out by washing the parts with pumice stone soap. The same results can be obtained by bandaging the parts affected for a long time with vinegar, lemon juice, or diluted hydrochloric acid. The acids act like cosmetics, as they transform the black color into a brown and yellow shade, and destroy it gradually altogether.

POISON IN POTATOES.—No person should buy their potatoes of grocerymen who let them stand in front of their stores in the sun. Potatoes belonging to the "Solanum" family, of which the deadly night shade is one of its full brothers. All branches of the family contain more or less of that poisonous narcotic, called "solanine." The bulb, or potato, contains the least of this, unless they are exposed to the sun, which rapidly develops this element. Long exposure to the light, without the direct sun, will develop the solanine in the potato, and make an article unfit for food. But exposure to the sun is so injurious to the potato, making it not only unpalatable, but actually injurious to health, that any grocer for the offence of selling potatoes which have been exposed two or three days to the sun ought to be indicted for selling unhealthy and dangerous human food.—Albany Journal.

CHLOROFORMING THROUGH KEYHOLES, ETC.—We read now and then of cases in which burglars are supposed to have rendered their victims unconscious by holding cloths wet with chloroform to keyholes before entering an apartment. Of course the absurdity of such a fiction is sufficiently apparent. Whether sleepers can be made to pass from natural to chloroform sleep, if the chloroform is held near to the face, is still a question. Sometimes the experiment has succeeded, but in five experiments recently made to determine the fact, every one of the sleepers experimented upon woke at the expiration of three minutes, before they had come under the influence of the drug.

MOSQUITO OIL.—The following is a very good mixture for anointing the face and hands while fishing: Oil of tar, 1 oz.; olive oil, 1 oz.; oil of pennyroyal, ½ oz.; spirit of camphor, ½ oz.; glycerine, ½ oz.; carbolic acid, 2 drachms. Mix, and shake well before using.

Household Hints.

PUREE OF CELERY.—Wash some large-sized celery sticks, cook them until quite tender in boiling salt and water. When done, take out, drain off all moisture, and pass through a hair sieve into a basin for use. Melt one ounce of butter in a stew pan, add the celery puree, salt to taste, a tablespoonful of flour, and two of thick double cream; a piece of sugar the size of a nut, and a little stock should be necessary. Simmer the whole gently until thoroughly heated through and thickened. Serve garnished with sippets fried in butter, or, if preferred, on slices of cold beef or mutton plainly grilled. The perfection of a well-concocted puree lies in its extreme softness on the palate. To insure this, it is often wiser to add some finely sifted bread crumbs to the already cooked vegetable before it is passed through the sieve, and work it through together, which does duty for, and proves a more efficient agent than the flour for all thickening purposes. Cream should always be used, there is nothing for its substitute. Sugar should likewise never, on any account, be omitted from a puree, either in a lesser or greater degree, according to the taste of the consumer, for it helps in no small measure to soften it.

BREWER'S YEAST is prepared as follows: Seventy-two pounds unkilld malt and a handful of hops are gradually stirred in a clean tub containing seven gallons of water of 170° Fahr., and to this five and one-half gallons of water of 200° are added. The tub is then covered tightly and left quiet. After some time it is cooled rapidly. This is accomplished by setting in cans filled with cold water. When the temperature of the mash has reached 70°, the tub is covered again and allowed to stand for some twelve hours longer, when one and a half gallons fresh beer yeast are to be stirred in. After another twelve hours have elapsed, pierce a hole in the layer formed by the husks of the malt, and dip three and a half gallons of the liquor beneath; then stir the whole up and dip one and three-fourths gallons from it (husks and liquor). This is the mother leaven from which yeast can be generated all the year round by using it in the way described instead of the ordinary beer leaven. To the remainder in the tub add five and a half gallons wort of 90°, and make use of it within two hours. The mother yeast also must be used the same day for fermenting another portion.

CHICKEN SOUP.—To make chicken soup, allow a quart of cold water for each pound of chicken, and set it where it will heat slowly, not letting it boil, for two hours, and then keep it boiling slowly for four hours. Turn it into a large dish with a tablespoonful of salt and let it remain all night. Skim off the fat, strain the broth, season with salt and pepper, and let it boil half an hour. Then strain it and boil in a tablespoonful of minced parsley. Scald a cup of milk and a very small lump of soda and stir into it a tablespoonful of cornstarch wet with cold milk. When it is cooked pour it into a bowl with two beaten eggs, stir them together, and add a cupful of the boiling soup. Then remove the soup kettle from the fire, add this mixture to it and let it stand three minutes.

PRESSED VEAL.—Boil a beef tongue the day before it is to be used, and a like quantity of lean veal. Chop very fine. Season the tongue with pepper, powdered sweet herbs, a teaspoonful of mustard, a little nutmeg and cloves, a pinch of each; season the veal in like manner, with the addition of salt. Pack in alternate spoonfuls as irregularly as possible, in cups, bowls or jars which have been well buttered. Press very hard as you go on, smooth the top, and cover with melted butter. When this cools, close the cans, and keep in a cool, dry place. Turn out whole, or cut in slices for tea. It is a pretty and savory relish, garnished with parsley or the blanched tops of celery.

EGG PIE.—Hard boiled eggs taste good at any time, but never so well as when, like the four and twenty blackbirds, they are in a pie. Boil a dozen eggs hard, and, when cold, shell and slice them and put them in layers in a buttered pie dish, alternating with butter, bread crumbs, pepper and salt, and covering them with this mixture. Add a cupful of cream, and bake to a brown.

SALT FISH SOUFFLE.—Mash eight boiled potatoes, and mix with a pint of finely chopped salt fish, and add three fourths of a cup of hot milk, two tablespoonfuls of butter, a little salt and pepper and two beaten eggs. Bake for ten minutes, and then add two more beaten eggs with which a little salt has been mixed, brown in the oven and serve at once.

LACE BED FURNITURE.—Lace coverlets and pillow covers should not be rinsed in "blue water" when washed, but dipped in very weak cold coffee. They should be made very wet, wrung very dry in a patent wringer, and dried with the greatest quickness, as otherwise the coffee will settle, and they will look like a symphony in yellows.

STRAWBERRY CREAM.—To make strawberry cream take three pints of mashed berries, strain the juice, and add a heaping cup of sugar, and then gelatine soaked and dissolved in a teacup of boiling water. Add a pint of whipped cream and pour into molds.

Bay View, No. 159.

The worthy brethren of Bay View, No. 159, have the reputation of celebrating their anniversaries in a royal way. On Friday evening, July 6th, their meeting was a very enjoyable one. An omnibus coach was sent over to convey Deputy McKay and his delegation to the Lodge-room, which numbered thirteen Workmen. After the installation of the officers and a season of sociality, Deputy McKay presented the retiring M. W., Thos. Brown, a gold enamelled scarf-pin. Engraved on the back are these words: "Presented to Thomas Brown, P. M. W., by Bay View Lodge, No. 159, A. O. U. W., July 6, 1883." Bro. Brown was evidently taken by surprise, and in a cordial and feeling manner expressed gratitude and thanks for the kindness bestowed on him by his brother Workmen. At the banquet-room, where, as usual, at the anniversaries in this Lodge, the table was well supplied with good things, which, with speeches, toasts, and congratulations, made an hour go swiftly by, when the omnibus sent over by the brethren of Bay View was brought in front of the hall and a jolly crowd hied away to San Francisco.

Bernal, No. 19.

Deputy George W. Lemont, installed the officers of this Lodge Monday evening, July 2d. The installation services were accompanied by a grand social and literary entertainment. The following is the programme that was rendered, and warmly appreciated. There were also several pertinent speeches, and the whole affair gave great satisfaction: Quartet, "The Fisherman and his Child," Messrs. Waterhouse, McDonald, Panzini, and Hughes; duet, "I would that my Love," Miss Lark and Mr. Rochester; solo, "I am a Friar of Orders Gray," Mr. John C. Hughes, F. R. C. M.; solo, pianoforte, Mrs. Rochester; recitation, Miss Williams; trio, "The Soldier's Farewell," Miss Lark, Mr. Fice, and Mr. Rochester; solo, "Saved from the Storm," Mr. Rochester; recitation, Miss Waterhouse; solo, "The Kerry Dance," Miss Lark; solo, flute, Prof. Striby.

Harmony, No. 9.

On Saturday evening, 7th inst., a large concourse of Workmen, with their families, were assembled in Washington Hall, Eddy street, to witness a public installation of their officers. After the financial business of the Lodge had been settled, Deputy Poland, with the assistance of the following brethren, who represented the Grand Lodge, viz: George A. Bordwell, P. G. M. W.; Sam. Booth, G. F.; C. J. Maurer, G. O.; C. N. Payson, G. G.; R. Herring, G. Rdr.; F. L. Southick, G. Fin.; Jas. Jacobs, G. Rvr. The rites of installation were performed with military precision, dignity, and in a correct manner, by each officer, strictly following the ritual, not one of which made a skip. At the close of the business of the Lodge, Bro. Brownrigg, who has fulfilled the duties of Master Workman in a very commendable way welcomed his large audience and thanked his brethren for the many acts of kindness and honor bestowed on him. At the close of the installation a short entertainment was given which was opened by a fine piano solo, by Prof. Schwartz, of Harmony, No. 9; song and encore, Miss Nellie Hughes; select reading, Prof. Eastman, Organist of Harmony; sentimental song and encore, Miss Fischbeck, daughter of Bro. Fischbeck; recitation, Jas. J. Feely; song, duet, the Misses Schreiber; recitation, Miss Cohan, daughter of Bro. Cohan. This young lady acquitted herself with much credit, and was awarded a recall. Spirited and enjoyable dancing was indulged in through a list of ten dances, and this, the first public installation of the old pioneer Lodge, will be remembered as one of the grand events in their history.

Magnolia, No. 41.

The installation of the officers of Magnolia, No. 41, at Laurel Hall, Shiels' Building, on Monday evening, the 2nd inst., was a brilliant affair. This large hall was filled to repletion with a select company of Workmen, with their families, and invited guests. Deputy Danforth installed the officers in a dignified and impressive manner, and at the conclusion elicited demonstrative approbation. At the close, Bro. Breed, P. M. W., delivered a short, stirring address; followed by Deputy Danforth, in well-timed, practical remarks. Song, Miss Carrie Michelson. This young lady is well known as an artist, and on this evening her effort was highly appreciated, and rewarded with a hearty recall. Piano and violin duet, Messrs. L. and

A. Meyer, was a performance of rare merit. Song, Miss Fannie Michelson, whose highly artistic and pleasing effort was most cordially received, and called for a hearty encore. Bro. McClure then delivered a short, stirring address, in which was mingled pathos and eloquence, drawing a beautiful picture of this grand and humanitarian organization. Spirited dancing was then indulged in, and the array of beauty and happiness depicted on this assemblage of Workmen and their families, was a picture seldom seen in any gathering. This public installation, being among the first in order, was a flattering testimonial to our Order, and in particular to this very worthy Lodge of Workmen, as the representative class of men, and richly-dressed and beautiful ladies and wee ones present, was the subject of notice and congratulations. The retiring M. W., I. N. Choyinski, filled the chief place, with honor to himself. The present M. W., Bro. Katz, is an enthusiastic Workman, a genial nature, and will prove himself worthy of the responsible position he holds.

Spartan, No. 36.

On Friday evening, 6th inst., there was a goodly attendance in Spartan, among whom was a number of our prominent citizens. After the business of the Lodge had been carefully finished, Wm. Wilson, M. W., took occasion in a few well chosen words to thank the members of his Lodge for the courtesy and hearty support given him during his term of office, and should remember his labors as M. W. as among the happiest and shortest six months in his life. Deputy Danforth, with the assistance of Bros. Breed, P. M. W., of San Francisco, No. 4, and Jordan, of Spartan, No. 36, installed the officers from memory, without the use of the ritual, and in that pleasing and dignified manner so well known in his official duties. It seemed to have been understood by the Grand Guide, as Bro. Wilson was installed as P. M. W. at the close, and instead of investing him with the usual P. M. W. badge belonging to the Lodge, took occasion in a very complimentary and congratulatory speech to present him with a solid gold P. M. W. badge, in finish, artistic design, and magnificence, as fine as any we have ever seen. Inscribed thereon are these words: "To Wm. Wilson, P. M. W., from Spartan Lodge, No. 36, A. O. U. W., July 6, 1883." After installation Bro. Wilson, P. M. W., made a speech full of pathos, eloquence, and gratitude, to the, as he expressed it, the noble brethren of Spartan Lodge. A short season of congratulatory speeches closed a grand meeting for this grand old Subordinate.

Triumph, No. 1E0.

Deputy McKay, with the assistance of Harry J. Lask, acting as Grand Guide, installed an efficient corps of officers. Bro. Smallman, M. W., entered upon his duties with the grace of an old and tried officer; in fact he conferred the M. W. degree on this evening in a very creditable manner.

Yerba Buena, No. 14.

The old pioneer No. 14, closed a very prosperous term, and a very efficient corps of officers were installed by Deputy Lamot, assisted by Bro. Egleston as Grand Guide. The services of installation were given in a very impressive manner, the rituals being thrown aside, and not a skip made in any part of the work. This Lodge is in a very prosperous condition, and it is but justice to the retiring officers to note the fact that each one has taken a deep interest in the welfare of their Lodge, and especially W. T. Thompson, acting P. M. W., has proven himself one of the faithful and efficient officers, and worthy to be classed with the honored coterie of Past Master Workmen, who have helped to rear this grand Subordinate. Bro. Butt, M. W. elect, entered upon his duties like a veteran, and announced that the officers installed had provided some Havanas which were at the disposal of the brethren. After recess, Deputy Lamot made a few remarks that were most appropriate to this happy event. Bro. Butt, M. W., in a short, salutary speech, expressed his gratitude and his pride to be associated with and chief executive of Yerba Buena, No. 14. J. S. Thompson, P. M. W.; Bros. Lee, Foreman; Florence, O.; King, Rdr.; Dugan, Fin.; Selleck, Rvr.; and several more of the leading brethren made very acceptable remarks that seemed to make everyone happy. Bro. Curry, publisher of the Workman's Diploma, in the course of his remarks said that the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN was the best society and family paper published in the United States. Bro. Purdy, P. M. W., recited a humorous poem, and Bro. Egleston, P. M. W., closed this happy season of repartee and congratulatory event.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

California, No. 1.

This pioneer Lodge held a public installation at West Oakland, Tuesday evening, July 3d, accompanied with a literary and musical entertainment and dancing. The following programme was fully carried out: Public installation of the officers by J. J. Schulze, D. D. G. M. W.; presentation of a jewel to Chas. Strachauer, the retiring P. M. W., by Geo. N. Berdan, P. M. W., on behalf of the Lodge; address by Joseph Hollywood, P. M. W., describing the conflict between the Monitor and Merrimac during the war of the rebellion, of which he was an eye-witness; quadrille; song, "When the Flowing Tide Comes In," with "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," for an encore, by Mr. Alfred Share; piano solo, Mr. N. Lenoir; waltz; recitation, Wm. Harrison Wood, P. M. W.; schottische; song, "Echoes that are Brightest," from "Maritana," by Miss Josie Wood, who gave as an encore "I Cannot Sing the Old Songs," quadrille, centennial; song and chorus, "Mother's Kiss," by the Clark family, which received an encore; polka; duet, "In the Starlight," Mr. and Mrs. Albee, which was heartily encored; quadrille, lancers; Dutch parody on "Jordan is a Hard Road to Travel," by Jos. Hollywood; virginia reel. A crowded house and an appreciative audience gave evidence that the entertainment was a success, and California Lodge sustained its reputation on this occasion.

Oakland, No. 2.

Friday evening, July 6th, District Deputy C. E. Alden, installed the officers of this Lodge in a very impressive manner. This is one of the solid Lodges of the Order, having expended in sick benefits during the past six months $580, and has in its general fund $1,400.

Occidental, No. 6.

On Friday evening, the 6th inst., Occidental Lodge, No. 6, A. O. U. W., held their regular meeting at Kohler's Hall, West Oakland. The Lodge was called to order promptly at 7:30, by Master Workman, John Munce, and the usual routine business transacted, after which an open meeting was held for the purpose of publicly installing the officers for the present term. The Lodge-room was tastefully decorated with flowers and evergreens, and presented an attractive appearance. In a few minutes the hall was filled with the members of the Lodge and their friends. The installation ceremony was performed in an able and an impressive manner, by D. D. G. M. W., J. J. Shultz, assisted by a full staff of P. M. W's. acting as Grand officers. At the conclusion of the installation of the officers, Brother P. M. W. Stephens, in the name of, and in behalf of Occidental Lodge, No. 6, in an appropriate speech presented to Bro. John Munce, the retiring Master Workman, a handsome gold badge, bearing the following inscription: "Presented to P. M. W., John Munce, by the officers and members of Occidental Lodge, No. 6, A. O. U. W., West Oakland, July 6, 1883." Bro. Munce responded in his usual happy vein, thanking the members of the Lodge for the honor conferred, and pledging himself anew to continued activity in the interests of the Lodge in the future as he had done in the past. He pointed with commendable pride to the fact that during the past term twenty new members had been admitted to the Lodge, and the handsome sum of $550 placed in bank. A glowing tribute was then paid to the officers of the Lodge, for the zeal and fidelity with which each and all had discharged their duties, thereby making this term in every respect the most successful that Occidental has ever known. He concluded by congratulating the Lodge on their excellent choice of officers for the present term, and hoped that the future of old Occidental would be ever upward and onward. The brother resumed his seat amid a hearty round of applause. The following programme of exercises was then taken up: Piano solo, G. Fulte; duet, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Albee; song, W. E. Frost; comic selection, John Munce; song, Miss Moulton; song, Miss Annie Walters; recitation, J. F. Hammer; song, Miss Moulton; duet, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Albee; song, (the Marseilles), by special request, Mrs. J. J. Shultz; song, "Mabel Clair," Mrs. Martin and Miss Annie Walters; at the conclusion of the above programme dancing was declared in order, and after a couple of hours spent tripping the light fantastic toe the company separated well pleased with their evening's enjoyment. Following are the officers for the present term: John Munce, P. M. W.; D. S. Moulton, M. W.; F. R. Weigle, F.; G. H. Garthorne, O.; W. G. Hawket, Rdr.; N. B. Hoyt, Rvr.; Wm. Pirrie, Fin.; W. E. Frost, G.; John Ainsworth, I. W.; F. Manceivo, O. W.; J. F. Hammer, Trustee; A. G. Anthony, Med. Ex.; G. Fulte, Organist.

Oak Leaf, No. 35.

On Monday evening, July 2d, A. O. U. W. Hall, located on the corner of Twelfth and Franklin streets, in the city of Oakland, was crowded to its utmost capacity, to witness the installation exercises of Oak Leaf Lodge, No. 35, Bro. Charles E. Alden, D. D. G. M. W., assisted by Brothers Gay, Shade, and Thorne, performed the installation exercises in a most acceptable manner. Bro. Alden has the installation work letter perfect, his delivery is very good, and he brings to his office an intelligent discharge of the duties thereof. The following officers were duly installed: W. N. Miller, P. M. W.; Alexander Donaldson, M. W.; L. L. Wallace, F.; B. F. Everheart, O.; W. J. Wilkenson, Rdr.; Joseph Harris, Rvr.; D. S. Hirschberg, Fin.; S. Pallimbaum, G.; D. Markel, I. W.; Wm. Branch, O. W. After the installation exercises a fine literary and musical programme was offered. Master Workman Donaldson welcomed the guests in a few chosen and appropriate remarks. A piano duet, by Miss Louise Pedrini and Miss Amy Buffington, was well rendered. J. M. J. Kane, an elocutionist of more than ordinary ability, delivered "Sheridan's Ride," in a soul-stirring manner, and was enthusiastically encored. The Quartette Club, consisting of Messrs. Crabtree, Norris, Reed and Smith, sang "My Country, Firmly Stand," in a truly patriotic manner, and called forth hearty plaudits from the large audience. Clarence E. Arper, as a dialect recitationist and reader, is one of the best we have heard, his imitation of the Irish dialect being perfect. The feature of the entertainment was a vocal solo by Mrs. J. W. Stevens, who possesses a rich contralto voice. Her singing was rapturously encored, and the audience appeared to be loth to part with Mrs. Stevens. Mr. S. S. Beel's violin playing is so well known and appreciated in Oakland, and wherever he has appeared, that the general verdict is that Mr. Beel handles the bow like an artist. A piano solo, by Miss Minnie Skilling, was acceptably rendered. George W. Alexander's humorous songs and sayings, as usual, convulsed the audience with laughter. Supreme Master Workman M. W. Fish, who was present, delivered some timely and well-received remarks, concerning the work of the Supreme Lodge at its recent session. He spoke of the kindly feeling pervading the Supreme Lodge for the Grand Jurisdiction of California, for its fealty and devotion to the Supreme Lodge, and its always prompt and liberal response, when called upon, in whatever emergency. He said that its members were, to a great extent, influenced by the proud record of California, in selecting him as the Supreme Head of the Order. He indulged in the hope, that however bright and glorious the record of California might have been, that her future would be still more glorious.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—The officers of this Lodge were publicly installed by P. G. M. W. Barnes, on the evening of the 3d inst. I believe this was the second public installation held in the State. We had a number of visiting members, the Grand Lodge officers being filled as far as possible by visiting P. M. W's. Our Lodge is in good condition, and what growth we have is of the best. Fraternally, A. M. PEARSALL.

Valley View, No. 208.

Bro. S. L. Hoyme, P. M. W., of this Lodge, under date of July 7th, writes as follows: "Enclosed you will find a list of our officers. Our Lodge meets only twice per month, so our officers are the same as formerly. Bro. John Johnson, D. D. G. M., is with us to-night, and has given us a thorough drill in the secret work, which is quite a treat to us. Bro. D. Wagner, of the Jurisdiction of Tennessee, was admitted by card at the last meeting. The Lodge is flourishing, and as soon as Bro. Barieau, the enterprising lumberman can complete the large hall now being built, there will be an increased interest taken in the work."

Lookout, No. 211.

Bro. E. Ezenhouser, the efficient Recorder of this Lodge, writing to the WATCHMAN on business says: Our Lodge is progressing very well; we do not increase very fast in numbers but our additions are of the best material. We have thought it wiser policy to have a few good members than many of a doubtful character and standing, and so have discouraged many who were desirous of applying for membership. We now number twenty-three, and are working very harmoniously. As an illustration there was only one candidate for each office, and there was not one dissenting vote.

Manzanita, No. 154.

Our correspondent at Forest Hill, writes as follows: "On Saturday evening, July 7th, Ed. S. Thompson, District Deputy, duly installed the officers of Manzanita Lodge, No. 154, as follows: M. Clark, P. M. W.; J. N. Burke, M. W.; F. C. Fick, F.; H. Crockett, O.; (2d term); Geo. W. Simpson, Rdr., (4th term); C. Albrecht, Rvr., (2d term); Jas. F. West, Fin.; Peter Bequette, G., (2d term); Geo. C. West, I. W., (member of the Order only one month); Wm. Patterson, O. W., (2d term). On the same evening both degrees were conferred on a candidate, an application for membership was also read. During the term just passed the Lodge has had nine initiations, suspensions three, making a gain of six and leaving a membership of thirty-four at the end of the term or at present writing thirty-five. Manzanita Lodge was instituted January 17, 1880, by Deputy H. G. Oliver, (since deceased), with a charter membership of twenty. For the first year the admissions were few, little interest being taken in the Order, although we are situated in a mining district where accidents are liable to happen at any time and without a moments warning the miner's lose their lives; fortunately no such disaster has happened to any of our membership, but a few outsiders having met with such accidents or suddenly taken away and leaving destitute families behind has been the means of adding several to our ranks in the past year. Since our organization forty-four members have been admitted, of these seven have been suspended from the Order, two have taken cards to other Lodges, leaving our present membership as above stated thirty-five. Only one of the number who became a member of our Lodge has died, and he at the time of his death was a member of another Lodge, so that not only is our Lodge in healthy circumstances but the members also."

Los Gatos, No. 76.

Bro. W. S. Walker, editor of the Los Gatos Weekly News, under date of July 10th, sends us the following item: "The following officers were installed in Los Gatos Lodge, No. 76, A. O. U. W., on Saturday evening, July 7, 1883. C. A. Hubback, M. W.; Ed. Ditto, F.; Alex. Howell, O.; Thos. Cox, Rdr.; J. L. Gelatt, Fin.; Geo. Carson, Rvr.; L. Desmarois, G.; T. H. Jamison, I. W.; Jno. Mooney, O. W.; S. Templeton, Trustee. The installation was conducted in public, the hall being crowded with Workmen and their families and invited guests, and everything went off in a very happy manner, the latter part of the evening being devoted to speeches, singing, ice cream and other refreshments. Los Gatos Lodge is in a very flourishing condition, and we hope to greatly increase its membership this year."

Linden, No. 167.

Monday, July 2d, the following officers were installed: Master Workman, A. B. Spencer; Foreman, T. H. Prather; Overseer, James H. Duncan; Recorder, M. C. Rawlin; Financier, P. H. Eliot; Receiver, S. T. Ashley; Guide, James Drace; Inside W., James G. Russell; Outside W., F. Shelton; Trustee, S. H. Boardman; Medical Examiner, L. W. Elliott. District Deputy A. M. Cadian installed the above officers, in a very dignified manner. After the installation ceremonies, the members of the Lodge and the deputation from Stockton sat down to a splendid supper. Toasts were offered, and a general good time was had.

Nevada.

Hope, No. 11—Austin.

Our ever welcome Austin correspondent reports this Lodge as flourishing, and the brethren of Nevada wide-awake. He says: "The Workmen of Nevada Jurisdiction are making strenuous efforts to secure the requisite membership for a separate Beneficiary Jurisdiction. The election of Bro. J. W. Kinsley, formerly of San Francisco, as Grand Master, has given a fresh impetus in this direction so that we may reasonably expect this object will soon be attained. The brethren in this little mining camp were stimulated to fresh exertion by a letter from our Grand Master, and at the next meeting nineteen applications for the degrees were received and referred. At our last meeting sixteen of these were initiated. All these men are of the best material, and we think we may justly feel proud of our success in thus adding fully sixty per cent to our number. However it only shows what energy and a little well directed conversation will accomplish." OG.

Light From the Valley.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—That bright, vigorous and progressive young Subordinate Noe Valley, No. 185, situated on the corner of Church and Twenty-fourth streets, took advantage, on Tuesday, July 3d, of the G. Master's permission to hold public installations, and gathered into their Lodge room the beauty and the chivalry of that portion of our fair city "ycleped" the Mission, to witness the ceremony as performed by Bro. G. W. Lamont, D. D., in the installation of their officers, assisted by Bros. C. V. Thompson, as P. G. M. W.; A. V. Thompson, as G. G.; J. J. White, as G. O., and J. D. Thompson, as G. F. The ceremony was well performed, the deputy earning great praise for the perfection he has attained in this part of his official duties. The G. G. Bro. A. V. Thompson also deserves commendatory mention for his ability as an officer in conducting the officers elect, without confusion, from station to station during the ceremony.

The following is a list of the officers installed: Leon Carro, P. M. W.; W. C. Dudley, M. W.; J. C. Scott, F.; W. S. Simonds, O.; E. H. Watson, Rdr. (re-elected); Geo. Dudley, Financier (re-elected); G. M. Lawton, Rvr. (re-elected); W. Sullivan, G.; A. P. McNiel, J. W., and B. Shosow, O. W. The ceremonies being ended, the new M. W., W. C. Dudley, after a few introductory remarks, called on Bro. Lamont, who, in his usual happy manner, spoke at some length on the beauties and benefits of our Order. The M. W. then called on the P. M. W., Bro. Carro, who, in the course of a few pleasant remarks, stated that numerous ladies in proximity to his station were particularly urgent in their demands for an immediate commencement of the terpsichorean exercises that were to form part of the evening's entertainment, and that he, led captive by the array of feminine loveliness around him, felt no inclination to thwart their wishes by making a speech. Whereupon the M. W. turned the programme over to that gentleman, who at once inaugurated a condition of things which sent the lovers of the giddy Muse whirling away in the dizzy mazes of the changeable dance to the notes of "Johnson's band."

One of the interesting features of the evening was a fancy dance, a relic of "ye olden time," by Mrs. and Bro. J. J. White, and B. Flaherty, J. H. Lynch, and F. Casement.

During the evening and between dances refreshments, both liquid and solid, were passed round, while Miss Louisa Carey and Mr. F. P. Johnson each favored the audience with a song. Thus, with joy laden wings the hours flew by, until somewhere in the "wee short hours ayont to twal," when the delighted audience sought their homes to prepare for the "Glorious Fourth."

Before closing let me say that Noe Valley is prospering, having initiated eight members without losing any during the last term. The new officers are all intelligent men, who take an interest in the Order, and a large portion of the members take a deep interest as well, and the future outlook is bright and promising.

Fraternalty yours,

J. D. T.

Silver Spray, No. 4.

As indicated in our last issue, on Monday evening, 9th inst., there was a brilliant assemblage in Western Hall, Shields' Building, to witness the public installation of new officers. The cosy room was most profusely decorated and ornamented with floral devices, evergreens, and baskets of flowers, perfuming the entire room. Deputy McKay, acting as Grand Master, T. H. Macdonald, as G. G., and Harry J. Lask, as P. G. M., performed the rites of installation in a very pleasing manner. A select literary programme was given as follows: Instrumental solo, Miss Staunton, organist of Silver Spray; recitation, Mrs. Holloway; song, F. Filmore, P. M. W.; recitation, Mrs. J. C. Beatty; solo, Mrs. A. Lincoln; Piano solo, treble encore, Harry J. Lask, P. M. W.; address, J. C. Beatty; sentimental song, Mrs. Kearns; short address, Wm. H. Barnes, P. G. M. Mrs. J. C. Beatty, on behalf of Silver Spray, D. of H., presented Sister Lord, P. W. S. of H., a heavy gold D. of H. jewel. Inscribed thereon are these letters and words: "W. W. T. O. E. Talitha Cumi;" around the edge are engraved, "Presented to Fannie A. Lord, by Silver Spray, No. 3, D. of H., July 9, 1883." The presentation was quite appropriate, and the answer and acceptance of Sister Lord was a happy hit, in which was associated pleasant words, queenly grace, and heartfelt expressions. Bro. Filmore, then in his inimitable style presented C. C. Terrill, a watch and chain that was of huge proportions, and at a distance looked like gold. It was made for this special occasion in one day, and our veteran Workman seemed to be proud of his souvenir, and so expressed himself, and in turn presented Sister Lord with a new pattern silver butter-dish. Everybody was in the best of spirits at this time, and were immediately invited to the banquet-room where an extensive and ornamented table was at the disposal of their numerous guests. Take it all in all this was one of the best arranged and in every respect a recherche affair; spirited dancing closed the festivities.

Progress of Electric Science.

Speaking of the work of the electricity division, and the recent marvelous development of electrical inventions, Mr. E. M. Bentley, one of the examiners of the electrical division of the Patent Office, gives some very suggestive facts. He says that about two thousand applications for patents in electricity were filed in 1882, of which about two-thirds were granted. To show how the subject has grown in importance within a few years, he said that in 1877 electricity was a sub-class in a division. Now it is the largest division in the Office, and regarded as the most important. The astonishing growth is due chiefly to two causes: First, the invention of the telephone; and, second, the development of the magneto-electrical machine. The telephone had opened, directly or indirectly, a wide field of inventions. The minds of many persons throughout this country were turned to this class of invention, and not only were improvements upon the telephone itself attempted, but attention was given to a great many incidental appliances useful in its successful application.

The second great stimulus to invention was the development of the magneto-electrical machine. For thirty years the world has been awaiting a cheap and convenient source of electricity. Immediately following the discoveries of Faraday and others, from 1830 to 1840, there was a wide spread effort to make practical use of them, and special activity was manifested in the lines of electric lighting. The arc light was

Labor and Food.

The human body never ceases to work. Even in the most profound slumber some of the functions of life are going on, as, for instance, breathing, the circulation of the blood, digestion, when there is food in the stomach; and it follows that some part of the nervous system is, therefore, awake and attending to business all the day and night long. In the act of living, some of the substance of the body is being constantly consumed. The amount of work done by the heart in one day in propelling the blood is now estimated as equal to the work of a steam engine in raising 125 tons one foot high, or one ton 125 feet high. We lose in weight by working. Weigh a man after several hours' hard labor, and he will be found two or three, and, in extreme cases, several pounds lighter. If we do not wish to become bankrupt, we must replace by food the amount we have lost by labor. Hunger and thirst are the instincts which prompt us to do this. They are like automatic alarm clocks, which stop the engine at various points to take on fuel and water. In a healthy man as much is taken in as is required to maintain the weight of the body against loss. Nature keeps the account. On one side is so much food spent in work; on the other, so much received into the stomach for digestion. They should balance like the accounts of an honest book-keeper. In an unhealthy person the instinct of hunger becomes disordered and does not sound the alarm, and

The Evil Effects of Tobacco.

Many years ago Dr. Wm. A. Alcott published a very valuable little work on the "Physical, Intellectual and Moral Effects of Tobacco on the Human System." That work has since been revised, with notes and additions, by Nelson Sizer, and published by Fowler & Wells, of 753 Broadway, New York. In the new addition Mr. Sizer has added a sufficient amount of matter to nearly double the size of the book, and has brought the information and the facts bearing on the subject down to the present time. It shows the effects of the tobacco on the teeth, on the voice, and on the special senses; also its effect on the appetite and digestion, and how it leads to various diseases; its effect on the intellect and morals, and points out who are suffering most from its use. The slavery to tobacco is discussed in an extended and interesting account, giving the history and confessions of a tobacco chewer, and showing how he gave up the habit. An interesting history of a smoker is given, showing the great benefits he derived from quitting its use. This work should be in the hands of those who wish to have presented a feasible way of overcoming the habit, as it is shown that the greatest slave of tobacco may learn how to give it up without much difficulty, or the feeling of nervous loss, and so become thoroughly restored to self-mastery and health; and especially should it be placed in the hands of the boys, and of moderate smokers who have not yet fully acquired the Monterey and Vicinity.

With Plot of Pacific Grove Retreat—The Health Resort of the Pacific Coast.

The State of California has a world-wide reputation for its healthful and varied climate, its mineral springs and summer resorts, and is now the Mecca of tourists, travelers, invalids and pleasure-seekers, who wish to escape the sultry summer heat or chilling winter winds. In almost every portion of the Pacific slope, each locality has its particular claim in point of accessibility, climate or curative mineral springs. Conceding each one that mead of praise that to it justly belongs, it has become a settled fact, that in and around the historic bay of Monterey there are advantages and attractions, natural and artificial, that entitle Monterey to be named the "Queen of watering places."

Pacific Grove Retreat.

The Christian Seaside Resort is situated in a beautiful pine grove two and a half miles from Monterey. The founders of this noted seaside rest made provision by contract that no intoxicating liquors should be sold, or gambling practiced on these grounds. The Pacific Improvement Company, as their successors, have not only maintained these provisions, but have improved the grounds, built cottages and established a system of protection and sanitary regulations that makes this resort a haven and a home.

Religious services will be held every Sunday in the new chapel, and the Chatauqua Literary and Scientific Circle put into practical form, and the foundations of incandescent lighting were laid. But no economic source of electricity was at hand; for the galvanic battery consumed too much zinc for profit. The principle of the magneto-electric machine had, indeed, been long known; but it was left for the Italian, Pacinotti, in 1860, to perfect a machine wherein continuous and constant currents were generated. The idea literally lay on the shelf, however, until 1870, when Gramme re-invented practically the same machine, and pushed it into notice. He was speedily followed by the Siemens brothers, of Berlin, and by Mr. Brush and others in the United States. The magneto-electric machine, affording a cheap and abundant supply of electricity, immediately rendered practical all the half-completed inventions of thirty years, and opened the way to many new ones. Brush got his patent in 1877, Weston soon after, and the growth of the electricity division of the Patent Office has been steady and marvelous ever since. The invention had been, however, rather in the application of known principles than in the discovery of new ones; for during the fifty years that have elapsed since the investigations of Faraday, little new has been added to the science of electricity. The present activity springs from the application of well known exhibitions of the still unknown force; and moreover, only a few of these features of the science have been as yet made of practical value. One of the broadest and most successful patents appears to be the telephone.

THE Rev. Samuel Earnshaw, of Sheffield, says that he was once marrying a couple, when he said to the man, "Say after me: 'With my body I thee worship.'" The man innocently asked, "Must I kneel down to her?"

so the person goes on working without eating until he becomes pauperized; or the instinct works too frequently, and he eats too much and clogs the vital machinery. A calculation of the business done in the body reveals the fact that for a hard working person about 8½ pounds of food and drink are used up daily; some bodies use more and some less, but this is the average. The profit which the body gets on this transaction has been calculated, and may interest our readers. The energy stored up in the 8½ pounds of food ought to raise 3,400 tons one foot high. Most of this energy, however, is expended in keeping the body warm and its functions active. About one-tenth can be spent in our bodily movements or in work. The profit, then, on the process is about ten per cent. This is enough to raise 340 tons one foot high each day. A profit which is quite enough for earning a good living if rightly expended, and it is probably more than most make, but all ought to strive to reach this point if possible.—Scientific American.

A NEW WOOD SCREW was recently described by Mr. Geo. Barnham, Jr., at a meeting of the Philadelphia Engineering Club, in which the thread, instead of being cut, is formed by pressure, the blank being passed through a series of rolling dies. The first set of dies forms a slight ridge, the second deepens the depression, and so on until the screw is perfectly formed. The point of the screw is left conical, without any thread, thus differing from the ordinary wooden screw, so that, in soft woods, it may be driven part way home before using the screw-driver, as is now done with most iron screws. Screws of all the larger sizes and bolts are made in this way. The thread is said to be as perfect to the eye as a cut wood-screw, and much stronger.

habit. Its arguments are convincing, and we know of no better use that can be made of 25 cents than to send it to the publishers of this little book, and on receipt of the amount in postage stamps they will send it to any address by mail, post paid.

NEW USE FOR THE POTATO. If what the Agricultural Gazette, of Vienna, gravely states is true, Ireland may potentially possess a gigantic fortune in her ability to raise innumerable potatoes. That paper says that the humble but indispensable tuber may be transformed into meerschau pipes of the first quality, and likewise into any article now made of ivory, by subjection to the following treatment: Having been carefully peeled and suffered extraction of its "eyes," the potato is boiled steadily for 36 hours in a mixture of sulphuric acid and water, after which it must be squeezed in a press until every drop of natural or acquired moisture is extracted from it. The residuum of this simple process is declared to be a hard block of a delicate, creamy, white hue, every whit as suitable to the manufacture of ornamental and artistically executed pipe-heads as the finest clay, and unsurpassed as a material for brush and umbrella handles, billiard balls, fans and chess-men.

PULLEYS. The Wood Worker says: Our cast iron pulleys are much lighter than formerly, and latterly, wrought iron pulleys have been introduced, having in addition to the advantages of being already balanced and being stronger than cast pulleys, that of being very much lighter. Wooden pulleys of very neat construction have been placed on the market, and paper has also been pressed into service as pulleys.

will hold a session, commencing July 5th and closing July 12th. This assembly is designed to bring together persons of literary and scientific tastes scattered throughout the State, and combine opportunities for healthful recreation and mental improvement. The session promises to exceed previous ones, which have been the most noted attraction of the year. An able corps of professors and lecturers has been engaged, and will be provided with scientific apparatus, stereopticon illustrations of ancient and modern art, that will make these lectures pleasing and instructive to all.

The projectors and managers have succeeded in making this peerless seaside resort a place of rest for the weary, a sanitarium for the sick, and a home by the side of the sea, where tired nature and overworked and weary minds can rehabilitate and have an air of refinement, morality and religion around them. This new departure has been eminently successful, and lots that were sold at $50 last year have doubled and trebled in value this year. The little city of canvas will soon be one of neat and substantial cottages, and those who sought retirement and to escape the sultry summer heat, have found that the equable climate of the Pacific Grove Retreat was equally attractive as a winter resort. This seaside resort will be under the management of a Board of Trustees as a prudential committee, consisting of Rev. H. B. Hancock, Chairman, assisted by Rev. Drs. Jewell, Gibson, Stratton and Briggs.

During the month of May, 1883, one hundred lots were put on the market by J. O. Johnson, General Superintendent, and in less than two weeks were all sold. The route for an extension of the S. P. R. R. to this grove has been surveyed, and water pipes laid, insuring an inexhaustible supply of pure water. On application to J. O. Johnson, General Superintendent, an ornamental folder will be sent, giving full particulars and information of this popular seaside resort.

MENT.

Resolved, That we consider the complete form in which the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN has for several years published the list of subordinate Lodges of this Jurisdiction, with the names of their presiding and recording officers, and time and place of meeting, is a great convenience and benefit to our Order, and we would recommend that each and every Lodge continue the publication of its card, and afford such other support to our excellent society paper as their means will allow, and further, urge each member of our Order to give it countenance and material aid.

Favorable to Advertisers.

The WATCHMAN enjoys a very large and influential circulation. It is certain that no other periodical is now patronized by a better class of industrial, professional and business men. In fact, our subscription list embraces many of the foremost business and representative men throughout the towns and cities of the coast. ## The Coming Event.

We learn that steps have already been taken by the Oakland Lodges to show a proper appreciation of the high honor conferred on one of our best and truest Workmen, and on ourselves, by the Supreme Lodge in giving us the Supreme Master Workman. We indulge in the hope that this coming gathering of Workmen will in no respect be an exclusive affair, but that every member who chooses to be present will have the opportunity, and not only for himself, but for his wife and children and friends, if a place big enough can be got in which to accommodate the multitude. As to the date, let it be some time early in August. Nearly, or quite all our Past Grand Masters will then be here to attend the Masonic Conclave, besides a host of other prominent Workmen. It would be pleasant for them to gather together on an occasion the like of which may never happen again.

We would not have the reception take the shape of a banquet. It would involve too much preparation and too much expense—rather let it be a feast of reason and a flow of soul. We have orators the peers of any. We have elocutionists that have few if any superiors, and we have musicians in plenty not unknown to fame. Any of these would feel honored by an opportunity to join in one grand jubilee of the Workmen of the Pacific coast.

The Jurisdiction of California is second to only one in point of numbers. It is second to none in the quality of its membership, mentally and socially. Its record is without stain or blemish. Californians are not in the habit of doing things by halves. We believe we hazard nothing in saying that the forthcoming demonstration whether it takes the shape we have suggested or some other, will be such as to do our good name no discredit.

Denouncing Secret Societies.

Archbishop Fabre, of Montreal, has issued a pastoral address to the adherents of the Catholic Church in the Province of Canada, in which he strongly denounces all connection with secret societies as a very grave sin. Precisely what objection this good shepherd can see in his flock browsing within the folds of these fraternal Orders, is not patent to an unecclesiastical perception. Is it the fact that the principles of these Orders are usually clothed in the drapery of symbolism? What is the Church he represents, with its burning tapers, altars, incense, holy water, the consecration and oblation of the host, and the pictured walls of its temples, but a gorgeous symbolism? We find no fault with it. This picturesque shape of religion no doubt furnishes a great deal of comfort and joy to thousands of devout souls who would starve on the bare, bald services of other churches. But a church that enshrines its doctrinal mysteries within such ideal representations cannot consistently denounce the simple types and emblems of the secret societies. Perhaps it is the solemn vows and obligations the candidate takes as the door of admission into these Orders, that is offensive to this ecclesiastical Overseer. But are not the ordination vows of the priesthood a solemn asseveration? Is not every neophyte who stands at the altar, called upon to take a vow of self-abnegation and obedience? Surely there can be nothing intrinsically wrong in this form of clinching one's veracity and earnestness. Perhaps the pith of the whole objection is the fact that the business and individuality of these Orders is maintained and perpetuated by a certain amount of secrecy. But is not the Order of Jesus or Jesuits, a secret society? Are not matters transacted in the confessional and college of Cardinals that are shrouded in profound silence? It is not symbolism, nor vows, nor secrecy, as such, that this good Archbishop fulminates an anathema against, but the fact that men so far assert their personal liberty as to venture to keep a conscience of their own, and claim dominion over one hemisphere of their nature. If Archbishop Fabre expects to stop this growing consciousness of personal freedom, by a pastoral letter, and threats of unchristian burial, we shall be compelled to compare him to the foolish Pope who hurled a bull at the comet, or Mrs. Partington trying to hold back the waves of the Atlantic ocean with her mop. She worked hard, poor soul, pushing back the sea-brine, but the Atlantic beat her, and the great flood went over her little cabin on the beach.

THE experience of all well regulated life companies has established the fact that the death rate is about ten in every 1,000. In the Ancient Order of United Workmen in the State of New York, the Grand Medical Examiner reports that of 5,000 members admitted during the years of 1881 and 1882, only sixteen died. This is a death rate of only two and three-fifths in each 1,000 for a year. Comment is unnecessary.

QUOTING General Beauregard's expression of the opinion that the negro is dying out in the South, the Richmond, Va., State says: "That's how we think here in Virginia 363 days in the year, but on the other two, which are election days, we find every reason to believe quite the reverse."

THE Salvation Army now, it is stated, numbers 484 corps, with 1,500,000 members, whilst the income amounts to £121,000. The rental expenses last year were £21,000, and the value of the property acquired £150,800, but the mortgages amount to £54,000.

DE LESSEPS estimates that the cutting to flood the North African desert can be completed in five years, at a cost of not more than $30,000,000.

A Little Mixed.

The new law providing for the re-instatement of members suspended from the Order, that is, members whose rights therein are wholly suspended by reason of non-payment of six months' arrearages of dues, or for six months' delinquency on assessments; and those holding final cards, while designed to be very plain, and to obviate the complications continually arising under the old law, will, we fear, prove worse in that regard than the law it supplants.

The provision for the re-instatement of members holding final cards, is all that could be desired, but under the provisions for re-instatement of members suspended for dues, or assessments, many questions will arise to be settled by official decision. As a sample of many of a similar character, suppose a man comes to be re-instated who was suspended from the Order for non-payment of assessments. He must pay not less than seven dollars into the Beneficiary Fund. Another provision of the Beneficiary requires this whole amount to be forwarded to the Supreme Recorder or Grand Recorder, as the case may be, with the next remittance of the fund after it is paid in. If the law be complied with nothing will be left in the fund for the next call, and the Lodge will be in a fix. It will be required to forward one dollar for each M. W. who received the degree prior to the date of the death on which the assessment is made, but will have nothing in the fund to the credit of the re-instated member. The old law was better in this regard. It provided that the re-instated member should pay a dollar for this purpose. Then, again, the applicant must be re-examined, and our law provides that the Lodge must pay the fee. This law of the Supreme Lodge makes no provision by which it may be put upon the applicant, so if a Lodge re-instated such an applicant it will be out and injured in its general fund to the amount of two dollars. Again, not less than seven dollars shall be collected for the Beneficiary Fund. Who has authority to say more? If the Subordinate Lodge, much inequality and possibly injustice will prevail. Besides collecting more than seven dollars would not benefit a Subordinate Lodge directly, for the money would have to go into the Beneficiary Fund and be remitted to the Grand Recorder. The Lodge cannot retain any part of it for its trouble and expense in behalf of the member.

Re-instatement of members suspended for non-payment of dues will be involved in difficulties quite as grave as those in the other case.

It is an easy matter to make a law that will look plain and fair on its face, but the most difficult thing in the world to make one that shall be free from fault when tested by actual practice; but we marvel that so many members of experience and ability as compose the Supreme Lodge should have so completely overlooked the defects in this, as to have placed it on our statute books.

We believe the Supreme Master was called upon to make but one decision last term. This one law alone is liable to call on our present Supreme Master to make more than half a dozen.

PERSONAL.—Master William H. P. Bell, son of A. F. Bell, of Hercules Lodge, as an assistant and helper for the Relief Committee, worked so assiduously and faithfully that the members of the Relief Committee were induced to present him a small silver watch and chain, with a gold charm on which is inscribed, "Presented to Master Wm. Bell, by the Relief Committee A. O. U. W., for meritorious service June 21, 1883." The little hero was quite surprised, and has a high opinion of the A. O. U. W. Relief Committee.

GENERAL S. ERIDAN'S friends in Washington have bought a $43,000 house for him. There are compensations for the hard knocks that warriors get if they live long enough to find them out.

How to Do It.

Many of our Lodges find the non-attendance of members the most discouraging fact they have to encounter. Society is now-a-days surfeited with opportunities for social and other gatherings; all cannot be attended. Some must get the go by. So the leisure time of our people is divided up inasmuch that in most cases any particular one of them seems neglected. We are apt to go most where there is the most attraction. To insure a good attendance at Lodge meetings, the Lodge meetings must be made attractive. Some Lodges never fail in this regard; others rarely do anything else. We believe in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred a Lodge that pines by reason of a lack of interest on the part of the members, could find a sovereign remedy by organizing a Degree of Honor Lodge from its membership and their wives, mothers, and daughters. Give one night in the month, except a few moments for necessary business, which might as well as not be gained by meeting half an hour earlier than usual, and let the Degree of Honor Lodge have the benefit.

On the first of next month our Degree Lodges will have the benefit of as complete a code of laws as any others. They can become beneficial or non-beneficial, or both, as the members choose. The beneficiary system is believed to be the most perfect ever devised. It is certainly the most simple and economical. The amount guaranteed is small it is true, but enough to form a strong bond of union, and not so much that the poorest will find it a heavy burden to bear. The entire cost to a beneficiary member, both for dues and beneficiary payments, will not exceed two and a half cents a day—not half as much as a cigar, a drink of beer, or a street car ticket.

We hope such Lodges as may be troubled with inanition, to use a medical phrase, may feel constrained to try the experiment of attaching a D. of H. Lodge, and then if they cannot shake off the lethargy that encompasses them round about, they might as well fall into that eternal sleep that knows no waking. They are too far gone for resuscitation, in this world at any rate.

Relief Call.

The Supreme Lodge Relief Board has issued Relief Call, No. 3, for the relief of the Supreme Lodge Beneficiary Jurisdiction. The call is for ten cents for each M. W. degree member of the Order who was such at the date of the call. The statement of facts upon which the call is based, we publish in the Supreme Recorder's Department of this issue of the WATCHMAN. We have no doubt the call will meet with a hearty and prompt response. We allude to it as a fine illustration of the beauty and excellence of the A. O. U. W. beneficiary system. A fund of over twelve thousand dollars to relieve an over-burdened Jurisdiction may be raised by an assessment of ten cents per capita. It shows a solidarity of brotherhood akin to that universal patriotism which upholds this Union of States. While each Jurisdiction attends to its own business, carries its own burdens, grows and prospers, still each one feels it to be a pleasant duty to hold up the hands of the Supreme Lodge Relief Board, in aiding the good cause in less favored localities. This is fraternity without one particle of alloy, shining as the sun, glinting the tall peaks of wealth and prosperity, and gleaming through humble windows where poor children play on the floor.

SISTER FANNIE E. LORD, P. W. S. of H., of Silver Spray, No. 3, leaves for the East on the 15th instant. Our sister, by grace and kindness as an officer of the largest D. of H. Lodge on this coast, endeared herself to all who knew her, and we but express the universal feeling of her sisters and brothers when we wish her a pleasant trip and speedy return.

By an error, clerical or otherwise, in the printed sheets of the proceedings of the late session of the Supreme Lodge, we were led into the statement in the last issue of the WATCHMAN that hereafter Receivers would no longer be eligible to receive the Grand Lodge degree. Now comes the official circular from the Supreme Lodge, and Receivers are placed on the same footing as Recorders and Financiers. This is gratifying to this Jurisdiction, we are sure.

THERE is in my office the By-laws of some Lodge returned from the Committee on Laws and Supervision, to be sent whence they came, but no one knows where that is. There is nothing on the paper to indicate the fact—neither word nor seal, nor does it appear that any letter accompanying them will give a clue to their paternity. If any Lodge is waiting to hear from their By-laws, the document in question may be the thing wanted. No By-laws should ever be sent out for approval without a certificate attached stating the fact, and date of passage, under seal of the Lodge.

A NEW digest of the laws and decisions of the A. O. U. W. was provided for at the recent session of the Supreme Lodge, and the work of preparing it put into the hands of Leroy Andrews, P. G. M. W., of New York, who is also chairman of the Committee on Laws and Supervision of the Supreme Lodge. A better selection could not have been made by the Supreme Master. We may look for a work that will be both clear and comprehensive. There is no more able or faithful Workman in the Empire State than Bro. Andrews. A new digest is badly needed, and will be a source of no inconsiderable revenue to the Supreme Lodge.

THE circulars from the Supreme Lodge calling for a ten cent relief assessment came too late for this month. They will go out with our next assessment notice. In most cases, perhaps the Lodges will prefer to pay the little called for out of their general fund, and levy no assessment on the individual members. As there will in all probability be but one assessment aside from this for August, we may reasonably conclude that few Jurisdictions will get in ahead of us, even though we are a month late in beginning the work.

A NEW Lodge is being worked up at the Stock-yards, beyond West Berkeley.

Dredging the Red Sea.

Abbe Moigno, a French scholar of some celebrity, is trying to raise a fund of 3,000,000 francs for the purpose of dredging the Red Sea for the remains of Pharaoh's army, which he thinks may have been preserved these thousands of years by deposits and incrustations of salt. It would be a "knock down" argument against Bob Ingersoll and the agnostics who make fun of this Biblical legend, if those old fellows could be fished out of the strong pickle in which they have lain, like a chunk of corned beef in a barrel of brine, for thirty centuries or more. But if the Abbe fails to find a corned Pharaoh, or an Egyptian horse as salt as a Dutch herring, he may discover a new crustacean, or jelly fish that will be of interest to science. Let all good Frenchmen subscribe to the fund.

BRO. JOHN A. CHILD, G. M. W. of the Jurisdiction of Oregon, by his efficient, well directed, and intelligent labors, is proving himself one of the best officers that has been honored with the position of chief executive in our Order.

Relief Call No. 3.

OAKLAND, Cal., June 16, 1883.

To the Ancient Order of United Workmen. At a meeting of the Supreme Lodge Relief Board held at Buffalo, New York, June 9, 1883, the application of the Supreme Lodge Beneficiary Jurisdiction for relief under the provisions of Article IX, of the Beneficiary Laws of the Order, was fully considered; and the undersigned Relief Board do hereby certify to the correctness of the following statements of facts as ascertained by a personal examination of the books and records, viz:

First—That during the fiscal year ending March 1, 1883, the Supreme Lodge Beneficiary Jurisdiction has levied and collected 24 assessments (its full maximum as required by law), from which 112 death losses were paid, and that after the settlement of the above losses there still remains 10 death losses unpaid, requiring the sum of $20,000.

Second—That from the proceeds of Relief Call No. 2, made March 1, 1882, there remained on hand March 1, 1883, a balance of $7,180.40, after extending the relief of $46,000.00 for which said call was made.

Application having been made to the Relief Board on March 3, 1883, by the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction, relief was extended to the amount of the above balance in the Relief Fund, viz: $7,180.40—same to be applied as a credit on the amount of relief to which the Supreme Lodge Beneficiary Jurisdiction was entitled.

Third—That at the above mentioned meeting of the Relief Board at Buffalo, N. Y., it being apparent that the death losses in the Supreme Lodge Beneficiary Jurisdiction for the current fiscal year is such that it will be unable, by assessing its full maximum, to provide for the deficiency of the last year, relief was granted to the amount of $12,819.60, the amount of the above noted deficiency.

Fourth—Attached hereto is a summary of the receipts and disbursement of the Beneficiary Fund of the Supreme Lodge Jurisdiction for the fiscal year 1882-83, and also death register for same. (Series 1882-83.)

To provide the sum for relief as above mentioned, viz: $12,819.60, the Supreme Lodge Relief Board do hereby call upon the various Grand Master Workmen and upon the Master Workmen presiding over the various Subordinate Lodges under the immediate Jurisdiction of the Supreme Lodge, for the amount of one assessment of ten cents on each Master Workman degree member—the same to be collected and forwarded as provided in Section 2, Article IX., Supreme Lodge Constitution.

The Supreme Lodge Relief Board desire to call special attention to Section 2, Article IX., Supreme Lodge Constitution, as follows:

Section 2 The Relief Fund shall be raised by levying assessments of amounts not more than sufficient to produce the amount required for the payment of each respective relief assessment; and such assessments shall be levied and collected in the same manner and under the same laws, rules and regulations as ordinary assessments for the Beneficiary Fund, and all laws of the Order in regard to suspensions for non-payment of ordinary assessments or reinstatement of members shall be applicable also to such relief assessments. All Master Workmen degree members in good standing of the date of the levy of such assessment shall be liable for the same. Provided, Subordinate Lodges may set apart such Relief Fund or assessment from their general fund, and that such assessments shall not exceed the sum of $3.00 per month in any one year.

Subordinate Lodges will forward calls upon the Relief Fund through the same channel and in the same manner as Beneficiary moneys are forwarded.

The Grand Recorder of each Grand Jurisdiction will make report to the Supreme Recorder, not later than the 20th day of August, 1883, giving the name, number, location, and the amount paid by each Subordinate Lodge in the Jurisdiction, and will forward with said report, by draft or post office money order, payable to the Order of the Supreme Receiver, for the amount due as shown by the report.

Each Grand Recorder will also report all Subordinate Lodges that have failed to forward their proportion of the Relief Fund as per the call made.

Respectfully submitted in C. H. and P.

Official Notice.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 10, 1883.

To the Officers and Members of all Lodges of the A. O. U. W. in California:—Official notice is hereby given that the Constitution for the government of Lodges of the Degree of Honor in this Jurisdiction has been approved by the Supreme Lodge, with the following amendments:

1. In Art. II, Sec. 1, first line, after the word "membership" and before the word "in," add the words "or remain a member."
2. Art. XV, Sec. 1, strike out all the words in fourth line of the section.

As the necessary books and blanks cannot be prepared to carry out the provisions of this constitution for some weeks, it is deemed best to designate the first day of August, 1883, as the date when the aforesaid constitution shall go into full force and effect.

The office of Financier having been created by said constitution, it will be necessary to elect such officer at the first meeting of each Degree of Honor Lodge after the first of August next. Notify the District Deputy of such election immediately, that installation may not be unnecessarily delayed.

New rituals are being prepared to meet the changes in our laws.

The Degree of Honor Lodges now in existence will be supplied with the new books and blanks at such reduced price as the Finance Committee of the Grand Lodge shall determine.

It is hoped that our Lodges of the Degree of Honor will take prompt and vigorous action to awaken a new interest in their respective organizations, and that the membership will very generally connect themselves with the beneficiary department, thus making a permanent bond of union.

The attention of all Subordinate Lodges is called to the importance of organizing Degree of Honor Lodges in connection therewith, where not already done. It is believed this will not only be productive of much pleasure, but of benefit also to all concerned, furnishing, as it will, a means of extended social and fraternal intercourse, and, in addition, increased protection to the households of our brethren.

Any instructions that may be desired in relation to conducting the business of these Lodges will be cheerfully furnished by the Grand Recorder; but before applying, read the constitution carefully.

By order of the Grand Master Workman.
H. G. PRATT, Grand Recorder.

In Memoriam.

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Cal., July 2, 1883.

To the Master Workman, Officers and Members of Mountain View Lodge, No. 59, A. O. U. W.—BROTHERS:—We the undersigned committee heretofore appointed to draft resolutions expressive of our deep sorrow at the death of our late brother, Past Master Workman, JAMES C. SMITH, respectfully submit the following:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to call to the great Lodge on high, our beloved brother JAMES C. SMITH, therefore be it

Resolved, That in his death his Lodge has lost a good and efficient member, the community a respected and honored citizen, and that although our Order extends its sympathy in such cases in a substantial manner, we nevertheless share with those near and dear to him the force of the great blow, and will ever cherish the memory of our deceased brother, among those fragrant reminiscences of our Order.

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the stern decree, that has caused this sad break in our fraternal circle, we beg leave to mingle our tears with those of his bereft family, committing them to the care of Him who has promised to be a father to the fatherless;

Resolved, That the charter of this Lodge be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days, and a copy of these resolutions be sent to the widow of our deceased brother, and to the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN, and San Jose Herald, and spread upon the minutes of this Lodge.

JOHN M. PAUL,
W. A. WOODIS,
G. T. WAGSTAFF,
Committee.

To the Officers and Members of Spartan Lodge, No. 36, A. O. U. W.—Your committee appointed to draft resolutions on the death of our Bro. JAMES J. REEVES, submit the following:

WHEREAS, Our Bro. JAMES J. REEVES, having been called to the Supreme Lodge on high, we the members of Spartan Lodge, No. 36, A. O. U. W., realize that we have lost a loving companion and friend; therefore be it

Resolved, That while we recognize the infinite wisdom of Him who doeth all things well, and humbly bow to His will, yet we deplore the loss of our brother, and desire to place upon record our high estimate of his worth.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved family our sincere condolence in their affliction, and commend them to Him who has promised to be a "Father to the fatherless and a Husband to the widow."

We recommend that this resolution be placed upon the minutes, and a copy thereof be sent to the family of our deceased brother under the seal of the Lodge.

THOS. W. BETHELL,
L. D. WRIGHT,
W. S. REYNOLDS,
Committee.

Presentation Speech.

Just previous to the final adjournment of the Supreme Lodge, a massive Indian Club was presented to Supreme Master Workman Fish. The presentation speech, made by Representative J. J. Acker, of New York, humorously introduced the names of very many of the leading members of the Supreme Lodge. He said:

Supreme Master Workman, as I note you are without a gavel, I desire to present in behalf of the New York delegation something you may appropriately use for that purpose. Some members of the Supreme Lodge who visited a museum at Niagara Falls last Wednesday noted a relic which they desired to purchase. The handsome young lady in attendance assured the committee that it had been found on one of the Indian battle fields of the far west, but upon a wink from Brother E. M. Clarke she subsequently stated that it had been plowed up on the site of the present village of Niagara Falls, by Brother Clarke himself 125 years ago. It is appropriate for the reason that you are a Delaware—a tribe that you belonged to, unless indeed, you belonged to that better tribe which inhabited the entire country when first discovered by the whites—I allude to the finny tribe; you are the chief who has taken the scalp of New York's nominee for Supreme Master Workman. New York respects you as the supreme head of the Order, let me say then in the Case New York should invite, or Maryland Asken (you) to visit the East during your term of office, I say should you Be, be sure to come, we will not turn our Baxter you, but before you start go to your Taylor and when you reach the summit of the mountains looking East and behold the Temple with its Pope and its Bishop with the Shoen of the morning sun glistening from its dome, look not back on the great curiosities of your own State, its Yosemite and Yuba dam but rather listen to the Robbins in the valley, gaze upon the Woods in Nevada and Michigan, the tall (ferns), Ferns of Texas, the bright Berries of Illinois and Ohio, and be sure to Warne Wilson of your coming. And as you journey East through the Fordes of Kansas and over the Brooks of Missouri we shall all be happy to Sea you. This gavel which we present you has a peculiar fitness, and as the only objection to your election made was that you are a long distance away, it is provided with a long handle. You will not mistake the ball it holds for a homeopathic pill. With it we hope, as you are now the big Fish of the Supreme Lodge, that you will have backbone enough, if any sardine here should carp at your decisions, that you will whale with this until there is not a shadow of opposition. But, seriously, Supreme Master Workman, should disease and Not-tag call you hence during your term of office, and the hand of the angel of death beckon, An finger point you, to the shore of eternity beyond Jordan, and the Link which binds you to earth be severed and you draw Nye to the Temple presided over by the Supreme Master above, may you be permitted to enter there and enjoy forevermore the company of Moses and Larry and Lazarus. Buffalo Courier.

Triennial Conclave Committee.

The Committee on Hotels and Accommodations report that they have decided that one member of their committee should serve with the Reception Committee by meeting all incoming overland trains, and the Chairman and Vice-Chairman would arrange the lists of members for that duty. Blue badges, bearing the name of the committee printed thereon in silver, would be worn by them in addition to the Triennial Committee Badge. On motion, the committee was increased to 30 members. Sir Knights Keating, Litchfield, Oglesby, Bromley, and Simpson, were added to the Reception Committee.

The Committee on Grand Banquet, has reported in favor of a grand banquet on the subscription plan, the tickets to be placed at $10 each and to be limited to 500. The report was adopted.

Mr. Highton reported that the Board of Education had decided to acquiesce in the request of the committee to order the vacation of the public schools at the same time with the Conclave. The thanks of the committee were returned to the Board for their kindness.

The Committee on Decorations have adopted and are publishing the following: First, square and compass, representing Ancient Craft Masonry, 24x36 inches; second, two equilateral triangles, forming a six-pointed star, inclosing the ark of the covenant, representing the degree of Royal Arch, 24x36; third, passion cross, in red on white field, 24x48; fourth, Templar cross, in red and white field, 24x48; fifth, beauseant flag, 24x48, half black and half white; sixth, Order of Red Cross, seven-pointed star, in white or green field, with a red cross of equal arms in the centre, surrounded by the motto, "Magna est veritas, et prevalebit," 36x44; seventh, Order of Malta, nine-pointed star on black field, white Maltese cross in the centre and the motto, "Rex Regum, Dominus Dominorum," 36x44; eighth, Order of Temple, red passion cross on white field and mottoes, "In Hoc Signo Vincas," "Non nobis Domine, non nobis, sed nomini tuo da gloriam," 36x55; ninth, Order of Temple, nine-pointed star of white on black field, with the passion cross in the centre, motto, "In Hoc Signo Vincas," 36x44; tenth, Order of Temple, jewel-black Templar cross, bordered with gold, inclosing a nine-pointed gold star, with passion cross in red at the centre, encircled by green and the motto, "In Hoc Signo Vincas," 36x44.

The Pavilion Committee have reserved the eastern half of the art gallery for the press. These rooms are to be elegantly fitted up and decorated. The western half of the art gallery was set apart as an ice-cream saloon. There are to be six soda fountains, at convenient locations, and six candy booths. There are to be two ice-cream saloons, one on the lower floor and one on the upper. The privileges for these are to be disposed of, and each privilege is to be distinct from the other.

The Refreshment Committee decided to recommend that there be a clambake, beehive-head roast and barbecue during the Conclave for 10,000 participants.

The Refreshment Committee have fixed the price of soda water at the Pavilion during the Conclave at ten cents per glass, ice-cream two bits per plate. Any deviation will lead to a loss of privilege. Each person securing a privilege during the Conclave will be required to handsomely decorate the space occupied by them in the Pavilion.

Conclave Items.

The Covington Mounted Commandery, of Kentucky, whose horses are coal black and of superior breeding, are expected. Special rates of railroad fare have been arranged for by some of the leading Eastern Commanderies. The Washington and Baltimore Templars, with a large party of ladies and gentlemen, have engaged the Wagner sleepers, and will be charged $250 for the round trip.

It is reported that William Sharon will use his Belmont villa in conjunction with the Palace Hotel for the accommodation of the Knights and their friends.

It has been estimated by Eastern papers that at least 5,000 Knights Templar will pay this Coast a visit during the summer. The most important Eastern Commanderies which are expected to participate in the Conclave exercises of this city are as follows: Palestine and Columbia, of New York city; Cyrene, of Rochester; Beausant and Baltimore, of Baltimore; Sts. John and Mary, of Philadelphia; De Molay and Boston, of Boston; Columbia and De Molay, of Washington.

A Maltese cross of crimson flowers, bordered with yellow, with a sword and crown, will be laid out on the lawn of Charles Crocker's residence, by direction of Mrs. Crocker, in honor of the coming Triennial Conclave of the Knights Templar.

Naval Commandery Knights Templar, of Vallejo, has been for the past few days holding an encampment at the Vallejo Sulphur Springs, three miles north of South Vallejo, where it has been visited by a large number of friends of the Commandery. Twenty-two members of Golden Gate Commandery, of this city, were present, and the drill is said to have been the finest ever given on this coast, the Passion and Maltese cross formation being perfect in precision. Oakland Commandery was represented by six Knights, and Chico, Healdsburg, Santa Rosa, Sacramento and Red Bluff represented. The dress parade did credit to the drill master, and Vallejo Commandery, under Captain Henderson, deserves great credit for his faithful work. During the Triennial the Commandery will camp at B'nai B'rith Hall.

A number of Knights Templar have already arrived in this city, and many are now sightseeing all over the coast. It is the wish of the Triennial Committee that the visiting Knights should call at the headquarters, on Montgomery street, and register their names and address. This will be of convenience not only to the Triennial Committee, but to the Knights themselves.

The Masonic Hall Association has contributed $500 to the fund of the Triennial Committee of Knights Templar for the coming conclave.

The Sir Knights at Suisun have subscribed $400 towards the expenses of the Triennial Committee; Oroville Commandery, $100; Santa Rosa, $100; California Commandery, $350; Masonic Hall Association, $350.

Macabee & Masterson and Leavitt & Hayman, managers of the Baldwin Theater, gave the use of their theater to the Committee for the entire week commencing July 2d, excepting Sunday, being eight performances in all—six evening performances and two matinees—as a benefit for the Triennial Conclave fund. The managers generously offer to pay all expenses for lighting, advertising and posters, and the entire Black Flag company, free of all risks to the Committee, the managers to receive fifty cents on each orchestra and dress circle seat sold.

Saturday evening, June 30, 1883, a special called meeting of this Lodge was convened for the purpose of conferring the W. M. degree on two candidates. Bro. F. C. Hensley performed the duties of Worshipful Master. It is unnecessary to mention that the work was ably done. A large number of the members and visiting brethren were present, and when seated at the time the 4th section was being hieroglyphically represented numbered 60.

Denver Commandery will come in a train of Pullman sleeping-cars via Denver & Rio Grande railroad, leaving Denver at 10 A. M., sharp, Thursday, August 16th, arriving in San Francisco Sunday noon, August 19th, the fare being $65 for the round trip. The Grand Commandery, of Colorado, will be escorted to San Francisco by the Denver Commandery. Great interest is being manifested by the Denver Sir Knights in regard to the coming Conclave.

General Pike, Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, has been for the past week conferring the degrees of that rite, from the fourth to the thirty-second degree, upon fifteen German-speaking citizens of Alameda and San Francisco. Another class of fifteen is forming, to receive their degrees within a week.

Sir Knight James F. Aglar, general agent of the Union railway, at St. Louis, and who has charge of the Ascalon Club Sir Knights, St. Louis, is here making arrangements for their reception and care while here. They are to appear mounted, and will bring their trappings with them. They will number 200 strong.

It is said that Boston Commandery contemplates remaining five days at Hotel del Monte, Monterey, arriving here on Monday, August 20th, but not in time to participate in the parade on that day.

The Oregon Commandery, No. 1, Portland, Oregon, will occupy Saratoga Hall, from the 18th of August, 1883, for one week for their headquarters.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W., and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN's progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be partakers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

WATCHMAN PUBLISHING CO.,
252 Market Street, S. F., Cal.

It is the official organ of several leading Orders, and the recognized representative of various other prominent fraternal and beneficiary associations flourishing west of the Rocky mountains. Among the Orders represented in its columns are the following:

FREE AND ACCEPTED MASONS,
ORDER OF EASTERN STAR,
KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS, ANCIENT ORDER UNITED WORKMEN,
INDEPENDENT ORDER ODD FELLOWS,
INDEPENDENT ORDER CHOSEN FRIENDS,
ANCIENT ORDER OF FORESTERS,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
NATIVE SONS OF THE GOLDEN WEST,
AMERICAN LEGION OF HONOR,
PATRIOTIC SONS OF AMERICA,
UNITED ANCIENT ORDER OF DRUIDS,
IMPROVED ORDER OF RED MEN,
KNIGHTS OF HONOR,
KNIGHTS OF GOLDEN RULE.

The RECORD is also one of the best home and family papers on the coast, being extensively and handsomely illustrated, and well-filled with original and carefully selected matter, conveniently arranged and carefully condensed matter pertaining to the household, health, culinary and general information. It is a welcome visitor to every member of the household.

The RECORD is issued by reliable and experienced publishers, who are liberal and enterprising in meeting the wants of their numerous patrons. Having the countenance and support of many of the best writers and most active members of the more than ordinary class of citizens, they are enabled to make their journal superior in influence and usefulness in one of the most wide-awake and progressive portions of our Union.

The publishers will endeavor to make every number a credit to the Orders represented, and a desirable representative to present to their neighbors and friends at home and abroad.

All members of the Orders represented, who are familiar with its columns, will readily see the advantage of subscribing and assisting in further enlarging the circulation and advancing the influence of the paper as rapidly as possible.

A limited number of first-class advertisements will be received at very reasonable rates for its circulation and good standing.

Free sample copies sent, on application, to all those who desire to assist in extending its circulation.

FRATERNAL RECORD PUBLISHING CO.,
252 Market St., S. F.

Work for the Advancement of the Order.

Let the family of each Workman to which comes the WATCHMAN, show to their neighbors who are not members of the Order, but who would make good and efficient Workmen, the advantages of this oldest of beneficiary organizations, and the one which they believe to be the best, as superiority is shown in each issue of this journal. If you are pleased with our paper, make it do the best possible work for the advancement of the Order, by circulating it where it will do the most good in creating favorable opinions of the Order in the minds of those who may be induced to join it and become good members.

COMPLIMENTARY SAMPLES OF THIS PAPER are occasionally sent to parties connected with the interests specially represented in its columns. Persons so receiving copies are requested to examine its contents, terms of subscription, and give it their own patronage, and, as far as practicable, aid in circulating the journal, and making its value more widely known to others, and extending its influence in the cause it faithfully serves. Subscription rate, $2 a year, in advance. Extra copies mailed for 10 cents, if ordered soon enough. Personal attention will be called to this (as well as other notices, at times,) by turning a leaf.

No Whiskey!

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is one of the very few tonic medicines that are not composed mostly of alcohol or whiskey, thus becoming a fruitful source of intemperance by promoting a desire for rum.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is guaranteed to be a non-intoxicating stimulant, and it will, in nearly every case, take the place of all liquor, and at the same time absolutely kill the desire for whiskey and other intoxicating beverages.

Rev. G. W. RICE, editor of the American Christian Review, says of Brown's Iron Bitters:

Cin., O., Nov. 16, 1881.
Gents:—The foolish wasting of vital force in business, pleasure, and vicious indulgence of our people, makes your preparation a necessity; and if applied, will save hundreds who resort to saloons for temporary recuperation.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS has been thoroughly tested for dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, weakness, debility, overwork, rheumatism, neuralgia, consumption, liver complaints, kidney troubles, &c., and it never fails to render speedy and permanent relief.

Business Notes.

AN IMPROVED CULTIVATOR AND SEEDER.—As many of our readers are interested in farming, we take pleasure in calling attention to the new Gale spring tooth cultivator and seeder. It is mounted on wheels and can be used as a harrow, cultivator, seeder or drill. It has been fully demonstrated by a large number of our leading and most successful farmers, that this new implement in utility, economy and for thorough cultivation is the best that has ever been used on the Pacific coast. Bro. Batchelder, of the firm of Batchelder & Wyllie, 37 Market street, takes pleasure in showing and explaining the workings of this new and valuable invention.

NEW AUCTION HOUSE.—Bro. L. Vincent, has associated himself with the house of William Butterfield & Co., as general auctioneers, commission merchants and house brokers. Their large salesroom, is at 13 and 15 Powell street, opposite the Baldwin Hotel. Regular sale days are Mondays and Thursdays, which includes new and second-hand furniture and household goods. Parties consigning their goods or entrusting the sale at private houses may rely on being dealt with fairly and liberally, and their property handled judiciously, prompt returns made or cash advances if desired.

BRO. HAMMER, P. M. W., is one of the firm of Hammer, List & Co., who do a general commission business at 409 and 411 Front street. They are also dealers in produce and sole agents for a number of the favorite and popular brands of flour. With ample capital being members of the S. F. Produce Exchange, they have the best facilities for marketing and handling produce of all kinds.

BROS. KREMPLE AND HALSTED, as undertakers and embalmers have established their business at 946 Mission near Sixth street. They have one of the finest reception rooms in the city, and are prepared as embalmers or undertakers to execute orders promptly, skillfully, and satisfactorily.

DRESSMAKING PARLORS.—Sister E. Stevenson, 115 Kearny St., rooms 7, 8 and 9, is one of the leading establishments, of this city. Quite a number of the elegant suits for the first reception at Sacramento were manufactured at these parlors. Her terms are very reasonable.

BRO. WM. SCHLOTHAN, proprietor of the Potrero Ranch Dairy, supplies pure country milk at the lowest rates. We recommend this dairy to families who wish a first-class article of milk. His depot is at the corner of Third and Howard streets.

The popular hatters, Bros. Stack & Lacombe, 639 Market St., under the Palace Hotel, have a large stock, latest fashions and finest goods, which they sell at low prices. Give them a call and be convinced.

CREAM OF ROSES.—Bro. John R. Williams, chemist and druggist at Stockton, is proprietor and manufacturer of what is known as balsamic cream of roses, for beautifying the complexion, softening the skin, and producing that natural freshness that belongs to the rosy tint of good health. It is not used as an artificial means to change the natural complexion, but as a remedial agent to impart a healthy action to the skin and body. It will produce a glow and freshness of complexion that make the old look young, and the young, fair and rosy. The demand for it is increasing largely. Orders are given for it from cities east of the Sierra Nevada.

BRO. FRED ZETT has opened and is now carrying on a good business as manufacturer and dealer in harness, saddles, bridles, saddleware, etc., at 330 Montgomery avenue, between Vallejo and Broadway. He makes a specialty of repairing and renovating, and at very reasonable prices. Parties wishing anything in his line will do well to call on Bro. Zett.

SAN FRANCISCO ARCHITECTURAL PUBLISHING COMPANY.—The California Architect and Building News, published by this company on the 15th of each month, has entered on the 5th volume; each number is replete with practical, useful and scientific articles, with drawings and fine cuts of modern buildings, not only valuable to Architects, Contractors, Carpenters, and Mechanics, but to every household and builder of houses. This publication is recognized as standard authority on building in this city, and from which the leading daily papers make up their monthly summary. The editors and managers, Mr. Jas. E. Wolfe and Geo. H. Wolfe, will issue 50,000 of a supplement soon, which is but a repetition of a similar one published in the spring, which was an unqualified success.

BRO. W. J. HORNE, who has a national reputation as inventor of "Dr. Horne's Electro Magnetic Belt," has invented an "Electro Magnetic Truss," with which healing powers are scientifically applied to rupture. We know of several cases of severe hernia and rupture that have been permanently cured by using "Dr. Horne's Electro Magnetic Truss." A large number of our well known citizens have given written testimonials that this truss has effected a cure of rupture of long standing in less than two months. Any one afflicted in this manner should address W. J. Horne, 702 Market street.

NORTH PACIFIC COAST RAILROAD.—The route by this line passes through one of the richest sections of this State to the Russian River and the Redwoods. Under the present management it has become a popular route for excursions, picnic parties and tourists. Fast and commodious steamers ply across the bay to San Rafael and Sausalito, in view of romantic valleys and evergreen forests along the Tomales Bay to the Big Trees, are features of this coast line. Excursion and round trip tickets, good for ten days, are sold at low rates, and the management for safety and comfort cannot be better.

THE PALACE DRUG STORE, 635 Market street, under Palace Hotel, enjoys the reputation of being a repository of a large variety of valuable medicinal preparations, and the finest and most reliable toilet articles. Bro. Jas. G. Steele, druggist and chemist, has had a large experience, and any article of medicine or perfumery bearing the name of James G. Steele & Co., druggists and chemists, can be relied upon as genuine, and of the best quality.

BRO. ED. HOLLAND, P. M. W., and one of the popular Merchant Tailors of this city, who was fired out by the recent disastrous fire on Post street, has opened a fine Tailoring establishment at 120 Post street, where, Phoenix-like, he is ready to serve his customers who want the latest and best in his line.

SWAIN'S family bakery and dining saloon, 636 Market street, opposite the Palace Hotel, is one of the chief resorts for families and the elite of this city. For good living, wedding cakes, nice icecream, and a cozy place to dine, go to Swain's, opposite the Palace Hotel.

HARBOR VIEW PARK.—This new and popular resort, situated at the terminus of the Union St. Cable Road at the Bay shore, known as Harbor View Park, has attractions and advantages as a place for picnics, and recreation for families and societies that make it a prominent feature of our city. The pavilion is 130 feet in diameter, and the beautiful walks through evergreen groves of pine and cedar to the Bay shore where there are fine swimming and bathing facilities, make a variety of scenery and temperature suited to all. Mr. Rudolph Herman, the proprietor, has been improving these grounds for 20 years, and assures us that they will be conducted in a manner that it will be the family resort for the best class of society.

C. WALLER & BRO., one of the well known grocery houses of this city, 1731 Market street, at Market street junction, are selling goods in their line at bottom prices. Bro. Chris. Waller has been Receiver of Valley Lodge, No. 30, since its organization, and knows how to keep a grocery store. Families wishing anything in their line would do well to call on this reliable firm for supplies of grocers, coal and wood.

BRO. E. HOLLAND, the veteran Receiver of Olympic, who was driven from his tailoring parlors by the late fire on Post street, has established himself opposite, over the Royal restaurant. He is known as one of our reliable and artistic tailors, and his numerous friends will be pleased to know that he is still wielding the shears.

THE MONTGOMERY MARKET, No. 606 Market street, opposite the Palace Hotel, kept by Messrs. Hoffman & Woenne, is supplied with the best meats, poultry, and eggs. Bro. Woenne attends personally to his customers, and has the reputation of selling goods very low, as represented, and delivers to any part of the city.

BRO. JOE. GUINTE'S Oyster House, 105 California Market, is one of the favorite resorts for the elite and fastidious. In the art of fine cookery and fixing notable dishes with their adjuncts, he is second to no caterer in this city. He dispenses his good cheer night and day.

BRO. WM. BEMAN, manufacturer of the Elastic Cork Truss and Braces for all deformities of the body, is a genius and benefactor to his fellow men. His office is in Shields' Building, 32 O'Farrell street.

BRO. J. MEREDITH DAVIES, General Agent for the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, has been a resident of our city for three years. He is known as a prominent and honored member of the leading fraternal societies, and by his general manner, politeness, integrity, and honest dealing with the traveling public, has become a great favorite. #### A. O. U. W. Financier's Cash Book and Itemized S. A. Report Book.

A Combination of Receiver's Receipts to Financiers, Financier's S. A. Reports to Lodges and Reports of Auditing Committee

(Compiled, Copyrighted and for sale by C. P. HITCH, Paris, Illinois.)

The above two books constitute a complete set for the use of Financiers of the A. O. U. W., and are so necessary for the proper time and labor-saving methodical transaction of Lodge business that every Financier should use them. Lodges, one and all, who have adopted the use of these books are unanimously of the opinion that these most valuable books should be used by every Lodge, in order to make A. O. U. W. bookkeeping uniform throughout the Order. The following Lodges in California are now using these books exclusively:

Lodges Nos. 1, 5, 16, 22, 24, 26, 34, 51, 52, 57, 61, 66, 78, 87, 89, 93, 96, 106, 108, 112, 118, 124, 134, 135, 142, 144, 158, 172, 175, 182, 183, 193, 194, 198, 202, 204, 205, 206, 207, 211, 214, and 219.

Sample sheets of the books have been sent to every Lodge some time since, and Lodges not having the books should, in their own interest at once procure them. A complete set will be sent to every Lodge for the very low price of $5. Expressage prepaid by order of C. P. Hitch, Grand Recorder, Paris, Illinois.

I most heartily recommend the adoption of the above books, and trust that every Lodge in this Jurisdiction will avail themselves of this new and most simple system of keeping their accounts. The "Cash Book" will last a Lodge of 100 members six to eight years, and the "S. A. Report Book" will last Lodges meeting weekly, 10 years, and those meeting semi-monthly, 20 years.

H. G. PRATT,
Grand Recorder of California.

Successful Patent Solicitors.

As Dewey & Co. have been in the patent soliciting business on this coast now for so many years, the firm's name is a well-known one. Another reason for its popularity is that a great proportion of the Pacific coast patents issued by the Government have been procured through their agency. They are, therefore, well and thoroughly posted on the needs of the progressive industrial classes of this coast. They are the best posted firm on what has been done in all branches of industry, and are able to judge of what is new and patentable. In this they have a great advantage, which is of practical dollar and cent value to their clients. That is this understood and appreciated is evidenced by the number of patents issued through their Scientific Press Patent Agency (S. F.) from week to week and year to year.

THE CHICAGO AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY. The shortest and most popular overland route to Chicago and the east is via the Chicago and the Western Railway. This line has the finest equipped trains, with Northwestern dining palace and drawing-room sleeping cars, insuring passengers safety, sure connections, greatest speed, quickest time, and most comfort. Bro. J. Meredith Davies, General Agent, No. 2 Montgomery, is always ready to assist passengers across the American continent.—Com.

TO DETERMINE THE HEATING POWER OF COAL. In determining the heating power of coal and other combustibles, an apparatus is now employed, consisting of a cylindrical vessel of copper, punctured below with numerous small holes, and to the top of which is attached a hollow tube of the same material, closed with a stop cock; a small vessel of the same form to contain the materials, and a basal piece in which to fit it. In practice, a weighed portion of the finely powdered combustible, is intimately mixed in the mortar with a certain quantity of nitrate and chlorate of potassa, and this mixture is next placed in the small copper cylinder, and ignited with a fuse of known dimensions.
Before the combustion takes place, the outer cylinder is slid down over it, being held there by springs attached to the basal piece, the whole contrivance being then plunged into a vessel containing a quantity of water of known temperature. The combustion soon sets in, continuing with vigor until the material has burned completely out. The instant the combustion has ceased, the stop cock in the tube is turned, and the water allowed to enter the air chamber, to cool down the heated interior; the temperature of the water is now observed. From these data it is easy to calculate the results, making allowance for the slight loss occasioned by the impossibility of bringing the apparatus back to its first temperature—owing to the increased temperature of the water—and the very small losses by radiation and conduc-tion.

PAINT FOR BOILER FRONTS AND SMOKE
STACKS.—The Manufacturer and Builder recommends the use of the Silico-graphic paint, so called. It is furnished already mixed, and may be further thinned down with oil when desired thinner. The practice reported by one of the master-mechanics at the Hornellsville shops of the Erie Railway Co., on locomotive smoke stacks, it strikes us, would be useful to follow in the case of boiler fronts. His practice is to rub the paint into the iron with waste, and sift over it some finely powdered blacklead, and polish briskly with a brush. The result is reported to be a rich, glossy, smooth black surface, which will not burn off, and is very durable.

Do not be deceived. Insist on having the genuine Brown's Iron Bitters, made only by the Brown Chemical Co., and take nothing else.

Band Saw Mills.

THE band-saw mill, says the Wood Worker, is evidently the mill of the future where valuable hard-woods are to be cut. Even now the novelty of this style of mill has almost worn off, and they are being set up in nearly every part of the country. That this mill is looked on as the coming mill is evidenced by the fact that there are not less than half a dozen prominent machinery builders who have recently brought them out, or are preparing to.

The product of a band-saw mill sells for a better price than the product of a circular saw;
but it is not every person who can run a band saw for cutting logs. The man who successfully engineers a band mill is always capable of doing first-class work, and with the advantages his machine possesses over the circular mill for nice work, there is little wonder that his product sells for more. There is likely to be a loud call for competent band-saw millers within the next few years.

THE TREATMENT OF CEMENT.—At an assembly of German manufacturers an interesting report was made by Von Froideville, in which he asserts that a really good cement, one that has been suitably mixed, not only does not crack, but even in a northern climate is able to resist the weather. If, however, too much water has been used, so that a mossy crust forms on the surface, and the whole mass is not homogeneous, the cement checks or cracks, and as soon as hair cracks appear moisture enters and the frost destroys it. Another fault referred to in this report is that of the cement striking out, which it ought not to do. Von Froideville also says that cement can be colored nicely and permanently with suitable colors, but quite a good deal of color is necessary if it is required to entirely hide the natural color of the cement and give it the exact color desired. It is to be borne in mind, however, that the addition of any coloring substance to cement tends to give it a softer and more friable character, so that there is required a comparatively larger quantity of cement than without color.

LOGICAL.—Master: "What made your cousin stay so late last night?" Servant: "Faith, sur, he was afeared to go home, sur." Master:
"Why didn't he go home earlier in the evening, then?" Servant: "Shure an' it wasn't till it was late that he was afeared!"

THE ORIGIN OF WATERSPOUTS.—What facts were noted of several waterspouts seen in the Pacific ocean have been examined by Mr. George Atwood, and he concludes as follows: The waterspouts on the Pacific were caused by a cloud heavily charged with cool moisture drifting from the high mountains of Costa Rica coming into contact with air currents and clouds traveling in a different direction and of a warmer temperature, by which contact the clouds surcharged with aqueous vapor acquired a rotary motion, causing them to discharge a part of their moisture and make them assume a cylindrical form, which finally fell by its own gravity into the ocean.

PRESSURE WILL NOT PREVENT FREEZING.—Water will freeze, however closely confined, if the proper temperature is present. If powder or dynamite is confined in a chamber, that is strong enough to prevent bursting, it will not prevent the chemical combination, when brought to the proper condition for explosion, whether by heat or otherwise. The pressure will last until reduced by cooling, new combinations, or waste. These experiments have been made by firing a confined charge and allowing it to waste through a small vent.

A POISONOUS WEED.—A drove of 4,000 sheep, lately from California and all ravenously hungry, were driven recently into a canyon, forty-five miles from Eureka, Nevada, for feed, when, after eating greedily, all took sick. They seemed crazed by what they had eaten, and the whole flock staggered and ran about, bleating sometimes piteously. In a day and a half all but 120 got well and fell to eating as though nothing had happened to them. The 120 died. It is not known what the poisonous weed is.

VISIBILITY OF RULED LINES.—In regard to the "visibility of ruled lines on glass," to which reference was made in these columns two or three weeks since, a correspondent of the Scientific American says: I find that lines properly ruled on glass are similar to graven lines; they are smooth, clean cut, having a definite shape and depth. Such lines are always visible in the microscope, and central or oblique light will show the bottom of each cut as a dark or colored line, plainly visible, and requiring no graphite or other foreign substance to indicate it. The microscope is the test for a properly ruled line. The mechanical elements (pressure, etc.) entering into the process of ruling are not at all evidences that lines have been properly ruled. The slightest accident to the point of the cutter, or the surface of the glass not being perfectly clean, will spoil a line; that is, produce a scratch which cannot be satisfactorily illuminated in any light. Well ruled bands of lines, 70,000 to 80,000 to the inch, are visible in the microscope with central light; and with a Smith vertical illuminator (giving central light), I have seen 100,000 lines to the inch. As these individual lines have a width of about 1-200,000 of an inch only, it follows that the difficulty is not to see such a narrow line, but to eliminate the diffractions which tend to blur the image in the microscope, and so prevent the resolution or separation of the lines in a band of them.

CORN AND WART CURE.—Gezou's remedy for corns and warts is prepared as follows: Acid salicylic, 30 grains; extract cannabis indic, 10 grains; collodion, one-half ounce M. A correspondent of the British Medical Journal states that he has found the application of a strong solution of chromic acid, applied three or four times a day with a camel's hair pencil, to be the most easy and efficient way of removing warts. They soon become black and fall off.

Scientific Press Patent Agency.

Inventors on the Pacific Coast will find it greatly to their advantage to consult this old experienced, first-class Agency. We have able and trustworthy associates and Agents in Washington and the capital cities of the principal nations of the world. In connection with our editorial, scientific and Patent Law Library, and record of original cases in our office, we have other advantages far beyond those which can be offered home inventors by other Agencies. The information accumulated through long and careful practice before the Office, and the frequent examination of Patents already granted, for the purpose of determining the patentability of inventions brought before us, enables us often to give advice which will save inventors the expense of applying for Patents upon inventions which are not new. ## Good Land and Sure Crops.

There has been steady and tolerably rapid advancement made in the growth of a majority of the towns in Colusa, Butte, Tehama and Shasta counties. Especially is this so in the agricultural districts where the land produces at least fair crops in all seasons—wet or dry—as does the land on the Reading Ranch. Those looking for homes in California where diversified farming will pay every year; where wood and water are plenty and easy to be obtained, and other desirable advantages are to be had, should examine the Reading Grant.

Some 14,000 out of 26,000 acres of the grant remain for sale at comparatively low rates, in quantities to suit purchasers, on easy terms. Prices range from $5 to $30 per acre. The tract is between two and three miles wide, with the Northern Division of the C. P. R. R. passing centrally through its entire length. Send postage stamp for free circulars containing information about Shasta County and these lands, to the proprietor of Reading Ranch.

Should Be Repealed.

That clause in our Beneficiary Law that provides for exemption of a new member from assessments till some one is placed on a death that occurs after he becomes a Master Workman, ought to be repealed. The only object of the law is to exempt the new member from payment of assessments to raise money for deaths that occurred before he became connected with the organization. This looks well on its face, but practically it amounts to very little. The intent of the law is not accomplished in fact, for new members are constantly paying on such deaths, and in actual practice it cannot be avoided.

For instance, take our own Jurisdiction. One assessment is sufficient to pay something more than seven and a half deaths. In the monthly death-lists there are, as a rule, several who died prior to the date of the death of the one on which an assessment is levied. Frequently of these some one appears who died perhaps six months prior to the date of the assessment call. The loss in such case must of necessity be paid out of the common fund which new and old members alike have contributed to create. It is utterly impracticable to do otherwise.

But it may be urged that in smaller Jurisdictions this difficulty is obviated. To some degree it is, but in certain cases it is aggravated. Suppose to make the matter plain, a Jurisdiction has barely two thousand members, and the assessments average but one a month. A death is proven up that occurred a year previous, and that the only one for the month. An assessment must be levied and on that death. Under the law only such members are liable as received the M. W. degree prior to the date of the death. We find the number of members now in good standing who were members at the date of the death on which the assessment is levied is far below two thousand. We cannot levy an assessment only on such members. This will of course raise less than two thousand dollars. Where is the money to come from to make up the deficiency? There is under the law no way out of this trouble.

But the complications that this law makes do not end here. If, as held by some, many of the Supreme Lodge among the rest (see report of the Committee on the P'engelly case) that a member coming from another Jurisdiction must be treated in the matter of assessments the same as a new member, then by a parity of reasoning we must conclude that one reinstated on a final card, or who was suspended from the Order must be treated the same way. But this would render impracticable other laws of the Order, one of which requires all arrearages of beneficiary fund collected on reinstatements to be forwarded with next remittance after receipt thereof, but makes no provision for any deposit to be left for a call to come after the member becomes liable on an assessment.

This law should be repealed at the earliest practicable moment, and the new law for the reinstatement of members suspended from the Order should undergo a thorough revision. But we must wait a year. By that time the faults which are now apparent only to the critical observer, will be so patent to all that the work will perhaps be easier than if it could be done now. But in the meantime the muddle we may get

Attention, Degree of Honor!

In explanation of the new methods of abbreviation of official titles in the reports of Lodge elections in the Degree of Honor, we would call attention again to the new Constitution adopted for this Degree at the last session of the Grand Lodge. In Article adviser to Chief of Honor, First and Second Maids of Honor to Lady of Honor."

We expect in the near future to devote a large portion of the space in one issue of the WATCHMAN to the Degree of Honor Lodges, about which not so much is clearly known by all Workmen as should be, and that little is apt to be somewhat mixed by the recent changes incident to the adoption of the new Constitution. To this end we would ask the co-operation of all officers and members of this Degree to send us their ideas, or any information that would be of general interest. We also desire to close up all gaps in our Degree of Honor Directory, and especially urge the Recorders or other officers whose duty it may be, to send us their latest complete election returns, with such other data as may be necessary to secure them a place in the Directory.

A Specimen Big Tree.

Continuing the views of California scenery, we present our readers with a view of "Wawona," one of the giants of the Mariposa Grove. It is well known that it is only by comparison that people generally arrive at correct conclusions. So discarding bare figures, the illustration speaks more plainly of the size of this mammoth, showing as it does, the loaded coach and six-in-hand bowling merrily through the tunnel hewn through its mighty trunk.

The two noted Big Tree Groves of California are the Calaveras and Mariposa Groves. The former contains the largest trees, but the latter is however more frequently visited by tourists, owing to its proximity to the Yosemite. The grant made by Congress containing the Mariposa Big Trees is two miles square, and embraces two distinct groves. The Upper Grove is in a quite compact body containing on an area of 3,700 by 2,300 feet in dimensions, just 365 trees of the Sequoia gigantea of a diameter of from one foot to twenty-seven feet, besides a number of small ones. The Lower Grove, which is smaller in size and more scattered, lies in a southwesterly direction from the other, some trees growing quite high up in the gulches on the south side of the ridge which separates the two groves.

PERSONAL.—Brother Truman H. Allen, County Clerk of Alameda, one of our foremost Workmen, and a prominent member of other fraternal organizations, is in Denver, Colorado, in attendance upon the National Encampment of the G. A. R., as a delegate from Appomattox Post, of Oakland. Bro. Allen is expected to give us some interesting correspondence relative to his mission there, and also his impressions of the country.

BROTHER S. K. DART, of Mendocino, but echoes the sentiment that we hear on all sides, when he writes us as follows: "The WATCHMAN is a splendid paper. There is so much information in it about the Order, and besides it is a nice household paper."

Home Miscellany.

We Can Make Home Happy.

Though we may not change the cottage
For a mansion, tall and grand,
Or exchange a little grass plot
For a boundless stretch of land—
Yet there's something brighter, nearer,
Than the wealth we thus command.

Though we have no means to purchase
Costly pictures, rich and rare;
Though we have no silken hangings
For the walls so cold and bare,
We can bring them over with good will
For flowers bloom everywhere.

We can dwell, make home cheerful
If the right course we begin;
We can make its inmates happy
And their truest blessings win.
It will make the small room brighter
If we let the sunshine in.

When we gather round the fireside
When the evening hours are long
We can blend our hearts and voices
In a happy, social song;
We can guide some erring brother,
Lead him from the path of wrong.

We may fill our homes with music
And with sunshine brimming o'er,
If against all dark intruders
We will firmly shut the door—
Yet, should Evil's shadows enter,
We must love each other more.

There are treasures for the lowly,
Which the grandest fail to find;
There's a chain of sweet affection
Binding friends of kindred mind;
We may reap the choicest blessings
From the poorest lot assigned.

A Legend of the Columbia.

When the little town of Astoria, which lies beneath the hills on the left shore of the Columbia, was in its infancy, it was even more picturesque than it is at the present day. It was situated on a rising ground, and close to the water's edge. The tall firs, hemlocks and spruce trees that surrounded the village protected it from the tempests of winter. Seven miles across the blue waters of the Columbia were to be seen the tree-capped hills of what is now the Washington Territory shore.

The part of this little town which was formerly called by its eight or ten inhabitants the "Lower Town," was originally a trading post of the Hudson Bay Company, and was first known by the name of Fort George. Here, thousands of miles from the civilized world, with the silence of a vast forest to the right of them and behind them; the silence and deeper solitude of a mighty ocean to the left; with the silence of a grand river in front of them; here, all alone, lived a few waifs from the great living world.

As may be well imagined, these beings who had wandered far away to this western world belonged to a class who might be said to consist of the curiosities of humanity. Trappers, men who had escaped from justice; men imbibed by the strange chances and misfortunes of life—such men formed this community. Amongst the last class was a curious old lawyer, a man possessed of profound ability. He had been brought up at the Inns of London. He had striven for many years in that great city, feeling, knowing his ability. In his attempt to obtain a foothold he had battled against poverty and misfortune, and had felt the pangs of that hope deferred which makes the heart sick; but the rushing stream of misfortune was too powerful for him with its terrible tide, and he lost his hold upon the world. He sought the peace and solitude of the great forest.

This last gentleman was the oracle of the little town, and many a lecture did he give to his audience there assembled, as he sat before the great stove in the Hudson's bay store, and puffed the gray tobacco smoke from his meerschaum pipe in clouds above him; for it was around this stove that the whole city assembled whenever it rained, which happened at that time, nearly every day in the year. Around this great stove, in the old log-wood store, this whole city, on these numerous occasions, chewed and smoked tobacco and told hideous yarns.

And all the while the Columbia, with the rain ever falling on its smooth surface, rolled on in grim silence to the ocean.

When such a strange event as the appearance of a white sail on the ocean happened, the quiet little community would be thrown into a state of enormous excitement. Then would the members of this community lay down their tobacco pipes, their quids would be cast aside, the people would put on their rubber boots, their oil-skin hats and coats, and the whole community, followed by the sheep, cows and dogs of the village, would go down to the beach; the great life-boat that belonged to the company would be manned, and the crew would prepare to pilot the ship into port. But such an occasion as this occurred only at very long intervals indeed.

There were Indians there in those days, but not one is now left to tell of the race that is gone. They were a quiet, peaceable and idle race. They lived chiefly by salmon fishing, and were not of a warlike disposition.

The little town of Astoria had been sleeping in the quiet manner which we have described, disturbed only by the cry of the panther and the howl of the wolf, when a great commotion was caused by the report that there was to be an increase in the population. A young clerk was to be sent out from England. The sale of blankets to the Indians had increased of late, and the company had come to the conclusion that an additional clerk was necessary. An old trapper had been seen coming around "Tongue point" in a canoe, one day, and he had brought the news from another station placed by the same company far up the Columbia. For many days the community smoked more violently as they discussed the news around the great stove in the old low-roofed store.

One day a sail was seen beyond "Sand island," and at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon the ship anchored in front of the town, and the new clerk was rowed ashore.

It was not long before the town became aware of the fact that this gentleman had been married to a lovely English girl the day before he left England. He had left his young wife in England, and had come to this far land to work for the company for a few years until he had saved money enough to go home and live with his wife in ease. It was a hard trial to him, and a hard trial to his young wife; but poverty was his master. He had thought first of delaying the day of marriage until his return, but this had already been delayed, and both were too deeply in love to reason. Instead of reasoning they got married. A few hours of exquisite bliss and they parted.

The white sails of the vessel which had brought the young husband to Astoria, were spread and slewed around to catch the wind; the vessel sailed away on her homeward voyage; the citizens watched the sails until they became a white speck on the ocean, and then became indistinguishable from the distant clouds on the horizon.

The new member soon settled down and became like the rest of the community, and it was not long before he acquired those habits which were common to all. At first he was the principal speaker at the old store, and would describe to the little band of listeners the great and busy world, so far away. Even the dogs of the village would sit on their haunches and look up into his face with a look of seeming interest as he spoke. And one time he told of the sweet, gentle wife that he left behind him, and as he described her in glowing terms his listeners leaned forward with their elbows on their knees, and one old pilot took off his hat and laid it on the floor, as the young man described the lovely face like that of an angel, and spoke of the golden hair and the eyes like the blue of heaven.

But after a while a deep melancholy took possession of him, and he hardly spoke to the rest. And he was often seen to wander up and down the beach in the evening, after the day's work was done. He became the subject of conversation, and the villagers all solemnly agreed—and especially did the old lawyer conclude—that he was out of his element; that that was no place for him.

Still the days dragged by and the rain came drearily down; still the Indians in their canoes paddled their way over the smooth surface of the river, and still the river carried Old Time in his invisible boat down to the ocean.

One day an Indian came into the store and informed the people therein that a big canoe was out on the ocean. They went out, and sure enough on the far horizon, and a "leetle to port of Sand Island," as a rough old sailor expressed it, was a sail. The sail moved across the mouth of the river, and many were the conjectures as to whether she would come into the river or not. At last the question was settled when the vessel rounded the north end of the sand-spit on the bar. In two hours the vessel, with all sails set, passed within a quarter of a mile of the town, and went on up the river. The vessel was a beautiful clipper packet; one of the splendid line of packets that sailed between this country and France sixty years ago; one of those vessels that were fitted up like palaces; that were built of oak and pine and were fastened with copper bolts. This was the Silvia de Gras, and she had a majestic appearance as she moved, with all sails set, onward up the Columbia.

Every spy-glass in the city was leveled at the vessel as she glided onward. A lady on the poop-deck was waving a handkerchief, and a spy-glass showed to the young clerk that this was the wife that he had left in old England. The day had been a bright one, and the sun was sinking at the mouth of the river through a heaven of golden clouds.

The young husband got into the life-boat with four companions and rowed up the river after the vessel. The sun sank, and the clouds of gold in the west took a crimson hue.

It was suddenly noticed that the vessel had stopped. She had struck upon a hidden rock. The vessel remained in the same position, without moving. The boat reached her, and the young husband seized upon a rope that was hanging from the bow of the vessel, in order to keep the boat in position. The ebb tide was rushing rapidly around the bow of the ship, forming whirlpools in its course.

During the voyage from England, the young wife had a constant presentiment that she would find that her husband was dead, for she had never heard from him, and this had induced her to go in search of him; and now, after a long sea voyage, which had lasted thirteen months, she, with inexpressible joy, saw his face again.

The young man, while holding his boat in position, was looking up into her face, and had just commenced to speak to her, when the tide coming around the bow of the ship caused the boat to lurch to one side, and he was thrown into the river. He lost his hold upon the rope and was carried down with the tide. One shriek from the young girl and she fell insensible to the deck. The young man rose to the surface, sank, rose again, and yet a third time, and was then lost to sight.

The young girl was taken ashore in an insensible condition. Some men living in a log cabin deserted it and gave it up to her. An old Indian woman, who had worked for some of the officers of the company, attended her during her sickness, which lasted two weeks. Day after day the rough inhabitants would come stealthily to the old cabin, lay their hats on the ground and wait silently until the old Indian woman happened to come to the door, when she would tell them how the young girl was. They would go away then, shaking their heads mournfully as they went. During most of this time she was delirious. The long-continued anxiety, followed by the unexpected sight of the one she loved, and that followed by his death at the moment of her greatest happiness, had been more than her gentle nature could stand. In her delirium—so the oldest inhabitants say—she seemed to think that she was on an island in the middle of the ocean, and that her husband was being torn from her arms by savages who intended to murder him.

But death cast his soft mantle of eternal sleep over the poor weary form at last, for one evening, as the sun was sinking down through the sky of fire that hung over the mouth of the great river, a ray of sunlight coming through the old log-cabin—a ray which had been resting on the poor weary face and playing in the hair of gold, grew dim, and more dim, until it had gone, and the night had come, and to her the night of death.

The pretty eyes, blue as the light of heaven, had lost their look of weariness, and their look of sorrow forever. There was no more suffering, no more pain for her—she was dead.

The next morning the body of the young husband drifted upon the beach.

Preparations were made for the funeral. Two canoes were placed side by side, and boards were placed between, forming a platform. On this the community placed green boughs. The carpenters of the packet ship made two pine coffins. The remains of the young people were placed in these, and they rested side by side above the platforms on the canoes. This was taken in tow by the life-boat, and the inhabitants took canoes, and the ship's company their boats, and this little company rowed slowly and silently around "Smith's point," and up Young's river. A number of Indians in their canoes followed grimly and silently in the rear.

Near a narrow gorge in this river, beneath the shadow of tall fir trees was found a little green spot, and here a grave was dug. The oldest man in the community said the burial service, and the unfortunate young pair were lowered to their eternal resting place.

The hull of the old Silvia de Gras withstood the shock of the wind and the weather for many years. It is said that people sailing by the old ship at midnight in their boats, have heard the despairing cry of the young girl, and on moonlight nights, the sailors have been seen pulling at the ropes of the vessel. But these mysterious visitors are to be seen no more, for the noble vessel has at length given up the battle with time. A few years ago the last remnant of the "Silvia de Gras" was carried away by the dark, rushing tide of the river.—Adair Wrecker, in Record-Union.

A PRACTICAL EMPRESS. The printing art—that is, the type-setting part of it—has an attraction to most people who gain an insight from observation into its mysteries. Some of the most distinguished men this country has produced, were practical printers, and many ladies of wealth have become type-setters solely because of the fascination surrounding the occupation. Of late years, women compositors, who pursue the occupation for a living, are numerous in all parts of the United States. To an intelligent mind this branch of the trade is a school, rich in knowledge, from which it can gather treasures not always to be found in books. Indeed, there have been eminent men, graduates from the composing room, who never had the advantage of a single term of schooling. When we consider these facts we are prepared to hear that the dashing Empress of Austria, who is proficient in horsemanship and field sports, is having a printing office erected in her palace, and intends to learn the printing business. The Empress is given to verse writing, and will, so soon as she has made sufficient advancement in her new vocation, set up her own poems in type and personally superintend their issuance from the press. The announcement has its novelty, but to the initiated is not at all surprising, only so far as it relates that the eccentricities of female royalty should lead it to the adoption of a mechanical pursuit.

A HOME THERMOMETER.—"I don't believe you have the water of the right temperature. You must get a thermometer," said an Austin mother to the new colored nurse.

"What am dat?"

"It is an instrument by which you can tell if the water is too hot or too cold."

"I kin tell dat ar without any instrument. Ef de chile turns blue, den de water am too cold, and ef hit turns red, den I knows dat de water am too hot."

Free Advice to Farmers.

Dr. J. W. Gally, author of "Sand" and other popular California stories, writes characteristically from his farm, near Watsonville, for the Pacific Rural Press as follows:

EDITORS PRESS:—I do not want to growl, nor scold, but I think that I ought to preach a little. It don't matter about any text; but we'll say, for instance, that the farmer is the King-Pin of Civilization. Nowhere else but in China is the true nobility of the farmer recognized. In that country the Emperor, in each springtime of the year, comes forth from his palace to plow the sacred furrow with his own hands, in order to show the high estimation in which his nation holds agriculture above every other, and all other occupations of head and hand. That is the way it should be. The Emperor not only "knows which side of his bread is buttered," but he also knows where the bread and butter comes from. Wise potentate.

But in This Country

How is it? Why, every jack-leg lawyer, every pi-sticker of a country Court House clique, every Jew peddler and free-lunch curb-stone broker thinks he is superior to and capable of being the adviser and guardian of the average rancher. And what is the advice of these volunteer guardians to the farmer? It is this to wit, work. The farmer must go to town less often, and must work more diligently, and buy more machinery, and plant more trees, and take more newspapers, and keep up with the times, and not forget to work. Three or four

Fat Rascals

Of lawyers and brokers—yes, and editors, too will come out of a city restaurant picking their teeth, after a fine cheap dinner, and they will discuss the crop prospect, and their inevitable conclusion will be that with "our glorious climate" and splendid soil, all that is needed to insure to them a better dinner for less money is, that the California rancher must work harder and farm closer. And they add that if the present rancher—he who has made the State what it is—if he will not work harder, then Villard, on his northern railroad, must bring us the Swedes, Norwegians, Finns, and other poverty-blasted peasantry of North Europe. Or Stanford et pals will bring Italian lazzaroni, via New Orleans, for $25.00 per head. These tooth-picking gossip of the tag end of city wisdom are, eight times out of ten, the sons of farmers whose enraged, or exhausted, male parent booted them off the ranch for laziness; or else their proud female parent, deluded with the fond idea that her son had "talents into him," squeezed the hens and skimped the family butter, to raise cash enough to buy him some store clothes and squeaky boots, and bear's grease, so that he might be "purty" enough to wear out the seat of his pantaloons in a law office, under the impossible assumption that his hands are too handsome to handle a dung-fork.

These are the Fellows

Who set themselves up as guardians of the rancher, and their advice all ends in the one word—work. Just as though the farmer did not know that it takes work to make a crop. But I do not blame these city stove-herders so much as I do some other people in the towns and cities, who are not to be excused. One of these is the Court House country editor. The farmer's friend, he calls himself; but, really, he will be found often to be the friend of the County Clerk, Sheriff, and of one of the county political cliques. His business is to hunt up and publish advertisements, shake hands and stick type until election comes around, and then his business—the great business of his life—is to elect his bosses and their friends. This course of conduct, of course, keeps him poor—unless he has an under talent for trading on the outside, in town lots, or wood land, or something. This sort of editor is all over the coast, wherever there is, and often where there is not, a Court House. He is often a first-rate good fellow "to run with"—I like him very much—but he pays no attention to ranching, except what reports he gets from railroad offices, warehouses, county fairs and horse races. Lately

A Drouth Impended.

All these editors copied the remarks of each other; and those remarks were full of advice to the farmer, and the advice was—work. If it was going to be a dry season the farmer must plow more—he must plow early, late, and often, so as to keep the moisture in the ground.

The Farmer must Work

And fight off the effects of the drouth. If he had trees or vines he must not only keep his plow going with one hand and hunt bugs with the other hand, but he must thin out his crop (with his teeth), so that his vines and trees could have less load to carry through the dry time. All this was to be done by the same man at one time, and thus, by increasing labor and closer attention, and

More Work.

The dry season was to be tided over and no great damage done after all.

The price of product from farms, orchards and vines may decrease, the yield grows per acre less, the fertility exhausts, the enemies of good crops rally on foot and on the wing, and for all of these, including drouth, flood, pestilence and monopolies, the average rural editor and city liner has, at the point of his ready pen, one howl of remedy, and that is

Work, Rancher, Work.

Scratch, scrape, economize, try new methods and new machines, and when they fail try something else, but don't forget to work. Now, in all this lot of advisers, when the dry season seemed to hang over the land, I scarcely heard one voice saying that then was the time for the landholder to lower the price of his land; for the landlord to come down in the rent rate; for the railroads and steamships and express companies to lower freights and fares; for the lawyer to take less fees, the office-holder to remit a fraction of his salary, the church to take less pew rent, or the Jew to sell a better coat for less money. The dry season seemed about to let the bottom out of the #### Commercial Tub.

And the California farmer seemed on his way to be crucified; but there was no preacher in his sacred desk looking over his congregation seeking for a stalwart Joseph to go forth to relieve the rancher of his cross. In all the land there was only one remedy written, spoken, sung or whistled, and that remedy was, let the rancher work. Now,

In Conclusion,

I wish to suggest that when next a dry year threatens the land, the critics, wisacres, brokers, merchants, lawyers, preachers, editors and other non-producers may rack their ingenuity and give us some other remedy than

"Work, Rancher, Work."

Because there never was a time that, if he had half a chance, the rancher did not fill the markets with the proofs of his labors.

Starting a Young Man.

It is related of a wealthy Philadelphian, who has been dead these many years, that a young man came to him one day and asked for help to start in business.

"Do you drink?" asked the millionaire.

"Occasionally."

"Stop it! Stop it for a year, and then come and see me."

The young man broke off the habit at once, and at the end of a year he again presented himself.

"Do you smoke?" asked the great man.

"Yes, now and then."

"Stop it! Stop it for a year, and then come and see me."

The young man went away, and cut loose from the habit, and after worrying through another twelve months once more faced the great philanthropist.

"Do you chew?"

"Yes."

"Stop it! Stop it for a year, and then come and see me."

But the young man never called again. When some one asked why he didn't make one more effort, he replied:

"Didn't I know what he was driving at? He would have told me that as I had stopped chewing, drinking and smoking, I must have saved enough money to start myself, and he'd been about right."

Investigating Spiritism.

A dispatch from Philadelphia contains the following information: The late Henry Seybert, who gave a new bell for Independence Hall, left a large number of bequests, amounting to $4,500,000 for the public and charitable use, among which was one of $50,000 to endow a chair of moral and intellectual philosophy in the University of Pennsylvania, with the expressed wish that the University would thoroughly investigate modern spiritualism, in which he was a firm believer. The University accepted the bequest, and has now begun steps to carry out the wish of the testator. A Philadelphia special says: A commission has been appointed, of which the Chairman is Dr. William Pepper, Provost of the University and a gentleman of acknowledged scientific attainments of a high order. Dr. Pepper will look into the physiological and medical phases of the problem, and will devote his attention to the subject of spiritualism from these standpoints. Professors Liedy and Koenig will contest the physical aspects so far as they relate to natural philosophy, while Mr. Fullerton and Rev. Professor Thompson will view the subject from a purely intellectual and metaphysical standpoint. There is now on hand available for the prosecution of an investigation $15,000. No formal meeting of the Commission has yet been held, although there exist among its members a general understanding of the work and the necessities of the investigation.

A BIT OF MOTHER'S DRESS.—A little fellow from one of our charitable institutions was being taken to a New Jersey farm by an agent, the owners of the farm having had the boy bound to them for a term of years, when the agent noticed that the boy kept placing his hand inside of his jacket on the left side, and occasionally would look within with a tender look. At last he said, "What have you got in there, my little friend?" "Oh, nothing sir," he replied, "only a bit of my mother's dress, which I've sewed on my coat. It was the dress she had on when she died, and now it kind of comforts me when I touch it."

Tommy's Aquarium.

All the morning Tommy had been at the brook. He had worked busily, and was watching the water rise higher and higher above the dam, until it should be ready for him to launch his new boat. His mind was so taken up with his work that he did not see the big mud turtle, which by some mishap had been driven from his home, and now came plodding along the bank until he crawled right over Tommy's bare feet. "Ough!" said Tommy, as he jumped aside. "What a big fellow. Wish I could take him home with me. Think I can, too." And Tommy stooped down and picked him up, being careful not to get his fingers too near his mouth, as he had a queer way of snapping at them.

The poor turtle had many a fall before Tommy put him down in the back yard; and then, to the little boy's great disgust, he refused to move; would not even put out his head and look around, but lay curled up in his shell. At last Tommy put him in an old can, that he might not get away, and left him.

In the afternoon his friend, Joe Edwards, came to see him. On going out into the yard to play, Joe saw the turtle:

"Hello, Tom! where did you get him? Let's take him out and see him run."

"I found him down by the creek. But I'd like to see you make him run! I tried it for about half an hour this morning."

"Pooh! that's easy enough. Run into the kitchen and get a coal from the stove."

Tommy obeyed, having an idea that his turtle-ship disliked fire, and would run at the sight of it. He seized the fire-shovel, and, as he scooped some coals from the grate, he scattered coals and ashes over the floor which Biddy had just mopped. With any angry cry she was after him with her broom, but Tommy escaped with his coals, and in another moment Joe had placed one on the turtle's back, and sure enough he did travel as fast as his short legs would carry him; but this was cruel sport, and the boys were soon sorry they had done it. They were about to put him into the can, when Tommy said:

"Oh, Joe, let's make a 'quarium like papa's."

"Just the thing," said Joe, but added: "We haven't any glass tank like his."

"But the old can is big enough; won't that do for a starter? And then when papa sees what a fine c'lection we have, maybe he will buy us one."

So the boys gathered rocks and placed them in the bottom of the can, filled it with water, and then it was ready for the turtle. But when he was in, Joe and Tommy were at a loss to know what to do next, for they had not thought before that they had nothing but a turtle for their aquarium.

Presently Joe shouted, "pollywogs," and started for the creek, followed by Tommy, whose cap served the purpose of carrying the pollywogs to their new home. "There's a toad out by the fountain; that'll help to fill up, and papa says snails like damp places, so I guess they'll like our 'quarium," said Tommy. So the toad was caught, and in company with half a dozen snails was given a position in the aquarium.

"Tell you what, Tom, one of your mother's gold fish would set it off."

"Yes, when she comes home I'll ask her for one, and you can come over to-morrow and we'll put it in."

It was growing dark, and Joe said he must go home. Tommy went into the house, ate his supper, and soon after went to bed to dream of a mammoth "quarium," with hundreds of gold fishes and thousands of turtles, toads and tadpoles.

In the morning, as soon as he was dressed, he ran to look at his treasures. Just as he reached his aquarium, the toad, who seemed to have been waiting till Tommy appeared, with a triumphant croak, hopped from the edge of the can and disappeared in the tall grass. On looking in, Tommy found not a drop of water in the can. It had a tiny hole in it and, during the night, the water had all leaked out. The pollywogs had perished on the rocks, the snails crawled safely out, the turtle remaining sole occupant of the aquarium, and he did not seem to be exactly comfortable.

Tommy felt like crying, but hearing footsteps, he looked up. There stood Joe, and both boys broke into a laugh. Then, Tommy said, "Let's take him back to the creek Joe."

One Cause of Railroad Accidents.

The most carefully compiled statistics inform us that about 1,400 railroad employes are killed in this country every year, and from 8,000 to 10,000 more or less injured. This great sacrifice of human life is not, as might at first thought be surmised, caused principally by the frequent collisions or derailment of trains, but by accidents in making up and handling trains at stations. The loss is nearly all confined to brakemen or station train helpers; and the opinion is expressed by good railroad authority, that a very large portion of these accidents might be avoided by improved, or rather uniform methods of constructing cars.

It is a very general impression that system and uniformity is the prevailing rule in that portion of practical mechanics, which relates to car construction, but such is not the fact. From a circular issued by the secretary of the Master Car Builders' Association it appears that the very opposite of uniformity is the rule among car builders for railroad companies. The master car builder of the Boston and Albany railroad says he has forty different kinds of brake heads and shoes, eleven of journal boxes, thirty-seven journal bearings, ten cast iron and five or six wrought iron draw bars, eight or ten different draw bar side castings, and a multitude of various other different parts of a car. The master car builder of the Baltimore and Ohio road reports sixty-five different kinds of journal bearings, and in eleven other articles in common use varieties numbering from twenty-five to six. And similar reports have been sent from other railroad authorities.

This is a singular exhibit, and it would seem almost that human perversity and not mere chance, or individual convenience, had produced this wide and confusing diversity of construction. It is a matter which may well challenge careful inquiry, not only of the association referred to, but of the general public as well.

Power of the Imagination.

That imagination may prove fatal, receives fresh proof from "a case of fatal shock from supposed snake bite," reported in the Medical Press, April 25, 1883, by Dr. C. E. Francis. The patient, awakened from his sleep by some thing creeping over his naked legs, immediately jumped to the conclusion that it was a cobra, went into a state of collapse and died, though it was discovered, even before death, that the supposed cobra was a harmless lizard. There is no doubt but that a very large portion of the sickness and death of adults might be warded off by a proper and determined exercise of the will power.

A late number of Hall's Journal of Health, in dwelling upon this subject, remarks as follows: To regain or recover health, persons should be relieved from all anxiety concerning diseases. The mind has power over the body. For a person to think he has a disease will often produce that disease. This we see effected when the mind is intensely concentrated upon the disease of another. It is found in the hospital that surgeons and physicians who make a specialty of certain diseases are liable to die of it themselves, and the mental power is so great that sometimes people die of diseases which they only have in imagination. We have seen a person seise in anticipation of a voyage before reaching the vessel. We have known a person to die of cancer in the stomach when he had no cancer or any other mortal disease. A blindfolded man slightly pricked in the arm, has fainted and died from believing that he was bleeding to death. Therefore, well persons, to remain well, should be cheerful and happy, and sick persons should have their attention drawn as much as possible from themselves. It is by their faith men are saved, and it is by their faith that men die. If he wills not to die, he can often live in spite of disease, and if he has little or no attachment for life, he will slip away as easily as a child will fall asleep. Men live by their souls and not by their bodies. Their bodies have no life by themselves; they are only resources of life—tenements of their souls. The will has much to do in continuing the physical occupancy or giving it up.

A RECENT cough will almost always yield to the following treatment within two or three days: Mix in a bottle four ounces of glycerine, two ounces of alcohol, two ounces of water, two grains of morphine. Shake well. Dose for an adult, one to two teaspoonfuls every two or three hours. Half this quantity to children from ten to fifteen years. It is not safe to give it to infants or children under ten years of age.

Household Hints.

A WASHING MIXTURE.—Take three pints of hot water and slice into it two and a half pounds of common yellow bar soap and stir it up over the fire till it is dissolved. Then add two ounces of sal-soda, two ounces of borax and a teaspoonful of spirits of turpentine. Stir all together until well mixed and dissolved. Take it from the fire and stir it till quite thick, then turn into a pan or small tub and when cold cut into bars. When washing dissolve a large piece of it in a pint of boiling water, then wring out the clothes that have been soaking all night and put them into the boiler with cold water. Turn in the dissolved soap and let the water become scalding hot. Take them out and rinse in cold water, rubbing off any spots that are seen; wring again and rinse and blue and hang out to dry. It saves a great deal of muscular strength, and it will wash colored clothes as well as white clothes, and is also good for washing white paint. After this small recipe is tried and found satisfactory a much larger quantity can be made by increasing the recipe four or eight times, for the older the soap the better it is.

BOILED FLOUR GRUEL.—Boiled flour gruel is very good in cases of sickness, in which the strength is much reduced. To prepare the flour, put into a basin as much as it will hold, pressed tightly down. Then tie a cloth over it, and allow it to boil hard for six hours. Then take off the cloth, and let the flour stand in the basin till next day, when remove the crust which will have formed, and put the remainder away in a covered jar. For use, mix four tablespoonfuls of the flour smoothly into a paste, then pour on it half a pint of boiling milk or water, and boil for ten minutes, constantly stirring to avoid lumps. Brandy, sherry, lemon juice or cream may be added, according to taste. Gruel may also be made from baked flour, but it is not so easy of digestion.

SAVE THE BREAD CRUMBS. The waste of bits of bread in some families is unpardonable. Every fragment of clean bread, if no bigger than a pea, should be saved and used. If attention be given to this, the quantity of crumbs that would otherwise be wasted, will astonish one who tries it. Do not allow the crumbs to mold; place them in a plate in the stove oven with the door open, until they are quite dry. Then roll the crumbs until they are as fine as meal, and keep in a carefully closed vessel; a fruit can is excellent. Crumbs prepared in this way are useful to bread chops or cutlets, oysters for broiling, egg-plant for frying; they make the most perfect of bread puddings, and are unequalled for stuffing.

TO MAKE A GLOSS UPON SHIRTS. To secure a gloss when ironing shirts, take of raw starch one ounce; gum arabic, one drachm; white of an egg or blood albumen, half an ounce; soluble glass, quarter of an ounce; water,  $g.$  Make the starch into a fine cream, dissolve the gum in a little hot water, cool and mix it with the albumen, and beat up the mixture with the starch liquid; then add the water-glass (solution) and shake together. Moisten the starched linen with a cloth dipped in this liquid, and use a polishing iron to develop the gloss.

NUNS' TOAST.—Cut four or five hard-boiled eggs into slices. Put a piece of butter half the size of an egg into a saucepan, and when it begins to bubble add a finely chopped onion. Let the onion cook a little without taking color; then stir in a teaspoonful of flour. Add a cupful of milk, and stir until it becomes smooth; then put in the slices of eggs and let them get hot. Pour it over neatly trimmed slices of hot buttered toast. The sauce must be seasoned to taste with pepper and salt.

CORNSTARCH.—Cornstarch is a thing which may be treated in an infinite variety of ways. One of the nicest is to make it into blanc mange, and to stir in fruit before pouring it into the mold. Any sort of fruit will do for this purpose, and several kinds may be used at once, if liked. Chocolate added in the proportion of one to two of cornstarch makes a very nice pudding, especially if it be served with a milk and egg sauce flavored with vanilla.

HAM TOAST.—Grate up finely some dry ham, and mix it with the beaten-up yolk of an egg and a little cream, and let it just simmer. Have ready some nicely toasted slices of bread, butter them, and lay them on a flat dish that has been well heated. Cover each slice with some of the mixture, and serve very hot.

Lodge Locals.

Recorders are invited to correspond. Lodge may also find suitable reading here for "Good of the Order."

OUR CITY LODGES.

Olympic, No. 127.

Deputy Carroll, assisted by Harry J. Lask, as G. G., with a full set of Grand officers, installed the officers of Olympic, on Tuesday evening, 10th ult. A good deal of sociality, small amount of congratulatory speeches, and a bountiful repast, with choice coffee provided by Bro. Adams, made the evening very enjoyable, and there seemed to be a spirit of cordiality and pleasantry that augured a prosperous term under Bro. Adams' administration, who seems to have a happy faculty in his work and is known as an experienced presiding officer.

Unity, No. 27.

Under the new administration, of which Bro. Black is M. W., Unity, No. 27, is fairly prosperous. At their last meeting their large hall was well filled, and the M. W. degree was conferred on two candidates in a masterly manner. Charles E. Wilson, Deputy Grand Master, was present, and took occasion to compliment the officers and members of this old pioneer and congratulate them on their growth and prosperity. There was quite a list of petitions received for the degrees, and it was altogether a very happy and successful meeting.

Valley, No. 30.

On July 18th, a genuine surprise was given to Bro. Chris. Waller, P. M. W., who was elected Receiver, at their institution, and has served continuously for ten terms, and is now serving the eleventh term. Bro. E. F. Loud, P. M. W., made the presentation speech, and in a very eloquent manner reviewed his record and said: "For your faithful service in caring for the funds of this Lodge which was started in Hayes valley by a few men in the humble walks of life, over 950 men by this token of love and respect endorse your continued labors and integrity." This magnificent present is a service of silver consisting of six pieces and salver, on the main piece of which is engraved: "Presented to Chris. Waller, by Valley Lodge, No. 30, July 18, 1883." The veteran Receiver was completely nonplussed and in feeling words only said: "I feel that this is too much; I thank the brothers, and while called upon shall serve you as well in the future." A short recess was had and general congratulations indulged in, of which Bro. Waller was the chief recipient.

Yerba Buena, No. 14

Is one of the thriftiest Lodges in the city. The interest is well kept up, and there is always a good attendance at regular meetings. There is $6,000 in the bank to the credit of Yerba Buena's trustees, and she can thus well afford to pay her sick members $10 weekly benefits. The present membership is 260.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

The representative of the WATCHMAN has had the pleasure of recently attending the regular sessions of a number of the Lodges of Alameda county, and improved the opportunity of taking some notes of interest. He was everywhere most cordially received and takes this opportunity of returning thanks for the courtesies extended. The attendance at most of the Lodges is light during these summer evenings, from various causes, one of which is that many of the members are still enjoying their vacations in the country. The Lodges in the order visited were as follows:

Oak Leaf, No. 35.

This is one of our largest Oakland Lodges, numbering 226 members in good standing. The light attendance on the evening of our visit was partially explained by the fact that a large percentage of the members are carpenters who were called away by a carpenters' nine-hour-law meeting, held the same evening. Master Workman McDonald, has made a good start, ably flanked as he is by good assistant officers, one of whom Bro. D. S. Hirshberg, the efficient Deputy Sheriff of the county, has held the office of Financier for many terms.

California, No. 1.

Tuesday evening we were welcomed by the members of this old pioneer in West Oakland. Although the oldest Lodge in this Jurisdiction, it by no means shows the infirmity of old age, but rather the experience and solidity of a vigorous manhood. It is not oppressed with an overload of would-be dignity, either; but its members show the same jovial spirit, and aptness at repartee and humor, that have long characterized them; but nevertheless, the business is dispatched in good form. Master Workman Barker occupies his post with an ease and grace that will undoubtedly make him as popular as his predecessor.

Alameda, No. 5.

The majority of the members of this Lodge, were in attendance at Alameda, Wednesday evening, the 18th ult., to consummate the election and installation of officers which had been delayed. Bro. Chas. W. Nelson, was elected M. W., and the efficient Recorder, Bro. E. Minor Smith, was re-elected. The names of the other officers will be found in the list of Lodge elections, continued. Retiring M. W., Felix Marcuse, gave up his chair with a few words of thanks for the courtesy extended him by the members during his term of office, and District Deputy Forbes then proceeded with the installation of officers. Alameda seems now to be on the up hill road and gathering strength, although she suffered considerably by the defection of members who for greater convenience withdrew and joined West End Lodge at the time of its institution.

Brooklyn, No. 3.

One of the "live" Lodges of this county is Brooklyn, No. 3. Although not having a membership roll as large as some others, especially in Oakland proper, yet the ninety odd that she does possess are men of the best standing, and imbued with the thorough Workman spirit. Bro. George Chase, the Recorder, has held that office since the organization of the Lodge, in 1876. Bros. Rector and Smallman, as Financier and Receiver, respectively, are both in their sixth term. These three brethren are eminently fitted for their offices, being professional book-keepers, and are known as the "spike team," in whose Lodge books no error has yet occurred. The present M. W., Bro. Farrier, also proves his popularity by occupying his position for a second term. Under the head of "Good of the Order" were several speeches, including one from Supreme Master Workman Fish, who is a member of this Lodge, and who gave a talk upon matters in general that was attentively listened to. In this connection we append an interesting historical extract from an article in the Brooklyn Idette, from the pen of Deputy Grand Recorder, J. W. Watson, also a member of this Lodge: "On the 29th day of September, 1876, H. G. Pratt, now the Grand Recorder, instituted Brooklyn Lodge, No. 3, with some sixteen charter members. The first year of its labors was met with much opposition. The Order was new in this State, and had but few warm advocates. Many were willing to endorse it, only their confidence in the workings was sadly too small. Then there was the old line of insurance companies, who, on all occasions, were first to condemn the new feature. But after due course of time these embarrassments were removed, and confidence being established, many sought to unite with the Order. From that time to the present the Lodge has, by its influence, gathered together many of our best citizens. The immediate results of the Order have been witnessed on five occasions by the brothers, who have gone to the home of the widow and orphans with $2,000, in compliance with the laws of the Order. The members of this Lodge comprise the best element of East Oakland society, not that they claim to have all la creme, but a goodly share. At the last session of the Supreme Lodge, held at Buffalo, Dr. M. W. Fish, the First Past Master of Brooklyn Lodge, was elected to the highest position in the gift of the Order in the United States, that of Supreme Master Workman, and in this bestowment of honor upon one of our esteemed citizens, not only do the members of Brooklyn Lodge feel that they have cause to rejoice, but California, with her 15,500 Master Workmen, is joyful over the high honors from the parent society. The Order at large is in a most flourishing condition, with a membership of nearly 130,000. Not increasing as rapidly as some of the kindred Orders, but steadily and surely its march is onward. Resting upon the solid and noble foundation of charity, hope and protection, none other but prosperity will be the result. Since the introduction of the Order in this State—August 21, 1875—to the present time, the amount of good as the result cannot be computed any more than one can estimate the value of the gentle dew, the rain or the rays of the sun upon vegetation and life. Nearly $900,000 have gone directly into the homes of the widows of our deceased brothers. In the last year alone 133 widows secured $2,000 each from our Order. Who can tell the amount of anguish, sorrow and want that has been driven from the widow's door by this noble Order? Truly, 'it is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

Oakland, No. 2.

Friday evening, we were made welcome by the members of this Lodge. Oakland, No. 2, justly prides herself as standing among the foremost of this line in the State as regards financial condition. Her expenditures for sick benefits are carefully dispensed but are most liberal. M. W., Bro. Russell, although but a short time in the chair shows himself to be a thorough parliamentarian, and the business of the Lodge is executed with dispatch, but slighted in no part. Here as in many others of our Lodges, it is found to be to the interest of all concerned, to retain as long as possible in office Recorders and Financiers who gather wisdom with experience. In this Lodge Bros. Mitchell and Douglass, come under this head. Oakland, No. 2, has now over 160 members in good standing.

Eden, No. 204.

D. D. G. M. W. Cunningham installed the following named officers last Saturday evening: H. W. Meek, P. M. W.; H. Landschneider, M. W.; Henry B. Martin, F.; C. Gercke, O.; Henry Dopman, Rdr., (re-elected); E. O. Webb, Fin., (re-elected); A. P. Crane, Rvr., (re-elected); L. Hansen, G.; J. Francis, I. W.; A. Tychsen, O. W. D. D. G. M., W. Alden, and other brothers from Keystone Lodge, Oakland, and P. M. W.'s Sturtevant and Ebee, M. W. Smith and others from San Leandro Lodge, were present and ably assisted Bro. Cunningham. After the installation ceremonies speeches full of mirth and wit were made. Bro. P. M. W., E. O. Webb, in a fitting address, presented, on behalf of the Lodge, Bro. Henry Dopman, who has faithfully performed the arduous duties of Recorder, since the institution of the Lodge, and who has not missed a meeting, with an elegant, enameled, solid silver badge of his office, appropriately engraved with name, date, etc. Bro. Dopman was completely surprised, but responded in words of gratitude and feeling.

Haywards, No. 18.

D. D. Edw. Cunningham installed Haywards Lodge, assisted by Ed. O. Webb and Henry Landschneider, of San Lorenzo, all the officers recently mentioned in the WATCHMAN being installed with the exception of Recorder, which position was filled by Geo. A. Oakes, by the resignation of Julius Brown.

Ivy, No. 4, D. of H.

The public installation of the officers of Ivy Lodge, No. 4, Degree of Honor, occurred in A. O. U. W. Hall, Oakland, Thursday evening, the 19th ult. Pacific Lodge, No. 7, has set a good example to other regular Lodges having Degree of Honor Lodges in their vicinity, by taking Ivy under its protection and care, and allowing it one of its (Pacific's), regular meeting nights every month, which time is looked forward to with pleasure by all concerned for the pleasant social meetings that Ivy gives in return. The present occasion was one, particularly illustrating this fact. District Deputy, Chas. M. Alden, performed the installation ceremonies in his usual faultless style. The list of officers will be found under the head of "Lodge Elections." After the installation a programme of musical and literary exercises was very creditably rendered by the several ladies and gentlemen taking part as follows: Organ solo, N. L. Le Noir; recitation, A. S. Cheminant; song, Ollie Wilson; duet, Misses Stevenson and Graham; recitation, Miss Ruby Smith; song, Miss Addie Pritchard; quartette C. G. Reed, son and daughters; an illustration of ventriloquism, by Mr. Jester. Coffee and cake were then partaken of, after which dancing was indulged in until twelve o'clock. The hall was well filled, and those present were highly pleased with the evening's entertainment.

Mission, No. 56.

Under new regulations of the A. O. U. W. the ceremony of installation of officers may be held in public. Taking advantage of this permission, Mission Lodge, No. 56, held its installation Saturday evening, the 7th ult., in Washington Hall, in the presence of a large number of friends, not members of the Order. The front of the hall was reserved for the use of the Lodge by a railing of evergreens and flowers. The stage was beautifully decorated, and over it were the letters A. O. U. W. in flowers. The ceremony was conducted by W. W. Haley, D. D. G. M. W., assisted by H. Dusterberry and F. J. Steinmetz. At the conclusion of the formal ceremonies the floor was cleared, and Messrs. Twohig and Spencer took the command of the proceedings. A lunch was served in course of the evening. Dancing continued until 12:30 o'clock. Mission Lodge now has ninety-four members, and is in a very flourishing condition.—Alameda Reporter, July 14th.

Pacific, No. 7

A member of Pacific recently said in public, "Pacific never does anything by halves." This was fully verified by the sixth anniversary and musicale of this flourishing Lodge, held in Oakland last Thursday evening, the 26th ult. By the appointed hour, Mulliken's Hall in the same building below the Lodge-room, was well filled with a friendly and appreciative audience. The spacious auditorium was handsomely decorated for the occasion with flowers and evergreens. The following is the program as presented, and which was attentively listened to throughout: Part I.—Overture, Lustspiel, (by orchestra, consisting of violins, flute, clarionette, cornet, double bass, trombone, and piano.) Messrs. Beel, O'Connell, Jas. Vane, Carlson, Crabtree, Wm. Vane, Levamway, and Le Noir; address, by Master Workman, J. C. Fielding; male quartette, serenade (Eisenhofer), Messrs. Britton, Hughes, Le Noir, and Waite, encored; recitation, "The Irish Showman, (adapted) Bro. J. A. Britton, double encore; vocal solo, "My mother bids me bind her hair," (Haydn), Mrs. L. Brooks, encored; address by Supreme Master Workman, Dr. M. W. Fish; plantation melodies, orchestra. Part II.—Xylophone solo, polka, orchestra, encored; address, Bro. C. A. Fox; vocal solo, "Oh, Ye Tears," Mrs. Stevens, encored; recitation, "Eugene Aram's Dream," Prof. Paul Davis, encored; vocal duet, "Nay, bid me not," (Mozart), Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Le Noir, encored; overture, Poet and Peasant, orchestra. On the third page of the handsome book-programs, was the following list of dances, succeeded on the fourth page by the list of Lodge-officers: Lancers, waltz, centennial lancers, schottische, Virginia reel, polka and three extras. The program was of a high order, and its rendition calls for especial comment. The orchestra playing throughout was unusually good for amateurs. Master Workman Fielding's address was a brief but felicitous welcome. In response to their deserved recall, the male quartette gave "How Can I Leave Thee?" Brother Britton convulsed the audience with the eccentricities of his Irish showman and suppositious panorama, and in response to his first encore gave an epigrammatic comic poem entitled, "Warning to the Unmarried." The audience not yet satisfied, called for more, and were rewarded by a good rendition of "The Watermill." Mrs. Brooks' superior soprano voice showed to excellent advantage, both in her first selection, and in the beautiful, pathetic Scotch ballad, "Bonnie Sweet Bessie," with which she favored the audience in response to her encore. Supreme Master Workman Fish in his brief address, managed to convey much information and encouragement in regard to benevolent Orders in general, and the A. O. U. W. in particular, the while paying Pacific a merited encomium. Bro. Past Master and Grand Lecturer, Henry Vrooman, was down on the program for an address at this point, but owing to sickness in his family was detained at home, and Bro. C. A. Fox was called from further down the list instead. Although having just arrived from the country, and being consequently taken by surprise, no notification having previously reached him until an hour before, Bro. Fox responded in his usual happy and oratorical vein, showing the audience (as did also Dr. Fish) that an impromptu effort is oftentimes as good as a prepared one. In response to her encore Mrs. Stevens sang "Nearest and Dearest," from Olivette. Mrs. Stevens has a rich and sympathetic contralto voice, and her singing gives real pleasure. Prof. Davis' recitation was remarkably well delivered, his dramatic power almost creating before the eyes of the audience the actors in the tragic poem. On a recall he showed his versatility by giving for all it was worth, the little squib entitled "From the Sublime to the Ridiculous." Mr. and Mrs. Le Noir followed in the same wake on their recall by giving a comic duo entitled "Mr. and Mrs. Snibbs." At the conclusion of the program the floor was cleared for dancing, which was enjoyed by a happy throng till after midnight. Pacific Lodge deserves great credit for her splendid anniversary entertainment, and praise belongs individually to every one on the program, and especially to Bro. Le Noir, the Lodge's talented organist, on whose broad and able shoulders was carried the entire burden of the preparation of the musical part of the affair.

CONTRA COSTA COUNTY.

Mount Diablo, No. 91

This Lodge recently held its public installation at Walnut Creek. District Deputy R. M. Jones was present, conducted the installation ceremonies, and made an address. Among other interesting literary exercises was an oration by Bro. R. Rich. After this "feast of reason and flow of soul," the physical appetites were catered to with appropriate refreshments, brought in by the good dames of the Workmen. Indeed, some present thought that they only needed sunlight and green woods to constitute a "basket picnic."

DEL NORTE COUNTY.

Del Norte, No. 183.

EDS. WATCHMAN:—Our Lodge had its first public installation Saturday evening, July 7th, and the ceremony was ably and creditably performed, without hitch or jar, District Deputy W. H. Woodbury, and other brethren of Del Norte, No. 183, acting as Grand officers. We had an audience of about 150 persons, who were much interested in the proceedings, and heartily enjoyed the programme of speeches and music, and the lunch that followed, as well as the dance that kept us up till 12 o'clock, when all wended their way homeward well satisfied with the entertainment. Our Lodge is in a healthy condition, with a fair prospect ahead. You will observe that our night of meeting has been changed from Friday to Saturday night of each week.

Yours in C. H. and P.,
O. V. WALLACE, Recorder.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY

We append a most interesting and complete report of the progress of Workmanship in the "Semi-Tropic County," from the scholarly pen of District Deputy Cobler. We trust that this good example will inspire other correspondents "from Siskiyou to San Diego, etc.," to not weary in well doing, but to continue to send us the latest and freshest fraternal news:

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—The work of installing the officers of the several Lodges of this district, for the new term, is completed, and we have the great satisfaction of knowing that without exception each and every Lodge within this district enters upon the new term under more auspicious circumstances with greater vigor, and brighter prospects for the future than ever before; and we have every reason to hope and expect that the present term will prove an exceptionally prosperous one for the A. O. U. W. in the county of Los Angeles, as we trust it will be elsewhere wherever the Order has an existence.

Commencing the day, or rather the evening of the day following the "Glorious Fourth," our duty led us into pleasant places. Our adjacent town of Pasadena—a beautiful place indeed, is this, the sight of which never fails to excite the admiration of every visitor, and 'tis among the first points of interest to which we invariably take the traveler who would behold a place, which, among the many beautiful and attractive spots in sunny southern California, stands unquestionably, allowing a personification, "The noblest Roman of them all." Here, at the time mentioned the officers of No. 151 were duly installed; following the ceremony of which, a banquet was held, the pleasures whereof were unalloyed, and thus the initial installation augured well for those which were to follow.

Los Angeles Lodge, No. 55, received our best attention on the evening of the 6th ult., at which time I had the honor and pleasure of installing the officers of this, the largest Lodge in my Jurisdiction—having a membership of 188 brothers in good standing.

The next evening saw us in Newhall, where flourishes No. 218, when we proceeded to install the newly elected officers. We found this continuing to be one of the liveliest Lodges in the district, having a membership of twenty-eight Workmen "good and true." After the regular exercises were over, all adjourned to the Southern Hotel, where a fine banquet was served—the latter part of the evening's ceremonies proving fully as attractive as that which preceded.

It was on the evening of the 10th, that we used our best efforts in the privilege we enjoyed in starting on a new term the officers of Fidelia Lodge, No. 14, Degree of Honor. This is the only Lodge of this degree in the county, but I believe it will compare favorably with any Lodge in the State in its general prosperity, business like activity, efficiency of its officers and last but not least its number of lively, attractive and handsome young (and elderly) ladies. This Lodge is becoming more and more popular with our fraternity here and is rapidly growing in numbers, and doing much to promote a spirit of friendly intercourse and general sociability among the members of our Order.

El Monte Lodge, No. 188, received our official visit on the 13th, and her officers were duly installed at that time. We found the Lodge in fine working order, a good attendance, and a most excellent list of officers—membership twenty-nine.

The evening of July 14th, found us in the Lodge-room of No. 214, in the town of San Fernando, where almost the entire membership of the Lodge was in attendance to give us a hearty welcome and a brotherly greeting. Their new officers were installed by us in their respective stations and they started on another term with bright prospects, and a determination to add to the mystic circle such men of that vicinity, as they may consider worthy, who wish to participate in the many advantages to be found within the portal of the Lodge-room of the A. O. U. W.

Last Tuesday evening the 17th, we consummated our labors in the way of installation, at the Lodge hall of Southern California Lodge, No. 191, located here in Los Angeles. During the past term this Lodge has been steadily increasing in members, and starts this term with vigor, encouraged by past success to continued and renewed exertions in the future. The officers newly elected were installed by us on the evening mentioned, a good number being present. There are enrolled 111 members in good standing.

I have within my District (No. 1), eight Lodges with a total membership of 452 Workmen.

In District No. 2, presided over by our worthy Bro. John Taylor, of Compton, there are 228 members, making a grand total of 680 members of our Order, belonging to Lodges in Los Angeles county.

Looking over the past the course of Workmanship in this section has been wonderfully successful, the acquisition to its membership during the time since its institution here being unprecedented and unequalled in the history of any other secret Order. As its workings become more fully understood, the greater the number of applicants who come knocking at our doors, asking admission and the privilege of enjoying with us the benefits vouchsafed to the favored ones who cross our threshold.

Peering into the future our eyes cannot behold, but our faith teaches us to trust, and with good reason, that just ahead there is naught but a smooth and quiet sea, where the bark of Workmanship may glide in peaceful waters, wafted onward by the gentle breezes of Charity, piloted by the strong arm of Hope, manned by the vigilant crew of Protection, bound for the peaceful haven of Brotherly Love. A. C. COBLER, D. D. G. M. W., Los Angeles county, District No. 1.

Bro. E. F. Matthews, P. M. W., writes as follows: "Our little Lodge, although in an isolated part of the State, is in a flourishing condition, and we congratulate ourselves that we are a favored Lodge, as we expect the services of the G. M. W., at our coming public installation."

NAPA COUNTY.

Eureka, No. 15.

D. D. G. M. W., E. S. Gridley, of Napa, has installed the new officers of Eureka Lodge, No. 15, A. O. U. W., of this place. This Lodge, though not large—numbering about sixty members—is a remarkably prosperous one. Though one of the oldest in the State, numbering fifteenth on the list, it has never lost a member, a fact in which the members take a just pride.—St. Helena Star.

SANTA CLARA COUNTY.

Los Gatos, No. 76.

The following officers of Los Gatos Lodge, No. 76, were installed on last Saturday evening: C. A. Hubback, M. W.; Ed. Ditto, F.; Alex. Howell, O.; Thos. Cox, Rdr.; J. L. Gelatt, Fin.; Geo. Carson, Rvr.; L. Demarais, G.; Thos. Jemison, I. W.; Jno. Mooney, O. W.; S. Templeton, Trustee. The ceremonies were public, and were conducted by Masters Workmen Osterman, Clark, Vinter, and Hall, of San Jose, everything being done in excellent order. The hall was packed to its fullest capacity by the Workmen and their families, also many invited guests, among which were about twenty of the San Jose brethren. It was a very enjoyable occasion and one long to be remembered by those present. At the conclusion of the ceremonies speeches were called for, the calls being responded to by Hubback, Vinter, Hall, and Shortridge, each of these gentlemen covering themselves with glory by their eloquent and appropriate remarks. Then followed some fine singing, with organ accompaniment by J. M. Reynolds. Ice cream and other refreshments were then served in quantities that must have given comfort and full satisfaction to all for their was an abundance and more too. The merry assemblage did not disperse until a late hour, and then it was with the expressed wish to meet again on future occasions. Los Gatos Lodge is in a very flourishing condition. It now numbers over seventy members in good standing, and with proper efforts the number can be increased to 100 before the close of the present year. It is becoming a universally admitted fact that the A. O. U. W. is the Champion Insurance Society of the country.—Los Gatos News, July 13th.

OAKLAND, July 20, 1883.

THE BENEFITS OF FRATERNITY.—We love to indulge occasionally in the thought that perhaps at no distant day the members of the mutual benefit societies will grasp the grand lesson that may be learned from their connections with these organizations. Too many now in, believe that all they have to do is to pay the assessments as they occur, and if that is done they are safe. True, you are brother, but what a cold, selfish spirit you are cherishing. You pay your assessments simply to protect yourself, never for a moment thinking of the great good you are doing in helping others. If, perchance, death knocks at the door of the organization more often than you think proper, you are the first to find fault, for the reason that your pocket is touched. You think not of the bereaved households and forget that it is in your power to lighten the burden of their grief. You fail to remember that those who are gone, at a common altar with yourself, pledged themselves to see that you and yours should not be left wholly destitute, and paying your assessment simply to protect your own you should regard it in part canceling an obligation to one who in his lifetime helped you.—A. E. Workman.

GRAND LODGE OF TENNESSEE.—We give the following item from the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Tennessee, 1883: Number of members, at last report, 1881, 2,007; number admitted during the term, 1,116; total, 3,123. Number of members suspended, 762; number of members withdrawn, 50; number of members died, 50; total, 862. Present membership, 2,261; showing a net gain of 254. Twenty-three new Lodges were instituted during the 21 months, which have elapsed since their last session. Provision was made for a Grand Lecturer, with a salary of $1,000 per year. Bro. T. H. Everett was re-elected Grand Recorder.

EVENING STAR LODGE, No. 23, D. of H. has changed its Lodge-rooms from 417 Kearny St., to 35 Eddy St.

Oregon Grand Lodge.

We append below a synopsis of the address of retiring Grand Master Workman Child, of Oregon and Washington Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. A list of the newly elected Grand Officers was published in our last issue. From the Pacific Overseer we compile a general notice, the full proceedings not having been yet published:

After two days' session, in which a great deal of work was done, the Grand Lodge adjourned, after which the officers and representatives were tendered a magnificent reception by the brethren of Portland at the Mechanics' Pavilion. On arriving at the Pavilion, the hall was rapidly filled by a large assembly, among whom were many ladies. Bro. D. Solis Cohen, as Master of Ceremonies, introduced the Hon. John F. Caples, who delivered an eloquent address of welcome in his well-known happy manner. After music by the band, G. Master Workman, C. M. Bradshaw, of Port Townsend, and P. Grand Master W. D. Hare, of Hillsboro, responded to Mr. Caples in speeches brief but elegant, and which were received with much applause. Bros. John A. Child, P. G. M.; J. R. Moores, G. Recorder; and Robert Newcomb, G. Recorder; then followed with a few congratulatory remarks. All spoke in high terms of the growth and prosperity of the Order. These speeches were pleasantly interspersed with lively selections by the band. After the above exercises, the company partook of a plentiful supper, spread in the gallery, while the floor of the hall was cleared, and dancing was commenced, which continued until a late hour. The affair was a great success, and gave a good time to all present.

Grand Master Workman's Address.

Another year has passed and gone, and we as members of the Order have much to be thankful for. As an Order we have been prosperous; not so much so as we desired, but our Order in this Jurisdiction is on a sounder and firmer basis than ever before. We have the respect and endorsement of the better class of citizens and all the fraternal societies.

True, some of our brothers have been called to suffer and pass "to the undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns." Many tears have fallen; many hearts have ached as last farewells were spoken to loved ones; and loneliness, such as the widows and fatherless alone can feel, has been the lot of some. Then it was that our hearts warmed with sympathy, and fraternity loosed our purse strings, and we each contributed to the helpless families of our deceased brethren. And I am only too happy to be able to say that we have met promptly all the demands that have been made upon us during the last year. That we have thus done our part in relieving distress and aiding those dependent upon our deceased brothers for support, should fill us with feelings of joy that we are privileged to engage in such a good work.

I have received during the year a great many communications, asking a number of questions that had been answered in the past and that could easily be found in the printed laws of the Order. I would kindly suggest to the brethren that they first consult the authorities before writing to the G. M. W.

The following decisions are those that I think are worthy of note:

DECISIONS.

Query—Was there a vacancy created in the office of the M. W. by the M. W. being unavoidably absent from April 22d to July 1st, if the M. W. presided the last meeting night of the term? Answer—No; his presiding at the last meeting of his term entitled him to his honors.

A Master Workman has no right to sustain or even entertain a motion contrary to the Lodge By-laws.

It is not necessary for the P. M. of a Lodge to have a dispensation to install the officers of his Lodge at the regular meeting night appointed for that purpose.

A few meetings ago, an applicant for membership in a Lodge was rejected by the Medical Examiner, hence the applicant could not be balloted for.

Query—If the Grand Medical Director should reverse his decision and approve the certificate of the examining physician, can the application be read before the Lodge, and can the applicant be balloted for? Answer—Yes, if the committee report favorably.

Query—Can the matter come before the Lodge for action? Answer—Yes.

Query—Does the rejection based upon the disapproval of Medical Examiner prevent the same case from coming up again,

New Englanders and the Far West.

(Written by EMILEY P. COLLINS.)

"Westward the Star of Empire takes its way."

The "far West" has been the cynosure of New England's children since (in 1635) the first adventurous pioneers left the borders of civilization in and around Boston and started for the far West, which then had found its home on the banks of the Connecticut river. What hopes and fears agitated the minds of those hearty men as they commenced their weary journey through a wilderness alive with savage beasts and more savage men! We may smile at the thought, that a distance now traversed in two and a half hours, and so brief that a whisper is telephoned, could have been such an arduous undertaking. Yet at that date it was attended with far more peril, and required a longer time than a journey now to the Pacific.

Here in the Connecticut valley the far West rested for several generations, and outgrew its name. But not till near the close of the eighteenth century, propelled by New England enterprise, did it fairly commence its gigantic strides toward the setting sun. In the fertile valley of the Genessee, and along the chain of silvery lakes in western New York, the far West lingered for nearly a score of years, till the forests had melted away with their denizens—the red man, the deer and the wolf—and given place to populous villages, cultivated fields, and all the appliances of New England civilization. Then the far West shouldered its knapsack and its axe, and, journeying on, watched the sturdy pioneers build their cabins in the Cuyahoga valley, and saw incipient cities start up along the shore of Lake Erie.

Then the far West started on again, stride after stride. It marched over the flower bedecked prairies, pursuing its ever receding name—a name to conjure with—a name that inspires the New England youth with visions marvelous of wealth and fame and honor, all enwrapped in the glorious possibilities of that magic word—the far West.

So, New England's sons have followed on his widening track, scattering along as they went New England's institutions, her schools, her enterprise, her thrift and her thoughts; that magnify and broaden on the vast prairie expanse, or tower among the mountain heights of the Rockies or the Sierras, and flourish on the Pacific slope. They even took the names of their native towns and sowed them along their march. Yet, all along, from the Atlantic shore to the Pacific coast, the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers turn with longing, loving recollections to New England, its changeable climate, its narrow vales and granite hills. All have a charm that nature, elsewhere, in its fairest forms, cannot impart—it is the charm of home.

Vigorous as has been the growth of New England's children, transplanted into broader fields, yet the parent, too, has kept even step in progress. Boston is still the Athens of America, to which the student in science or philosophy, art or music, repairs from every quarter of our great country. Nowhere are new ideas entertained with more hospitality; nowhere is there more liberality of thought or tolerance of opinion than in Boston. Nowhere is there more philanthropy and fraternal feeling extended to all races than in Massachusetts. But she never had the Mongolian by the ship load poured upon her shores; and with all her hospitality she regards her own self-preservation and resists the wholesale importation of paupers by the governments of the old world.

But wealthy New Englanders have a weakness, in common with most other people, that inclines them to adopt the tastes, habits and manners of those they deem higher in the social scale, however senseless or inconvenient—in short, to be fashionable, and, therefore, they must visit Europe. They endure all the danger, sickness and discomfort of a sea voyage to look upon the old monuments of a decaying civilization, forgetful of the newer and better in their own country. They glance at some of the old castles in England, look down upon the filthy Thames, rush across the channel to the gay French capital, take a trip up the Rhine, go into ecstasies over its romantic beauty, quite unmindful that a hundred rivers in their own country equal or surpass it in natural loveliness. They take a sail through the streets of Venice, climb some of the mountains in Switzerland, look into the perforated Mt. Cenis, as one of the most wonderful achievements of the skill and labor of man, but their own Hoosac tunnel at home, just as mighty a work, is to them only a great bore, and they have never taken the trouble to look at it. They sojourn a while in Italy, and rove over its sunny clime and "vine-clad hills," nor cast a thought upon the perennial verdure and cloudless skies of Louisiana, or the vineyard-covered hills, the orange groves, the balmy air of California. To "go through" some famous picture gallery, they run in at one end and out at the other, and then, before they come home, not to appear entirely ignorant of things they have glimpsed in Europe in a dingy room at their hotel, they pore over some published "Notes of European Travel." What have they acquired or learned by their journey? They have gained the pleasure of being able in society to remark that such and such occurrences happened "when I was abroad;" or, "I was delighted" with something "that I saw at Paris," or Rome, or Florence. It is all right to visit Europe to study in its older and more advanced schools of art and science, or to look upon the earlier works of man, to glean therefrom whatever of knowledge that may be worth preserving; but it looks like mere snobbishness and a pitiful lack of patriotism and national appreciation to ignore our own wonderful country, so vast in its proportions, so varied in climate and productions, so unsurpassingly grand in natural scenery.

For one, who, instead of looking back through the moldy past for the Golden Age, sees it in the Future of our own country, what more pleasing tour can there be in this torrid weather, or more inspiring to the patriot, than a trip through our inland seas, now studded with thousands of gliding sails, and refresh the

The Harmon Seminary.

We give a sketch of the Harmon Seminary for young ladies at Berkeley. The engraving although it hardly does justice to the pleasing details of the buildings and surroundings gives an idea of the exterior features of the institution: The Seminary Building, which was erected in 1882, is pronounced by all who visit it a model of excellent construction and tasteful finish. It was planned with special reference to its use as a Boarding and Day School for Young Women. It is a commodious, three-story, suburban villa. Its interior, aside from rooms for general use, has been arranged to secure a cluster of neat and cosy apartments, instead of the cheerless dormitories which are too prevalent in boarding-school architecture. In both its exterior and its internal arrangement and furnishing, it presents the characteristics of a comfortable and commodious private residence, and the impression imparted to the pupil on entering is that of access to a home and not a public edifice. Thus the building is made to conform to the central idea of the institution, which is to combine the influences of a refined and cultured home with the discipline of the school and classroom.

The Seminary is entrusted to the management of Rev. S. S. Harmon and Mrs. F. W. Harmon, who have had an experience of more than twenty years in the education of young ladies in this State. The present institution embodies the results of their ripened judgment in its plan and policy and the accommodations and arrangements are such as their wide observation and experience designated as

Musty Smells in Untenanted Houses.

It is a cause of much wonder among those who do not study the subject, why a comparatively new house, after being in use a short time and then left vacant a few weeks, should be so impregnated with bad smells and foul atmosphere as not to be endurable for habitation until the house has been thoroughly ventilated.

A little study will lead one to soon arrive at the reason for such musty odors. The parties last inhabiting the house may have left it in perfect order according to their ideas of cleanliness; as far as outward appearance was concerned, nothing could be detected to lead anyone to suppose that the musty smell generated would soon be in running order.

We can best illustrate the modus operandi of these generators by the following description, as furnished us by the owner of the premises: "The house had only been built a little more than a year. At the expiration of that time it was to undergo a thorough change. A servant was left to sweep out and clean up generally. After a thorough (?) sweeping, the windows were washed and the almost muddy water dumped into the kitchen sink, instead of being thrown into the yard hopper. The shelves in the pantry were washed, and the water also emptied in the sink. Instead of letting a bountiful supply of water run, that the trap might be thoroughly cleansed of filth, the girl simply used the cloth in brushing the water down the sink and forcing the thicker portions through the strainer.

The same thing was done up-stairs; windows and shelves washed, and the dirty water dumped into the wash basin, a cloth used to wipe the basin clean, and all was right. We prefer not to put in print what took place in the bathroom. To all appearance the house looked clean. The servant went all through the house, shut and locked every window, and left the death-dealing musty smell generators at work. My advice to leave the windows open was not regarded, and as the time would not be up for several days for me to take possession of the premises to make the necessary alterations, I had no authority to leave the windows open.

Of course the gas found was soon at work. The filth left in the traps, the dirt on the shelves, wet and but half washed, etc., soon began to putrefy; the absence completely of fresh air from the windows being closed, helped on the decaying mass, and a lively ferment took place. With such generators of musty and foul vapors, is it any wonder that in a short time the house was filled with a noxious atmosphere? We are sure, when we visited that house some days afterwards, even after sending a boy the day beforehand to open the windows all through the house, that we were met with, on opening the door, a smell that put us in mind of a certain story where a river had to be turned from its course in order to purify certain stables.

Landlords would be well paid after a tenant has left a house to immediately give it a thorough sweeping; allow the water to run several minutes in all the sinks, basins, and water-closets; if there be a cellar, see that not a particle of vegetable matter is left around; leave a window in every room open; scatter a little chloride of lime in the cellar, and place some in a saucer in the bath-room and kitchen. It will take you but a few hours to follow these suggestions, and only a few dimes' worth of materials to carry them out. Your house, even if idle for quite a time, will be sweet and wholesome, and the little labor you have spent will be well rewarded by the praises of your new tenants upon the nice clean house they have secured.

THE RUBBER PLANT IN MEXICO. Mexico is making a study of the culture of the rubber plant. The hardness of the plant is said to be such that its culture is exceedingly simple and inexpensive, where the climate and soil are suitable. In much of the Mexican coast region the only expense is the weeding required, when the plants are young, to give them a chance to grow and strengthen.

"HELIUM."—Professor Palmeri announces the discovery in the lava of Vesuvius, the substance giving the spectrum line of "helium," an element hitherto recognized in the sun. Efforts will probably be made to isolate it.

heated brow by the cool breezes that sweep over Lake Huron, or linger on the picturesque island of Mackinaw, or lave in the ice-cold waters of the almost unfathomable Lake Superior. Or, in the budding springtime, drawn by the iron steed, skim over the boundless prairies to those vast mountain chains whose lofty peaks seem pillars built to prop the skies; and then to plunge through canyons so deep, so immense, so grand, you hold your breath with awe at the mighty precipices that rise on either side; anon, you glide out and rush down into some fertile valley, and so on till you sweep down to the great metropolis of the Pacific shore. Then if the traveler seek to look upon some of the wonders of this marvelous land, he will visit the valley of the Yosemite, where he will find, beyond the highest flights of the imagination, all that is grandly romantic or sublimely magnificent in nature, and beside which anything to be found in Europe pales into utter insignificance.

All along, from ocean to ocean, are springing up cities as by magic, which, even now in their infancy, are rivaling in wealth and splendor the historic cities of the old world. What proud emotions thrill the heart when we see all this, and think this vast country is our own! Here shall yet be evolved a more perfect form of government, which shall be in fact as in name, a republic. Here shall yet grow up a higher civilization, than of which the world has only dreamed; and here, at last, shall be realized the golden age.

FIXING LOCKS.—When it is not convenient to take locks apart in the event of keys being lost, stolen or missing, and it is desired to fit a new key, take a lighted match or candle and smoke the new key in the flame, introduce it carefully into the keyhole, press it firmly against the opposing wards of the lock, withdraw it, and the indentations in the smoked part of the key will show exactly where to file.

most desirable. It is not an ambition of this school to bring together a large and imposing array of pupils. Its numbers are limited; hence, each pupil receives that close personal attention and instruction rendered impossible where multitudes are gathered together. The institution is well supplied with instructors in the common branches, and thorough work is done. In the special branches of music, art and languages, the masters are among the most eminent in the State. The courses of instruction are various and include all degrees of advancement from the kindergarten upward. The regular course leads to the diploma of the Seminary. There is a special course for those who desire to enter the State University, and special courses, also, for those who desire to advance themselves in music, the arts or literature. The range of instruction is very broad, and, in addition to the matters usual in similar schools, it has practical instruction in floriculture and horticulture for those who desire it; and in silk culture, which is now becoming prominent as a household industry in this State.

The seminary closed a very successful year on May 30th, and the next term will open July 26th.

A NEW FOOD.—According to the Chemiker Zeitung, M. Muller has evaporated skimmed milk in a vacuum, so as to obtain a permanent product, which can be preserved for many months in a dry atmosphere, and which has valuable alimentary properties. He thinks that it may be of great use in pastry, and in various kinds of baking, and the best sugar of milk can be made from it. The skimmed milk which is collected in dairies and cheese factories, is usually given to animals or wasted in sewage; it contains, however, large quantities of salts, and particles of butter and caseine, which can be utilized by Muller's method. *Rev. Issued on the 1st and 15th of each month.
MENT.

Resolved, That we consider the complete form in which the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN has for several years published the list of subordinate Lodges of this Jurisdiction, with the names of their presiding and recording officers, and time and place of meeting, is a great convenience and benefit to our Order, and we would recommend that each and every Lodge continue the publication of its card, and afford such other support to our excellent society paper as their means will allow, and further, urge each member of our Order to give it countenance and material aid.

Favorable to Advertisers.

The WATCHMAN enjoys a very large and influential circulation. It is certain that no other periodical is now patronized by a better class of industrial, professional and business men. In fact, our subscription list embraces many of the foremost business and representative men throughout the towns and cities of the coast. We have pride in making our paper "clean and handsome," and first class in all respects—to the benefit of both our readers and advertisers.

Rekindle the Fires.

As might naturally be expected the progress of the Order in this Jurisdiction is not so rapid as formerly, yet we feel that the fire of fraternity if fanned a little when it is burning low or rekindled where it is gone out would be of immense benefit to the organization. One thing seems patent: no fraternal society is so strong or so good or so beneficent that it can prosper where the fundamental principal upon which it is builded is lost sight of or disregarded. The business feature of the A. O. U. W. is all right but it is not enough on which to rely; you cannot have the end without the means. The end is protection; the means, fraternity.

Many of our Lodges languish because of non-attendance of the members. The best remedy for this is promptitude in the transaction of business and accuracy in the performance of Lodge ceremonials. When the hour of meeting arrives let the gavel fall if a quorum be present. The Master should then dispatch business as rapidly as possible consistent with courtesy and good order, and when the work is done adjourn and let the members go home. Many a Lodge has been raised out of the "slough of despond" by this means alone. Again, if every officer will but thoroughly qualify himself for his duties the Lodge ceremonials will not only be interesting, but much more celerity will result in the dispatch of the ordinary routine business. To the despondent ones let us urge a trial of these methods and good will surely come, and in such degree as to astonish the most enthusiastic. New faces, and others almost forgotten, will be seen in the Lodge-room and from a bare quorum the attendance will be large and constant. Try it!

Past Grand Master Workman Jordan has returned with his family from his trip East as delegate to the Supreme Lodge. We hope to get an expression of Brother Jordan's views and opinions soon, concerning his trip and A. O. U. W. matters in general.

The Coming Reception.

At a meeting of committees of all Oakland Lodges held in A. O. U. W. Hall, Oakland, Monday evening, the 23d ult., to consider the proposed reception to Supreme Master Workman Fish, the subject was informally discussed and the following course of action outlined. It is proposed to hold the reception in one of the largest halls or churches procurable in Oakland, about the middle of August, and it will take the form of an entertainment, literary, musical and oratorical, embracing some of the best talent available in the Order. To guard against the crowding out of any Workmen, their families and friends, it was deemed best to have invitations issued. This, however, and all other details, are left to a sub-committee, consisting of the Chairman of each Lodge Committee heretofore appointed, to prepare a well digested plan of action, and to meet and report, Monday evening, July 30th.

The feeling is unanimous that by thus holding a public reception on this occasion the Oakland Lodges show themselves alive to their opportunities and duties, and are desirous of showing their appreciation of the high honor conferred upon this Jurisdiction by the election of Dr. Fish to the highest office in the gift of the Order. To Pacific Lodge, No. 7, belongs the credit of having inaugurated this affair, which now promises to arrive at such a successful culmination.

FRATERNAL INSTITUTE.—This excellent organization still continues to hold its meetings as a school of instruction for preparing Lodge officers in the secret work of the Order, and securing uniformity. Saturday evening, the 21st ult., it met as usual at Shields' Building, 32 O'Farrell St., with a large attendance. In addition to the usual routine work, which was admirably performed, a committee consisting of the five District Deputies of this city, was appointed to devise plans and suggest ways of creating additional interest to induce Lodge officers and members to attend the meetings of the Institute, which are on the first and third Saturday evenings of each month. All Master Workmen in good standing are entitled to admission, and are cordially invited to attend. The Oakland Fraternal Institute is also, we learn, doing a good work.

N. B. Since the above was in type the report of the Committee on plans for next meeting is at hand. The names of those appointed to confer the J. W. degree at next meeting areas follows: J. S. Gregory, M. W.; of Washington, 60; Bro. Vincent, of 68, as Foreman; P. Kaiser, of 53, as Overseer, Ed. Platts, of 53, as Guide. For the M. W. degree, Bro. Smallman, of 180, as M. W.; J. Hartley, of 180, as Foreman; C. Stillman, of 127, as Overseer; P. W. Winkley, of 68, as Guide.

BROTHER E. DANFORTH, District Deputy of San Francisco District No. 1, is a handy man from whom to gather inspiration. Brimful of enthusiasm, tempered by experience and good judgment, he can be trusted to revive the flagging energy of individual brothers or whole Lodges equally well, and is willing to give information where needed even at the expense of taking time from his own everyday work. In conversation with him the other day he in substance, casually paid the following spontaneous tribute to the WATCHMAN, which he could not have expressed better had he taken time to write it out: "I consider that the WATCHMAN has done more of what might be termed good missionary work for the Order than any other factor that has contributed to its progress. I find it everywhere, silent but forceful, appealing to the thinking and reasoning faculties, loaned by subscribers to non-members who in the quiet of their homes are led to see the logic of its reasoning and further led to ally themselves with us. We have thus gathered in more good timber for our Order than from any one other source."

Editorial Acuteness Extraordinary.

It is quite evident that the editor of the Kansas Workman sleeps with both eyes open, and has discovered something radically wrong out in California. In the last issue of the paper he calls attention editorially to the fact that "the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN advertises ten Lodges in San Francisco as meeting in the same Lodge-room," and says "we don't see how that can be unless some of them meet in the afternoon." That is right, Bro. Riddle; don't you let any of the brothers out there come any "shenanigan" over the rest of the Order. Keep your top eye open upon them; there is certainly mischief brewing. Agitate them, agitate them, Bro. Riddle. As the old woman said of her neighbors, "I would just like to know how it is that them people over the way have three pairs of stockings on the clothes line when there is only two in the family, and what is more, two pairs are men's!" Go for them, Bro. Riddle, and don't give them any rest day or night until you have discovered the "colored gentleman in the wood-pile." When you have settled that, turn your guns on the Fraternal Censor and inquire why it still publishes the officers of the Supreme Lodge the same as they existed two years ago, and then upon the Michigan Herald, Minnesota Guide and several other "Organs," which persist in giving the names of Grand Lodge officers as still serving, when they have been out of office over a year. "Let no guilty man escape."—Baltimore Protector.

Now the San Francisco Workmen are in a fix, to be sure. Why, oh why, Bro. Riddle, do you seek to expose us in this ruthless manner? We had no idea that any one away over in Kansas would scrutinize our Lodge Directory so closely as to detect the trifling incongruity of ten Lodges meeting in the same place in six meeting nights. But it seems that we were too unsuspicious, and that Bro. Riddle's eagle eye has penetrated this innocent ruse whereby we had hoped for the good of the Order to make a big showing of our numerical Lodge strength in San Francisco. Be merciful to us, Bro. Riddle. Do not let the glory of your conquest crush us into the dust. Acting thus with us we will deal as gently with you, and to save you any mortification from possible ridicule of contemporaries, will whisper sweetly into your sunburnt ear the explanatory facts as follows: The only place where the ten Lodges meet according to our Directory, printed as "32 O'Farrell St.," is a large building, filled with halls set apart for the meetings of fraternal and secret organizations. One building consequently does not necessarily imply one Lodge-room, "but for goodness' sake don't say we told you."

New Lodges.

Since our last installment of new Lodges was noticed, the following have been added: ALTURAS, No. 222, instituted by D. D., D. C. Brownell, at Alturas, Modoc county, with the following officers: Nathaniel B. Reul, P. M. W.; Arthur B. Estes, M. W.; David T. Mills, F.; Henry G. Payne, O.; Thomas B. Reese, Rdr.; Nehemiah Fitzgerald, Fin.; Joseph Mark, Rvr.; Simeon Bayley, G.; Daniel C. Slater, I. W.; Alfred Gagnon, O. W.

SHADY GROVE, No. 223, at Farmington, San Joaquin county, instituted by D. D., H. W. Taylor, with the following officers: Nathaniel S. Harrold, P. M. W.; H. C. Frost, M. W.; Thomas J. Webb, F.; Thomas E. Campbell, O.; Jas. H. Skiff, Rdr.; Arthur W. Harrold, Fin.; Benj. F. Long, Rvr.; John F. Campbell, G.; Milo M. Church, I. W.; Nathan Metz, O. W.

GRIZZLY FLAT, No. 224, instituted by D. D., Seneca Davis, at Grizzly Flat, El Dorado county, with the following officers: Henry H. McClellan, P. M. W.; John H. Fuller, M. W.; George W. Mail, F.; George W. Hieft, O.; Llewellyn H. Smith, Rdr.; Jas. A. White, Fin.; Solomon P. Hoskin, Rvr.; Willis C. Baker, G.; Sanford W. Modil, I. W.; Michael Martin, O. W.

POMONA, No. 225, instituted by D. D., A. Cobler, at Pomona, Los Angeles county, with the following officers: W. D. Morton, P. M. W.; J. W. Henderson, M. W.; W. S.

Cunningham, F.; M. L. Sharks, O.; J. R. Garthside, Rdr.; A. H. Harris, Fin.; R. A. Cunningham, Rvr.; H. Oakes, G.; J. J. Henry, I. W.; W. J. Kesler, O. W.

We hope to be able to get the lists of new officers of those who have not already reported, in time for our next issue.

A QUERY.—When a certificate is changed, is it the business of the Lodge to know the name of the party in whose favor the certificate is changed, the whole affair being brought as a business transaction before the Lodge?

As we understand the case, it is not the business of the Lodge to inquire into the issuance or re-issuance of a Beneficiary Certificate to the extent to find out the name of the party in whose favor it is drawn. All that is necessary in either issuing or re-issuing a certificate is to have the Recorder attest the transaction under the seal of the Lodge—a purely clerical duty on which it is entirely unnecessary for the Lodge to take action. [EDS. WATCHMAN.]

The A. O. U. W. not a Harbor for Criminals.

Two Lodges in Philadelphia are agitated over a question as to what shall be done where members have been convicted of crime and sent to the penitentiary. In the one case, the member who was convicted has been suspended, and his friends are asking that he be reinstated; in the other case, the member remains in good standing so far as dues and assessments are concerned. The charitable feelings of the members are appealed to on the ground that should the one be refused reinstatement and the other expelled, the wife of each would be deprived of her insurance in case of death, and left destitute; that it is really visiting the results of the crimes of the husband upon the innocent wife, in both cases estimable ladies. This argument finds weight in the minds of many members, who look upon the Order simply as an insurance company. On the other hand, it is maintained that when a member has been convicted of a crime, he should be refused reinstatement, if suspended, and be expelled, if in good standing; that the Order, being a fraternity, should not be compelled to face the world with the fact that some of its number have forfeited the respect of the members by their acts; that had this been done before application, no Lodge knowing it would have admitted them, and the wife would not then have been entitled to this sympathy, but being members, the Order should be relieved of the odium resulting from their acts. To those who are not personally acquainted with the parties, the duty of each Lodge seems so plain that the one should be refused reinstatement and the other expelled on charges, that to hesitate seems a wonder.—Protector.

THE NEW SUPREME MASTER WORKMAN. It gives us great pleasure to learn that M. W. Fish, of California, has been elected Supreme Master Workman. His long connection with the Order, his regular attendance at the sessions of the Supreme Lodge, and his great business experience, have made him thoroughly conversant with the affairs of our Order, both in general and in detail, and fitted him admirably for the high and important position to which he has been chosen.—Pacific Overseer.

IT COSTS $19 a ton to make pig iron in Pennsylvania, and but $12 per ton to manufacture it in Alabama.

Report of Relief Committee.

Bro. J. W. Watson, Deputy Grand Recorder, is taking needed rest and recreation by a hunting and fishing excursion in the country.

BRO. HUGH'S Hotel, known as "Railroad Headquarters," near the depot at Martinez, is the place to get a square meal and comfortable quarters, at a moderate price.

This committee during the term has performed the last sad rites to the remains of four deceased Workmen, by officiating at their funerals and performing the duties incumbent upon subordinate Lodges. In all cases has a large delegation of members of the committee and brothers of sister Lodges attended, and the funeral ceremonies of the Order been carried out to their fullest extent, and the bodies laid away with all honors.

THE middle belt of Minnesota, from Mankato east to the Mississippi River, was swept by a tornado Saturday, when six persons were killed and nearly 100 injured. The estimated damage to crops is about $500,000.

Notices of Recent Patents.

Among the patents recently obtained through Dewey & Co.'s SCIENTIFIC PRESS American and Foreign Patent Agency, the following are worthy of special mention:

AN IMPROVED BOOT.—Thos. H. Buckingham, of San Francisco, Cal., assignor to Buckingham & Hecht, of same city. No. 280,443. Dated July 3, 1883. This invention relates to a certain new and useful improvement in boots, consisting in the fashioning of certain parts and their combination so as to form the upper and leg of the boot. The object of the invention is economy in cutting and simplicity in construction, combined with strength and comfort. It is difficult to describe this invention without diagrams or illustrations. Suffice to say that in a boot made after this patent there is no side seam, either on the leg, or at the line where the counter joins the main piece. The latter seam is well known to be the first to give out, and its avoidance is a benefit, both because of this fact and also because of the greater comfort which it gives the wearer.

GUN SIGHT.—John C. Kelton, S. F., Cal. No. 280,484. Dated July 3, 1883. This invention relates to certain improvements in the rear sight of rifles generally, but is more particularly adapted for use upon the United States Springfield rifle and carbine, as at present constructed, although it may also be used on other rifles. The object of the invention is to enable the sight to be more quickly and correctly adjusted, and also to provide a better lateral adjustment to counteract the deflection caused by the wind. The invention consists of a base which is fixed to the barrel of the gun, a hinged leaf having side bars which fall outside the base, and a slide which has a movement only in the direction of the length of the bars. This slide carries the sight proper. The sight itself is, in form, the segment of a cylinder, with the notch extending around the curve centrally, so that its depth will be the same at all elevations.

MASONIC EMBLEM.—David W. Laird, of S. F. No. 14,025. This is a new and original design for a Masonic emblem or jewel, consisting of a Maltese cross, in the central portion of which is a shield bearing the coat of arms of the State of California. Upon the outer edge of the arms of the cross any suitable words may be engraved. The cross is suspended by a link from a bar which supports the figure of a grizzly bear. The design is both beautiful and appropriate.

under six months, as does the rejection by ballot? Answer—No.

Query—Is a brother's beneficiary certificate suspended if he fails to pay all his assessments on or before the last Lodge meeting of the month? Answer—Yes and no. Yes, if the last meeting night is held twenty days after date of assessment notice. No, if the last meeting night is held on the 15th, because the brother cannot possibly have twenty days' notice as the law provides.

All officers must be elected by ballot, and regularly installed, to become qualified to fill the office in the Lodge.

The absence of the M. W. does affect the validity of any action of the Lodge, provided that in such absence the chair is filled by the proper officer, as provided by the Constitution.

When a brother is reinstated by a vote of the Lodge, taken by ballot, and is declared duly elected by the M. W., that is sufficient to entitle the brother to all the benefits and privileges of the Order, without a second ballot on the same degree.

A delinquent member, if his beneficiary certificate has been annulled, must be examined by the Medical Examiner, and application made the same in every particular as a new member, with the exception of being obligated.

REJECTION.

On or about October 6, 1882, an application was received by the Medical Director, from Protection Lodge, No. 2, Salem, Oregon, and in due course approved. A few days after the application was returned to the Grand Recorder for a beneficiary certificate.

From information that I received from a reliable source I was fully satisfied that the applicant had made misrepresentations while undergoing medical examination. I caused inquiry to be instituted, and found my information was correct. The applicant was an habitual drinker. Also that he had been intoxicated but a short time before his application. Upon his examination he replied that he was never intoxicated, and used stimulants but occasionally.

I immediately wrote the Lodge, ordering them not to confer the degree, but found, contrary to law, they had conferred both degrees before the beneficiary certificate arrived. In the meantime, I ordered the Grand Recorder not to issue the beneficiary certificate.

To verify the above, the same applicant applied to another Lodge in the same city for membership six months after this date. On his second examination papers he acknowledged to have been intoxicated eleven months previous, and used stimulants whenever he needed them. Under these circumstances, we ordered the Grand Recorder to refuse certificate the second time.

FRATERNAL VISITS.

As early as November last, a general apathy seeming to have overtaken the membership and Lodges of this jurisdiction, upon consultation with several of the other Grand Lodge officers, I decided to follow up the plan of the various Grand Masters of California, and pay a fraternal or official visit (as far as practicable with my business affairs) to every Lodge in this jurisdiction. Acting upon this decision, I visited in person and by proxy, forty-nine of the eighty-five Lodges.

In my visitations I have had the pleasure of being accompanied by Grand Recorder, Robert Newcomb. I felt that it was necessary that Brother Newcomb should be with me, as he is thoroughly acquainted with the various blanks, books and forms used, and as many of the Lodges, particularly the younger ones, seemed to have some difficulty in getting their returns correct, I deemed it for the best interests of all concerned that he should be with me, and so requested his presence. Brother Newcomb kindly acceded to my desires, although at considerable trouble and expense to himself, and for which I wish at this time to return him my thanks, and it gives me great pleasure in saying to you that these visitations have been productive of the most pleasant results. Many Lodges that were apparently dead or dying for lack of interest previous to our visit, are now working with vigor and enthusiasm, and the accounts and reports come forward in better condition than ever before. In making these visitations we have been absent from home nearly thirty days, and traveled over 3,500 miles. The expense has been heavy, as a portion of the distance traveled was by stage.

DEATH LOSSES.

To close my report upon death losses during the year, I would say that it has been necessary to levy nineteen assessments to pay thirty-one losses, but they did not happen all in my term—five death losses having occurred during the previous year that were not settled for. Nevertheless, the death losses have been very large, much more than our usual average, but still less than the average of the standard life insurance companies. We have had eleven accidental deaths, which is an extraordinary record, and probably may never occur again. We leave but two death claims in the office unpaid, and one that cannot be paid until we hear from the heirs in Ireland.

Here let us say a word for the Pacific Overseer.

I attribute the fact of the steady growth of our Order in this jurisdiction the past year largely to the publication and distribution among the members of the Order of the Pacific Overseer. It is a paper of which the Order may well be proud, and should be encouraged in every legitimate way by this Grand Lodge. The Grand Recorder's and Grand Receiver's monthly reports are published and sent to each Lodge and Grand officers, and space has been allowed each month for the use of the G. M. W., G. R., and G. M. D., and for communications from the several Lodges. This enterprise should be encouraged by again making this paper the official organ, and for the good of the Order this Grand Lodge should make it the duty of the Recorder of every Subordinate Lodge to retain on file a copy of each issue of the paper.

Subordinate Lodges should be asked to subscribe liberally for the paper, to be distributed among the members for use among friends to induce accessions to our membership. It affords a medium through which your officers can reach every member of the Order in this jurisdiction, and while I know the paper is now highly appreciated by the membership, yet should the paper be discontinued for any reason, the membership would fully realize that in the Pacific Overseer the Order had an invaluable aid for the promotion of the best interests of the Order.

GRAND RECORDER'S OFFICE.

And here brethren, I hesitate to report, for the very great responsibility, even the very life of this Order depends upon the accuracy of the accounts in every minute detail of the Grand Recorder's office, and no man should be elected or accept this office unless he is a thoroughly practical business man, and one well posted in the laws and usages of all fraternal societies. Nor should such a one be asked to occupy this position without being paid for this services when faithfully rendered. The idea is abroad that any cheap man can undertake this office. My brethren, no business man will, if he needs one, employ a cheap bookkeeper. The mistakes and errors of a poor accountant will cause more loss of custom than double the amount usually paid to a competent person. We believe in practical economy ourselves and conduct our business on that basis, but cheap help in any business is not practical economy, and we think too much praise cannot be awarded our present Grand Recorder, Robert Newcomb, who has given to the work of the Order that care and attention in detail that has distinguished him among the Grand Recorders of the Order throughout the country.

GRAND MEDICAL EXAMINER.

I feel confident that every member of this Order is now fully convinced that the Supreme Lodge did a very wise thing when it created this office, and ordered the Grand Lodge to carry its provision as to the appointment of a Medical Director, and when you read the report of our faithful and efficient Grand Medical Director, Dr. J. F. M. Browne, it will be seen that he has done a vast amount of good work for the Order. He has discharged duties without fear or favor, and I return him thanks for many official favors and courtesies shown.

Our standing committees and Trustees have attended to all the business entrusted to their care with promptness and fidelity, for which they have my sincere thanks.

Mechanics' Institute.

The Mechanics' Institute of this city is now taking some little trouble to increase its membership, and rendering the advantages it possesses available to a larger class of people. The trustees have issued cards inviting the public to pay a visit of inspection to the library and reading rooms on any Saturday evening. There will be some one to escort visitors around the rooms and explain to them the workings of the Institute.

The library rooms are large, well lighted, easy of access, and include a private conversation and reading parlor for ladies. The library contains 33,000 volumes, the circulating department, 16,000; is well selected, and new standard and popular works are added as they appear. The reference department is unusually comprehensive, contains many valuable works not possessed by other libraries on this coast, and is recognized as the best educational library in the State. Members enjoy all the privileges of a private library, the rules permitting personal access to the shelves. The reading rooms are well supplied with papers, magazines and reviews from all parts of the world, especial attention being given to scientific and educational publications. The chess room is the largest and finest in the country, and the strongest players on this coast, attracted by it, have become members of the Institute. This institution has been made the official repository for patent reports by both the English and American governments, thus making membership of benefit to manufacturers and indispensable to inventors.

The dues are only fifty cents per month and the initiation fee $1, while a life membership may be purchased for $50. The trustees have wisely concluded also to give members of the Institute double or single season tickets for the coming fair, for half the usual price. For general information we append the following on this subject: The double season ticket will admit the owner and any lady and one child, under eight; or, any two ladies and one child, under eight; or, any lady and two children, under eight; or, the owner and two children, under eight, but must not be presented by any gentleman other than the original owner. If a lady member purchases a double season ticket, it will be issued as a lady's ticket, in her name; no gentleman can use it, but any two ladies and one child, under eight, can have admission thereon. The single season ticket is not transferable. Tickets at above reduced rates are sold to members only. The price of tickets to the general public is unaltered, viz.: Double season, $5.00; single season, $3.00; child's season, $1.50; apprentices season, $1.50; adult single admission, 50 cents; child's single admission, 25 cents.

A HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA.—A. Roman, of 120 Sutter street, S. F., has just published a revised and enlarged edition of "A Popular History of California" from the earliest period of its discovery to the present time, by Lucia Norman. It is almost excellent little work (216 pages), and not simply a dry statement of facts, names and dates, but is written in an animated and elegant style. It is comprehensive and compact—a marvel of conciseness—from the preface to the end. The only illustration in the book is an excellent copy of Nahl's famous painting, "The Sutter Mill," which has now become an historical picture, so much prized by all early Californians. The book is for sale at all book stores, and mailed to any address, postage paid, upon the receipt of price by publisher.

ORANGES FAR NORTH.—One of the largest orange trees in the State is the famous one at Bidwell Bar which is 25 feet high, 23 feet in diameter through its limbs, and its trunk is 44 inches in circumference. It bore last year 2,075 oranges.

THE gross bullion product of the Tombstone mine for June was $51,400.

Pacific Coast Inventions.

Dewey & Co.'s MINING AND SCIENTIFIC PRESS Patent Agency is obtaining—as it has been for some years—the large majority of all the patents issued by the government to Pacific coast inventors. The business, however, is by no means confined to inventors on this coast, as patents are frequently obtained for foreigners and inventors in Eastern cities, a fact which our weekly lists and records prove. Dewey & Co.'s Patent Agency has been in existence so many years that the managers have a very thorough acquaintance with the needs of our inventors, and are thoroughly familiar with the details and requirements of the Patent Office. As a result, they have been very successful in obtaining patents, a fact which inventors recognize.

Within the past few years the number of inventors has greatly increased in the Pacific States and Territories. The exigencies to be met in comparatively new or isolated regions seem to sharpen men's wits, and when difficulties are encountered they are apt to be met by the individual without the usual dependence being placed on others. This has fostered invention in many branches. Moreover, new industries have arisen among us which needed appliances of a peculiar nature. In advice and assistance, Dewey & Co.'s Patent Agency has been of great service to these inventors, preparing their papers, informing them of the state of the art, and smoothing out difficulties, which their experience has enabled them to do. As a consequence, there has been a gradual increase of patronage from year to year, as is evidenced by the increased list of patents granted to Pacific Coast inventors.

THUNDERING DOWN THE MOUNTAIN. In widening the trail up Mount Scowden, a few days since, it became necessary to blast away a disjointed mass of granite forty feet long and twenty feet high. A charge of giant powder having been placed behind it and fired, the great block, weighing some 200,000 pounds, was toppled over into the smooth rocky bed of a steep ravine, leading down the side of the mountain 2,000 feet. Sliding down this smooth channel, the huge mass acquired at once a fearful velocity, and leaping more than a hundred feet at a bound, threw off great fragments that whirled through the air like a shower of cannon balls, one piece, weighing over a ton, striking at the base of the mountain and leaping clear across Mill creek, and burying itself deeply in the opposite bank. The miners in the neighborhood, startled by the concussion, supposed for a time that an earthquake had occurred.

HUMAN HAIR UNDER THE MICROSCOPE.—E. B. Tylor, in Nature, says: that the microscopic examination of the cross section of a single human hair is sufficient to determine to which one of the race divisions of humanity the wearer belongs. If examined microscopically by Pruner's method, it shows circular, or oval, or reniform. Its follicle curvature may be estimated by the average diameter of the curls as proposed by Moseley. Its coloring matter may be estimated by Sorby's method. There has been even a systematic classification of man published by Dr. W. Muller, of the Novara expedition, which is primarily arranged according to hair, in straight-haired races, curly-haired races, etc., with a secondary division according to language.

PLANTATION PHILOSOPHY.—De troubles we hab in de beginnin' ob life, in old age is looked back to as life's pleasures.

Poverty will give whar riches will refuse. Dis is one reason why de po' is po', an' why de rich is rich.

De wise man specklerates on de mysteries ob death, when da ain't eben foun' out de mysteries ob life.

De downfall ob a hypocrite is eben enjoyed by all hypocrites themselves—of da doan b'long ter de same church.

De mos' harmful influences ob dis life is concealed under de brightest kiver. De black snake ain't nigh so putty as de copperhead, but he ain't half so pizen.

ACTION OF THE HEART.—As with each stroke the heart projects something like six ounces of blood into the conduits of the system, and as it does so some seventy times a minute and 4,200 times an hour, this implies that it does the same thing 100,800 times in twenty-four hours, 30,000,000 times a year, and more than 2,500,- 000,000 times in a life of seventy years. The mechanical force that is exerted at each stroke amounts to a pressure of thirteen pounds upon the entire charge of blood that has to be pressed onward through the branching network of vessels. According to the lowest estimate that has been made, this gives an exertion of force that would be adequate, in another form of application, to lift 120 tons one foot high every twenty-four hours. Yet the piece of living mechanism that is called upon to do this, and do it without a pause for threescore years and ten, without itself being worn out by the effort, is a small bundle of flesh that rarely weighs more than eleven ounces. It is in the nature of the case, also, it must be remembered that this little vital machine cannot be at any time stopped for repair. If it gets out of order, it must be set right as it runs. To stop the beat-

AN ACCOMPLISHED MISS.—Miss Rosalind H.
 Young is a resident of Pitcairn Island. She is a descendant of one of the mutineers of the British ship Bounty, the crew of which founded a colony on Pitcairn Island in 1790, consisting of nine British sailors, six native Tahitian men, and twelve women, which has since grown into a moderately populous village, with comfortable cottages, a church, and a school-house.
 The residents all read, write, and speak the English language. Miss Young, however, is a prodigy of scholarship in the colony. Some of our readers will remember that two years ago she wrote an article, descriptive of the island, for Scribner's Magazine. A retired sea captain, who visited the island not long ago, draws this picture of Miss Young: "Her father is pastor of the island church and teacher of the school, and she is organist and assistant teacher. She is about twenty-six years old, and weighs 200 pounds, never had a shoe on her foot, and, if necessary, could swim off to a ship four miles from the island and back again to shore, and then go into the little church and play the organ nearly as well as any young lady in the States."

JAMES PATTERSON MILLER, of Salem, Or., ended a spree by committing suicide.

A REMARKABLE SAURIAN.—The Brazilian Minister at La Paz, Bolivia, has transmitted to his government at Rio Janeiro, photographs and drawings of a most extraordinary saurian, lately killed near La Paz, but only after receiving thirty-six rifle balls. The dried body of the monster has also been preserved. The body is twelve meters long from snout to point of the tail, which latter is flattened. Besides the anterior head, it has four meters behind, two small but completely formed heads (?) rising from the back. All three have much resemblance to the head of a dog. The legs are short and end in formidable claws. The legs, belly and lower part of the throat appear defended by a kind of scale armor, and all the back is protected by a still thicker and double cuirass, starting from behind the ears of the anterior head and continuing to the tail. The neck is long, and the belly large and almost dragging on the ground. Professor Gilvetti, who examined the beast, thinks it is not a monster, but a member of a rare or almost lost species, as the Indians in some parts of Bolivia use small earthen vases of identical shape, and probably copied from nature. Mr.
 William E. A. Axon, in a note giving the above to the Journal of Science, says: "If this account should prove to be accurate, it would form a counterpart to the etching of the mammoth, which forms so interesting a memorial of prehistoric art."

PLANTATION PHILOSOPHY.—De troubles we hab in de beginnin' ob life, in old age is looked back to as life's pleasures.

Poverty will give whar riches will refuse.
 Dis is one reason why de po' is po', an' why de rich is rich.

De wise man speckerlates on de mysteries ob death, when da ain't eben foun' out de mysteries ob life.

De downfall ob a hypocrite is eben enjoyed by all hypocrites demselves—ef da doan b'long ter de same church.

De mos' harmful influences ob dis life is concealed under de brightest kiver. De black snake ain't nigh so putty as de copperhead, but he ain't half so pizen.

Dis only iron preparation that does not color de teeth, and will not cause headache or constipation, as other iron preparations will, is Brown's Iron Bitters.

The cholera continues to spread in Egypt, and has reached London and Berlin.

No. 252 Market St., S. F.The New Agricultural Editor.At two o'clock P. M. the first visitor showed up at the door of the office, and Dyke cordially invited him inside. The farmer entered hesitatingly, and remarked that he had expected to meet the proprietor, with whom he had an appointment to discuss ensilage."I am in charge of the journal," said Dyke.
"Oh, you are. Well, you seem to have a pretty clean office here.""Yes," replied Dyke. "But about this ensilage. Ensilage is a pretty good breed, isn't it?""Breed!" exclaimed the farmer, "why—"
"I mean it's a sure crop, something that you can rely on."

"Crop!" "Why, it isn't a crop at all."

"Yes, yes, I know it isn't a crop," said Dyke, perspiring until his collar began to melt away down the back of his neck; "but you can do better and cleaner work with a good sharp ensilage on stubby ground than—"

"Take it for a sulky plow, do you?"

"No, no," said Dyke. "You don't seem to understand me. Now, if a farmer builds an ensilage on low ground—""Build an ensilage! You seem to have got the thing mixed up with some kind of a granary.""Pshaw, no," continued Dyke. "I must make myself plainer. You see this ensilage properly mixed with one part guano and three parts hypophosphate of antimony, with the addition of a little bran and tanbark, and the whole flavored with chloride of lime, makes a top dressing for strawberry beds which—"

"Why, ensilage isn't no manure."

"No, certainly not," said Dyke. "I know it is not often used in that way. You don't catch my drift. When I said top dressing, I meant turkey dressing, stuffing, you know, for Thanksgiving—"

"Great heavens! Ensilage isn't a human food."

The Best Work at Reasonable Prices. 247

"No, not a human food, exactly," said poor Dyke, grinning like an almshouse idiot; "it isn't a food at all in the true sense of the word. My plan has always been to lasso the hog with a trace chain, and after pinning his ears back with a clothes-pin, put the ensilage into his nose with a pair of tweezers.""My good lands! You don't use ensilage to ring hogs."The farmer slowly arose, and with some evidence of rheumatic twinges in his legs."Young man," he said solemnly, "you are a long ways from home, ain't you?""Yes," replied Dyke, dropping his eyes beneath the stern glances of the farmer. "In my ancestral halls in England, sad-eyed retainers wearily watch and wait for my return.""Go home, young man, go home to your feo-dal castle, and while on your way across the rolling deep muse on the fact that ensilage is simply canned food for live stock, put up expressly for family use in a silo, which is nothing less than an air-tight pit where cornstalks, grass, millet, clover, alfalfa, and other green trucks is preserved for winter use."—Texas Siftings.THE PRODUCT OF THE MESQUITE. The Arizona Citizen says: The mesquite trees are now loaded with their fruit, which resembles the locust pod and bean, to which species the mes-quite belongs. The pods measure from eight to ten inches in length, and are very edible for Indians and burros. The Papagoes gather the to a flour, which, mixed with water and baked and is good to keep one from starving.At Eagle Pass, Texas, on the 12th, the first

Good Land and Sure Crops.

There has been steady and tolerably rapid advancement made in the growth of a majority of the towns in Colusa, Butte, Tehama and Shasta counties. Especially is this so in the agricultural districts where the land produces at least fair crops in all seasons—wet or dry—as does the land on the Reading Ranch. Those looking for homes in California where diversified farming will pay every year; where wood and water are plenty and easy to be obtained, and other desirable advantages are to be had, should examine the Reading Grant.

Some 14,000 out of 26,000 acres of the grant remain for sale at comparatively low rates, in quantities to suit purchasers, on easy terms. Prices range from $5 to $30 per acre. The tract is between two and three miles wide, with the Northern Division of the C. P. R. R. passing centrally through its entire length. Send postage stamp for free circulars containing information about Shasta County and these lands, to the proprietor of Reading Ranch.

The Great Conclave.

One of the great events, if not the greatest event of the year in San Francisco, will be the triennial conclave of the Knights Templar. It will bring to our State about 5,000 of the leading citizens of the eastern states. They, together with their fraters resident upon the Pacific coast, will join in a pageant which will probably be the most notable our coast will behold for a generation. The distinctive eminence of the occasion leads us to devote a page of space in this issue to a sketch of the order holding the celebration and the programme for the week's exercises, that our readers in distant parts may be fully informed of the event, and those who desire to witness the popular features of the conclave may know the days upon which they transpire. The Governor has declared August 24th, upon which the corner stone laying of the Garfield monument occurs, in Golden Gate park, a public holiday. This day, and Monday, August 20th, upon which occur the grand street parade and review, will no doubt attract most attention from the people, although the grand competitive drill on Saturday, August 25th, will be popular. We give this early notice of the conclave for the benefit of those contemplating a visit to the city during the week.

This grand convocation of Knights Templar has a significance other than that pertaining to its fraternal features. It will bring to our coast a great concourse of influential Americans, many of whom will behold for the first time the beauties of California, and the wealth of her resources and productions. A Chicago writer, contemplating the possible results of this visit, gives the following excellent paragraph:

These men are all active business men, deeply interested in the progress of our country, and it would be hard to estimate the importance of this Triennial Conclave to the general business interests of the East and West. It could not happen at a more opportune time. Great lines of railroad are just completed and others are rapidly approaching completion, which will develop that far Western country exactly as Illinois was developed when the iron rail penetrated it. No one can form an idea of the splendid future now to be unfolded in Colorado, California, Montana and the adjacent Territories. The Northern Pacific, Atlantic and Pacific, and other lines, will work perfect transformation wherever they touch. All this will be seen and discussed by those keen observers who will be at San Francisco during August. The Californians are thoroughly alive, not only to the social, but also to the business importance of this gathering. It is not only to be a reunion of the order of Templars, but an opportunity for showing practical men, quick at embracing any favorable opportunity, the immense resources of the Pacific Coast and openings for an extensive and profitable commerce with the business men of every portion of this land. Californians are the most sanguine and hospitable people in the world, and they will leave no stone unturned to make this a time never to be forgotten by those who had the good fortune to participate in it.

No doubt Californians will be alert to show their State to the visitors in its best shape. Several of the California Commanderies will have, at their headquarters in this city, a continuous spread of California fruits, wines, etc., of which all visitors will be invited to partake. There will also be excursions planned to various parts

THE CENSUS.—Just complaint is being voiced at the East because the industrial publications of the census office are being so long withheld from publication. The last census was planned with much breadth and liberality, and most excellent work was done by many able experts, but the compilers of the statistics say they are far ahead of the government printing office in their work, and have been for months. The government printing office is said to be turning out work with much greater rapidity than ever before. The truth is, this printing establishment is loaded down and clogged from devil to chief printer with reports of "investigations," abortive in results, started and carried on for purely political purposes and without hope of good to the country. They take precedence

The Old Carmel Mission.

We have from time to time given engravings of the interesting old buildings left as monuments of the zeal and industry of the padres and their converts. Upon this page is a view of the ruins of the San Carlos, or Carmel Mission, near Monterey. This Mission, one of the four established towards the end of the eighteenth century in Upper California, by Father Junipero Serra and his coadjutors in the work of civilization, was founded on the 3d of June, 1770. Among the church buildings erected in Upper California by the missionary fathers, that of San Carlos was one of the best in style and material. There were good ideas of architectural form in the head that planned this solid building. The two great towers gave an air of dignity to the vast construction, and one sees, now that ruin has overtaken the edifice, what it cannot be merely fanciful to suppose was intentional with the designer, that there is a prevailing slope of the walls from the main building from the ground to the roof, so that the general form of the church, seen en masse, recalls that of a mound the very shape of the Syrian Mount Carmel. It is a noble building, standing in a landscape full of enchanting beauties. Inland, the eye looks across the broad leagues, that once owed the beneficent sway of the priests, to the distant hills.

The view seaward is one not to be surpassed on the Pacific coast. In the church-yard of the Mission lie the remains of fifteen Governors of this province and State, and the tomb of the Apostle of California, of the State, and the country, as well as the city, will come under review. We trust that all who visit us may return with good reports of our vigorous young commonwealth, and by their appreciative praises, aid us in its advance ment in population and in industrial strength.

WHENEVER and wherever the WATCHMAN representatives personally succeed in having brought clearly before the various Lodges the advantages of publishing their cards in our directory, the Lodges never fail to see the propriety of paying to the publishers the small annual sum asked, and always order it done. As the affair was clearly worded by a Recorder of a Lodge that we visited the other evening: "We do not want something for nothing. We get value received for all that we pay in this direction, and I tell you it would be a great convenience lost to visiting brethren, and to Recorders who desire to correspond with other Lodges, if this directory were discontinued."

over census, department of agriculture, and other reports which would be valuable at home and abroad if promptly issued, but worthless, except to old paper dealers, if delayed beyond a reasonable time. It is a deplorable state of affairs, but how to remedy it is a problem difficult of solution under the present systems, which serve political ambitions of individuals rather than the public good.

ILLINOIS FINANCES.—The Grand Recorder of Illinois, C. P. Hitch, sends us his report dated August 1st, from which we learn that the receipts and disbursements of the Order in his State for July were: Beneficiary Fund, $12,523; General Fund, $6,219.83.

The Lodges of this city are responding quite well to the appeals for contributions in the Lucky case. Over seven hundred dollars have already been paid in all.

nia, Junipero Serra, who died in 1784, still zealous in his great work. The lands surrounding the Carmel Mission were fertilized by a perennial stream of pure water, and thus offered advantages, which the missionaries were not slow to avail themselves of, for the cultivation of many kinds of vegetables and fruits. It was on the lands of this Mission that the first potatoes grown in California were raised, in 1826. The privilege of planting this esculent was given to the natives without limit, and they so improved their opportunities that the whalers, which made a regular stopping place of Monterey, supplied themselves with great quantities. The temporal welfare of the estate had reached a great development in the year 1825, when the fathers possessed 90,000 cattle, 50,000 sheep, 2,000 horses, 2,000 calves, 370 yoke of oxen, with merchandise to the value of $50,000, and over $40,000 in silver. In 1835 the property, by a decree of the Mexican Congress, was converted to secular uses,

"Carry me out, my brethren,
For I can work no more.
Carry me out to meet him—
My master at the door!
The sun is slowly setting,
And the old man's eyes are dim,
And the task he gave is finished;
Carry me out to him!"

"The task he gave is finished;
I mind when it began,
How joyously and swiftly
The busy moments ran;
In ardor for his service,
Methought I wrought so well
That e'en his own appointments
I should at last excel."

"But through my vain ambition
There fell the hand divine,
That quietly effac'd it—
My dearly-loved design.
And whilst I sore lamented
For beauty swept away,
"More beauty hath obedience,"
I heard the master say."

"Then I was still, my brethren,
And turned to toil anew,
Leaving to him the guidance,
Whose plans are sure and true;
And though to grace his pattern
At times I vainly tried,
My heart found rest-remembering
He sees the other side."

"I sat behind the canvas,
I saw no beauty grow,
I held his own direction—
Enough for me to know;
Many had wider portions
Of clearer, brighter hue,
But the old man in the corner
The master needed too."

"And if nor gain nor glory
Shine out from this my weft,
Still he will not be angry—
I did the task he left.
And not that I am helpless,
And weary is my frame,
My brethren, in the distance
I hear him call my name."

They bore the old man gently
Forth from the working-room,
Forth from the ended labor,
Forth from the silent loom,
And down a voice came floating,
A voice serene and blest,
"O good and faithful servant!
Enter thou into rest."

"Long, long in patient duty
Thy yearning soul was tried;
Open thine eyes to beauty
Upon the other side!
Behind the canvas toiling,
Thou didst not dream of this
That every shadow-tangle Wrought out eternal bliss!"

"And every thread mysterious
In the pattern given,
Was weaving rich perfection
Of love and life in heaven,
Now rise thou to the glory
By lowly hearts possessed,
Who but fulfill my bidding,
And leave to me the rest."

Margaret Scott Macmillan.

The Glastonbury Sisters, or Abby Smith and Her Cows.

WRITTEN BY EMMA P. COLLENS.

Who has not heard of "Abby Smith and Her Cows," or the "Glastonbury Sisters?" Just one hundred years after that historic tea party, given by our fathers in Boston harbor, as a protest against the tyranny of taxation without representation, these sisters made as vigorous a protest against the same kind of tyranny being imposed upon themselves.

Abby Smith and her cows, of whom Mrs. Beecher Hooker said, that like "John Brown's soul," they were marching on, have made Glastonbury, in Connecticut, the Lexington of the second struggle for independence, by that half of our citizens who failed to obtain it by the first contest, a century before.

For the benefit of California readers, I will give you a succinct history of these famous sisters; though an interesting volume could be written upon these remarkable women. They came from a decidedly original and unique stock, for both parents were peculiarly strong in their own individuality, forming their opinions by the light of their own reason, rather than from authority, or the ideas of others. The father rejoiced in the rare and euphonious name of Smith,—not John, however, but Zephaniah. He was a native of Glastonbury, but at the time of his marriage to Harriet Hickok, the mother of the sisters, he was settled as a clergyman in Newtown; but, imbibing some doubts as to certain religious dogmas, and being too honest to preach what he did not believe, he resigned. Finding that people cared much more for saving their property than their souls, he commenced the study of law. His wife and he, jointly, bought a farm of 130 acres in Glastonbury, and the family moved into the large and substantial mansion on it, built in 1739, and which has now become as famous as Faneuil Hall, in Boston, and for a similar reason. The wife and mother was remarkable for her various attainments. She was well versed in astronomy, had learned Latin and French when a girl, studied Latin when fifty years of age, and at seventy, learned to read the Bible in Hebrew. She wrote a volume of poems of no mean order, but we believe they were never published. Here she lived and instructed her five daughters, not having any sons, in the languages and in some of the fine arts, besides initiating them into the mysteries of baking and brewing, and all other household industries, while the father looked after the farming, and took a prominent part in the management of public affairs connected with the town.

Here, at a good, old age, first passed away the father, followed, a few years later, by the mother; then at intervals of seven years, one after the other, three of the sisters, leaving the youngest two alone, who kept a fine herd of Alderney cows, and managed all their own business. Here, while Abby milked the cows and fed the calves, Julia made the butter, and translated the Bible from three languages, the Latin, Greek and Hebrew, writing the whole Bible over five times.

These sisters, though they gave in private charities more than all their townspeople besides, and paid into the town treasury more money than any one else, found that their taxes were raised, as also those of some widow ladies, while those of male taxpayers were not increased. When the sisters inquired why this was done, they were told that the assessor had power to assess property as he pleased. Possibly they had read an old document, written a hundred years before, that does not seem to be extant now, in Connecticut, though it may be in some of the Western States, and we know it is in Wyoming Territory; it was called the Declaration of Independence, and purported to announce the principles upon which a government was to be framed for our new nation. In it they read, "Governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed." They reflected that they had never consented to the government that had assumed control over them and their property; in fact, it had denied them the right of saying whether they would accept or reject it. They had read, also, in that old document, that taxation and representation were inseparable, but they were not represented. Indeed, the male citizens of the State had denied the right to appoint, or assist in appointing, some one to represent them. So, on the 5th of November, 1873, Miss Abby Smith, with her sisters, attended the town meeting of their sovereigns, and in a quiet, logical speech, stated her case. She said that every human being wanted the control of his own earnings, and of what rightfully belonged to him. She had been told, she said, "that all the property in the town must be taxed, according to its valuation, for the expense of the town; but when a part of the owners met to say how much money must be raised, how it should be expended, what men should hold the offices, what salaries they should be paid, and denied the other owners any voice in the matter, it was unjust."

She said "hundreds of dollars every year have been extorted from us by the same right that the robber takes your purse—the right of might." That "paupers, and even inmates of the insane asylum, had been brought out and their poll tax paid for them, so that they might vote as to the amount of money that should be expended for their support, as also upon all other public matters." She said: "Suppose that in a family of brothers and sisters the brothers should get together, and without consulting their sisters make an agreement among themselves to take of their sisters' property as much and as often as they chose, alleging as an excuse that they had made a law among themselves that they would do so, and the law being made the sisters had no right to resist it. Are the sisters bound by such a law? Are we bound by it?" This appeal to their townsmen, of course, was of no avail, for the law had to be fulfilled, and seven of their fine Alderneys were levied and driven away to be sold for a tax of $101; those pet cows that they had so tenderly nursed from calfhood up to stately kine to be kept in durance vile awaiting the day of sale was torture to the loving heart of their mistress. Then why not pay the tax and release her darlings? "What, submit to oppression and relinquish the grand principle of liberty? No! Perish cows and calves! But surrender? Never!" There was true Yankee grit.

The next spring another tax was levied, and as if to annoy these defenceless women as much as possible, the chivalrous collector levied upon their land and sold $2,000 worth to pay a tax of $49, although there was plenty of personal property, both in and outside of the house, upon which he was legally bound to levy before taking real estate. The sisters were forced into a court of equity in order to recover their land. Subsequently, they brought on action for trespass against the collector, which, after three trials, was decided in their favor.

The sisters now appealed to the Legislature, petitioning for equal rights only with the most ignorant and degraded male foreigners that land upon our shores. The Committee on Suffrage gave them a hearing, and the sisters, both being good speakers, ably argued their cause before it. But our impartial Legislature rejected their petition, politely giving them "leave to withdraw," though some years before, when the injustice of taxing negroes, while they were deprived of the elective franchise, was brought to the notice of the Legislature, it promptly exempted from taxation "all the estate, both real and personal, of colored men, till they should be given the right of suffrage," proving that the prejudice against sex is deeper than against race, color or condition.

But the troubles of these ladies continued; for every few months a new tax would be levied which they manfully resisted, and we use that adverb in its literal sense, for there was enough of the spirit of seventy-six in the native-born men of New England to have fought to the death before they would have paid taxes under like conditions. But alas, those who exult in their own freedom are often the first to impose chains upon others, and these Connecticut rebels of 1873 were only women.

Annually, these persevering sisters, joined by many distinguished ladies, petitioned the Legislature for the ballot, by which to protect their inalienable rights, but their petitions were as often denied.

It must not be thought that all the men of New England and the Atlantic States were dead to the sentiments of justice and chivalry, for many generously espoused their cause, and contributed material aid, "the sinews of war," to help defray the expenses of the contest. The press, generally, favored their cause; notably the Springfield Republican championed them. It said, "that these two women, paying into the town treasury every year more money than any man in the place, should have no voice in the disposition of that money, simply because they are women, is a state of things so entirely opposed to every sentiment of fair play, that we are glad that the men of New England are particularly confronted with the inherent absurdity and injustice of their attitude." It further said, "that in refusing to pay these taxes, Abby Smith and her sister as truly stand for the American principle, as did the citizens who ripped open the tea chests in Boston harbor, or the farmers who leveled their muskets at Concord. They are not demonstrative or declamatory; they don't shriek, or wring their hands, or make a fuss of any sort; they are good nature itself. But they are also logic itself, and resolution itself, and pluck itself. They simply stand on their rights." But the majority of men thought it very indelicate "for women to unsex themselves," by resisting taxation, though unjust; while others regarded it as a huge joke, which afforded them infinite merriment, forgetting that they were deriding and trampling down the very principles that were the only tenure by which they held their own liberty.

Though now past their four score years, the mental faculties of these women were preserved bright and keen by constant exercise, and their physical powers strong by unremitting activity. Though there was no France to step in, to aid them in their rebellion, they persevered in their resistance to taxation without representation, and saw their pet cows sold at auction, and their property melting away by costs and interest on taxes, while they continued their annual appeals to the legislature for justice,—but all in vain.

Now if any of your readers think, because these women managed their own farm and wanted to vote, that they were coarse or masculine, your readers are entirely mistaken; for they were unusually accomplished and refined, and in the best sense of the term, genuine ladies. They were very learned, and as a Boston editor said, "could tell their grievances in five or six languages." Miss Julia spoke Greek as fluently as others do English, and her translation of the Bible was an erudite task, and one that no man alone had ever accomplished. One of the elder sisters was a skillful artist, and the old mansion is embellished with many of her paintings. It was a singular coincidence that every seventh year, from the time of their mother's death, in 1850, one of the daughters followed her. The years rolled on, and again Death made his sepulchral visit to the Smith family, and Julia was left alone,—the last of her race.

The sisters had been united by the closest ties of affection, and were one in thought, purpose, and interest; and now the bereaved sister sought to relieve her loneliness by inviting a second cousin in Vermont, in whose wife she had found a congenial friend, to share her home and her substance. But hardly had they been domiciled under her hospitable roof ere the wife sickened and died, and Julia again found herself companionless, at an age when that deep yearning implanted in every human heart, for love and sympathy are quite as strong as in buoyant youth, when hope and ambition dominate the mind, and the world, like a golden panorama, lies all before. Was it wonderful, then, that when a gentleman every way worthy and suitable offered his heart and hand she should accept him? Of course, it afforded some amusement to the outside world, that at the immature age of each, just eighty-six, the youthful lovers should recklessly rush into matrimony. But the wonder really is, why all the sisters should live to old age and escape the aim of Cupid's shaft. They were witty, brilliant and charming in conversation, and in youth could not have been ill-favored or unattractive. Without doubt, the reason why they chose a life of celibacy was that their affection for each other was so strong and deep that they felt no need of any other, and their lives were so full and complete, so busy with their own self-imposed but congenial labors that they found no time to toy with the blind god. Mr. Parker, the husband, is a scholar, an author and a gentleman, and so far as the world can judge, this union of the ancient pair has been one of unbroken love and quiet happiness. Since Mrs. Smith Parker has had a husband who can vote, we believe by his advice she has paid her taxes without further protest, though she still denies the principle that the husband, ex-officio, is the representative of the wife.

But it seems that the few remaining days of this aged couple, now nonagenarians, are not to be exempt from trouble; for this distant kinsman of hers, whom she permitted to occupy her premises, now claims the whole estate, real and personal, as a gift from her, and has lately brought a suit to restrain her from disposing of any part of it. He had no written contract or promise, and proved by his young daughter only, that Miss Smith before they moved on to her farm, promised to give it to them, while they, in return, were to take care of her,—testimony that Mrs. Smith Parker contradicts under oath. The suit is not finally decided, but by the ruling of the court, this kinsman is still allowed the use and occupancy of all the property, except the house and garden, and from all her Alderneys only two quarts of milk per day, and two pounds of butter per week. As a verbal contract is valid for only one year the rulings of the court are quite incomprehensible. If they are according to law,—then the law is like the sleight-of-hand performer's "Now you see it and—now you don't."

Mrs. Parker's intellect is not the least impaired by her ninety-one years, but she seems as bright and acute as in her youthful days.

In the present suit, all the cross-questioning of astute, opposing counsel failed to confuse or distort her straightforward testimony. But her bodily vigor is failing, and soon the Glastonbury sisters will be known only in history. But when the great principle, for which they so bravely contended, shall have triumphed in our land, then, a truly free and grateful nation will rear a monument to their memories.

How to Walk Well.

(WRITTEN BY ME.)

An easy, graceful carriage of the body in walking, or other exercise, is an agreeable sight, even to the moderately artistic eye, as the spectacle of a shuffling, waddling or hobbling gait is unpleasant. The position of the feet has much to do with the general bearing and it is a great pity that so little attention is paid to this subject, especially in the case of children with whom any slight tendency in the wrong direction can be so easily overruled.

No habit is more inelegant than that of walking with the toes turned in, or straight forward of us, like the Indians; it always suggests a defect of character quite out of proportion to the bodily imperfection, as one may realize any day who will take the pains to observe the movements of those who believe that while it is proper to pay attention to their heads, the feet will take care of themselves.

Watching a succession of children, on their way to or from school we shall notice some who seem to tip up the inner side of the foot and step on the outer edge of the shoe sole, as if thus to escape painful pressure elsewhere. This kind of awkward walk originates in the wearing of too short shoes; others display a firm but elastic gait, their feet directed sufficiently outward. Some place the foot flat on the ground but turn the toes in. As in other things the majority range between the best and worst; one or two in a hundred will be "splay-footed," but this is infinitely less objectionable than to be "pigeon-toed."

Some famous writer has said that "grace depends on excess of power," or a surplus of that vital force with which we use and control the muscles. In a large sense this is doubtless true, yet a good dancing master, or a little systematic home training (the former preferred) will do much towards securing a well-balanced freedom of movement where this "excess of power" does not exist.

We once knew a girl of 14 who was the despair of her first dancing master because of the fault in question. Her effort to obey his orders failed to sufficiently relax the muscles of the ankle. She, however, was a determined character and made up her mind to overcome the difficulty or die in the attempt, and she hit upon a plan which succeeded admirably. Every spare five minutes in the day she spent standing at her chamber window, with her feet extended laterally against the wainscoting. This settled the case in less than 10 days. As the instructor in foreign languages finds it desirable at first, to exaggerate the unaccustomed gutturals and linguals, in order that his pupils may afterwards fall back with ease on the correct pronunciation, so my young friend found that by pressing out her feet at right angles, previously, she attained the desirable juste milieu of pedal attitude and was no more a reproach to hall or street.

DANGER FROM SWINGS. The following communication from ex-Mayor Daniel R. Clymer, of Reading, Pa., embodies an important suggestion, which it would be well to heed: Near to each end of a joist a hole is bored; run a rope through each hole, and tie three knots on top of said joist to secure it to hold the swing seat; then tie a knot in each rope three inches below the joist; this done, tie a strong safety rope under said knot; then lay this rope loosely over the top of the joist near the ends of the swing, so that when the rope breaks at the greatest point of friction and wear, right under the joist, the safety rope lying idle over the joist top will at once catch and rescue the falling person from injury and even death.

Women's Work.

In the agitation of the subject, "Women's Work," too little allowance is often made for the fact that young women, as a rule, do not attack an occupation as vigorously as do young men, from the fact that they regard it but as a temporary matter, and that they may soon do better by marrying. The young women are not to blame for whatever lack of application they sometimes exhibit, because, of course, all the traditions of the sex point to the altar, and it is doubtless impossible to keep it out of mind. But, it would be well for those seeking an occupation by which to gain a livelihood, that concentration of purpose and intense application are the price, any one either man or woman must pay for success, and the young woman should endeavor to apply herself as if indeed her chosen occupation was to be a life work. This idea is well brought out by Mr. Howells in the August Century. Helen Harkness, the heroine of "A Woman's Reason," makes an effort at self-support—first by writing for the newspapers, and afterwards by millinery. The capable, self-supporting Miss Root, of whom she takes counsel, asks her if she is willing to prepare herself for teaching, and to wait for a situation. Helen's answer and Miss Root's rejoinder, contain the kernel of the question of women's work as stated by the novelist:

"No," she sighed, "I couldn't wait. But perhaps I shouldn't want to do anything for a great length of time," she said, innocently, with the thought of Robert's return in her mind. "It might only be for a limited period." "That's what I supposed," said Miss Root. "That's the great trouble. If a man takes a thing up, he takes it up for life, but if a woman takes it up, she takes it up till some fellow comes along and tells her to drop it. And then they're always complainin' that they ain't paid as much as men are for the same work. I'm not speakin' of you, Miss Harkness," she said, with a glance at Helen's face; "and I don't know whether I want to join in any cry that'll take women's minds off of gettin' married. It's the best thing for 'em, and it's about all they're fit for, most of 'em, and it's nature; there's no denyin' that. But if women are to be helped along independent of men—and I never was such a fool as to say they were—why, it's a drawback. And so most of 'em can't wait to prepare themselves for anything, because they don't expect to stick to anything; they turn book agents, or sell some little payented thing; or they try to get a situation in a store."

Speaking of women's work, there comes to mind an account we lately read of, an interesting style of industrial education undertaken by the French government. Government mistresses from the provinces are sent to Paris during the summer holidays to take cutting-out lessons for twenty days, working seven hours per day. All traveling expenses are defrayed by the State. They are expected to impart what they learn to their pupils when they return home. The Parisian school children pass a general examination in cutting out once a year, the best workers receiving one, two or four pounds. The teachers have also their share in the payment. These monetary rewards, however, are very wisely withheld from their juvenile winners. Instead of money, they receive a savings bank book, in which is entered the prize sum, to serve as a foundation for future deposits. It seems that nearly all government rewards are now given in this way—a most admirable plan, inciting to thrift, and preventing the money being wasted by parents or children, as they are forbidden to touch it before the age of twenty-one. All this system of useful instruction has been secured mainly through the efforts of Mlle. Guillaume, who, for thirty-three years has been struggling to prevail upon the government to have cutting out taught in all public schools. With all these advantages it is no wonder that French women are noted not only for the elegance of their toilette, but for its exquisite shape. No matter the cheapness of the material, the fit must be perfection.

A FOREST AT THE BOTTOM OF LAKE TAHOE. The following is from the Carson Appeal: "For some years past there has been a bank in Lake Tahoe, which in clear weather has generally been taken for moss formation. It lies at the right of the steamer's course between Tahoe City and the Tallac House, about two miles beyond Idlewild. It looked as if a lot of trees had sunk to the bottom of the lake and that moss and slime had collected there until the whole presented a wavy, semi-transparent appearance about 50 feet below the surface. During the past few weeks the moss and debris has disappeared, and now when the water is clear a forest of pine trees can be plainly seen with every limb and twig perfect. On Wednesday last some fishermen went out there in a boat and lowering some grappling irons secured several splendid pieces of the petrification. One is a pine branch about three feet long, which held a few feet from the eye, has the exact appearance of a pine branch just taken from a living tree and apparently fresh and green, the brittleness and weight distinguishing it from the freshly cut branch. The forest occupies about two acres and seems like a forest immersed, except that its stony branches are forever still, and the tall weeds and vines which cluster about the trunks of the giant trees are as motionless as the rocks. No wind ever stirs this strange verdure, and the birds, which once sang in the branches centuries ago, have given way to fish which swarm through the forests."

Jerry's New Pantaloon.

When Jerry was six years old he began to go to school. Toward the end of the school term the teacher wished to have an exhibition. All the scholars were to learn pieces to speak. Jerry's mother found some verses beginning,

Twinkle, twinkle, little star,
How I wonder what you are.

Jerry thought these verses were very nice, and with his mother's help he soon learned them.

She taught him how to make a bow, and to point up to the sky when he said "star," and to wave his hand over his head when he said "Up above the world so high." After some practice, she thought he made these motions very prettily.

Jerry's best pair of pantaloon were old and patched. He must have a new pair to speak in; but the stores were far away, and money was very scarce. After searching for something to make them of, his mother used a large check apron she prized very much, and wore only on holidays.

Some of my little readers would have smiled if they had seen Jerry dressed in his long blue and white check pantaloon, check shirt and heavy shoes. He thought he looked very fine. He could not help admiring himself; in fact, he thought too much about his new pantaloon.

On the evening of the exhibition the school-room was crowded. It had been dressed with wildflowers and grasses. A great many tallow candles burned in the bright tin candlesticks. The children thought it looked very grand.

When it was Jerry's turn to speak he stepped boldly upon the stage and made his bow. His father and mother leaned forward, so that they could see him better. Alas, his thoughts were on his new pantaloon, so that he had forgotten all about "the little twinkling star." But he was not afraid, and, after looking all around, he began in a loud, distinct voice:

"I have got on a new pair of pantaloon. Putting his hands into his pockets, he went on: 'My mother made them out of her new apron my Aunt Selina sent from New York, where you can buy lots and lots of nice things; for in New York they have great big stores. Some day I shall go there, for I think new pantaloon are.'"

But he did not have time to tell what he thought. The teacher got upon the stage, and, to the relief of his parents, hurried him to a seat. The farmer lads had greatly enjoyed his speech, and, clapping their hands, gave a hurrah for "Jerry's new pantaloon."—Our Little Ones.

Driving Away Martins.

A band of martins came to my uncle's a little while ago, and built their nests as thick as they could on every board and standard of the barn and veranda. Uncle and aunt left home for some days, and when they came back the veranda was covered with mud. They swept it all away day after day, but they kept on building, so uncle thought he would shoot at them and frighten them away, if he could, but nothing scared them.

One day he went into one of his rooms and saw one of the martins had gone through the open window. He put down the blind, and the bird flew to the window. He caught it by the tail; it fluttered, and all the feathers came out, and it got away. He caught it again, and cut its wing feathers, and tied a string around its left wing, and fastened it to the post of the porch for half a day, and there was not a martin to be seen at the house after that.

It is a sure cure to drive martins away, because when they are too numerous, or come to the wrong place, they are as much a pest as any other creature or insect, though it is sad to oblige one to suffer all those hours to effect the remedy. Perhaps this may interest some of the readers in the "Young Folks' Column" who may have the same trouble. If you think it is too cruel to publish, I will think of something else another time. Perhaps you will remember I am your little correspondent who wrote about the cats nearly two years ago.

Health Column.

Very Hot Water for Consumption.

We find the following in the New York Sun of a recent date, and commend it to the careful attention of our readers generally. The cases mentioned below are not altogether isolated ones. The use of hot water in the way mentioned has proven beneficial in many cases, and is not infrequently recommended by practicing physicians. All such remedies, however, should be used with care, and better in consultation with the family physician:

A young man who was compelled to resign his position in one of the public schools of this city because he was breaking down with consumption, and who has ever since been battling for life, although with little apparent prospect of recovery, was encountered several days ago in a Broadway restaurant.

"I see," he said, "that you seem surprised at my improved appearance. No doubt you wonder what could have caused such a change. Well, it was a very simple remedy—nothing but hot water."

"Hot water?"
"That's all. You remember my telling you that I had tried all the usual remedies. I consulted some of the leading specialists in affections of the lungs in this city, and paid them large fees. They went through the usual course of experimentation with me under all sorts of medicines. I went to the Adirondacks in the summer, and to Florida in the winter; but none of these things did me any substantial good. I lost ground steadily, grew to be almost a skeleton, and had all the worst symptoms of a consumptive whose end is near at hand. At that juncture a friend told me that he had heard of cures being effected by drinking hot water."

"I consulted a physician who had paid special attention to this hot-water cure, and was using it with many patients. He said: 'There is nothing, you know, that is more difficult than to introduce a new remedy into medical practice, particularly if it is a very simple one, and strikes at the root of erroneous views and prejudices that have long been entertained. The old school practitioners have tried for many years to cure consumption, but they are as far from doing it as ever.'"

"Now the only rational explanation of consumption is that it results from defective nutrition. It is always accompanied by mal-assimilation of food. In nearly every case the stomach is the seat of a fermentation that necessarily prevents proper digestion. The first thing to do is to remove that fermentation and put the stomach into a condition to receive food and dispose of it properly. This is effected by taking water into the stomach, as hot as it can be borne, an hour before each meal. This leaves the stomach clean and pure, like a boiler that has been washed out. Then put into the stomach food that is in the highest degree nutritious and the least disposed to fermentation. No food answers this description better than tender beef. A little stale bread may be eaten with it. Drink nothing but pure water, and as little of that at meals as possible. Vegetables, pastry, sweets, tea, coffee and alcoholic liquor should be avoided. Put tender beef alone into a clean and pure stomach three times a day, and the system will be fortified and built up until the wasting away, which is the chief feature of consumption, ceases, and recuperation sets in."

"This reasoning impressed me. I began by taking one cup of hot water an hour before each meal, and gradually increased the dose to three cups. At first it was unpleasant to take, but now I drink it with a relish that I never experienced in drinking the choicest wine. I began to pick up immediately after the new treatment, and gained fourteen pounds within two months. I have gained ground steadily in the trying climate of New York; and I tell you, sir, I feel on a sure way to recovery."

Here an old gentleman, who had been standing near, and evidently listening to the conversation, turned to the teacher and said: "This remedy of hot-water drinking has attracted my attention for some time. It has been of immense service in relieving me of a terrible dyspepsia that tormented me for years. I tried numerous able physicians, and there is probably no medicine that is prescribed for such an ailment which has not been given to me; but none of them gave me any permanent benefit. But the simple remedy of drinking hot water, accompanied by a rational regulation of my diet, has entirely cured me, advanced though I am in life. It was not the dieting alone that did it. I had tried that before. It was the use of hot water that cured me, for that made it possible to derive benefit from a judicious diet. I have also found this treatment of great benefit in kidney diseases, which are largely owing to mal-assimilation of food."

The teacher listened very attentively to the old gentleman's remarks.

"I am glad to learn that your experience," he said, "agrees so fully with mine. I have become acquainted with various cases in which this simple method of treatment has effected permanent cures after all the efforts of the physicians had failed. I am convinced, simply from what I have seen, that almost any disturbance of the human system that results from disorders of the stomach can be alleviated, and, in most instances, cured in the same way."

HOW TO TREAT THE HANDS.—Soapsuds will not chap or injure the hands even if kept a long time in it, if on taking them from the suds they are thoroughly sponged, or dipped in lemon juice or vinegar. The acid destroys the corrosive effects of the alkali and makes the hands soft and white. Indian meal and lemon juice, used when washing the hands when roughed by cold or hard work, will heal and soften them. Vinegar will answer if lemons are not easily obtained. Rub the hands in this, then wash thoroughly, and if you have it, after drying put on a few drops of glycerine. Those who suffer from chapped hands in the winter will find this comforting, and will make sewing much easier.

A GOOD COUNTRY FOR THE DOCTORS AND UNDERTAKERS.—The following is clipped from an exchange and will prove interesting to persons who intend leaving for the Northwestern country: "The undertaking business flourishes at Portland and elsewhere throughout Oregon. What with malaria, quinine and whisky, and the debilitating effects of a long journey in steerage and emigrant car, Death's sickle reaps a large harvest, the children especially dropping off like rotten sheep. But still the Northwest is filling up, and everybody is confident about the grand time coming."

Household Hints.

BOILED COD.—For breakfast try this:—Take the skin off a nice piece of salt codfish, wash it in several waters, and lay it on the gridiron to broil. It should be broiled for about 20 minutes, and must be turned often to prevent burning. This is nice for tea also.

VARIETY JELLY.—A pretty way to vary orange jelly is, after making the jelly in the usual way, to fill the mold half full with the jelly and lay slices of orange in and cover with the rest of the jelly. Pineapple jelly is also very nice with grated pineapple put in in this way.

EVERLASTING JUMBLES.—Jumbles which will keep a month are made thus:—One pound of butter, one pound of sugar, two pounds of flour, three eggs, nine teaspoonfuls of water, three of baking powder, with salt and flavoring to suit the taste. Roll them and bake in a quick oven.

BEETS.—Get fresh ones; boil them in enough water to cover them, or nearly so; when soft, take from the stove and peel them; put them in the stew-pan with a good-sized lump of fresh butter, pepper and salt to taste, and two tablespoonfuls of water; cover tightly and let simmer till ready to dish.

CAKE QUANTITIES.—No matter what any recipe says, a half a cup of butter is a liberal allowance for one cup of sugar. That is the proper proportion to use in cake making, though sometimes one may use a cup and a half of sugar with this quantity of butter when you do not care for rich cake.

STRAWBERRY JAM.—Take a quantity of ripe, fresh strawberries, rub and press the same through a hair sieve into an earthen pan; add pulverized sugar in the proportion of three-quarters of a pound of sugar to one pound of berries. Put this into a basin and place the same over the fire. Stir constantly with a wooden spatula. Now transfer to china pots or glass tumblers and allow to become cold.

SPONGE CAKE.—The secret of success in making white sponge cake is in the thorough mixing of the ingredients. The flour should be sifted, in the first place; then sift the flour and sugar together, then the small teaspoonful of baking powder. For one loaf use 11 eggs—the whites only are required—one large cup of flour, and one and a half of sugar. If possible do not open the oven door while the cake is baking.

SPICED FRUIT.—Take ten pounds of fruit, five pounds of sugar, one ounce of allspice, one ounce of cinnamon, one ounce of cloves, half ounce of mace; tie the spices in a bag. Take enough vinegar to moisten the sugar; boil to a syrup; pour over the fruit hot. Let stand until the next day, when put in the spices and cook until done. This will answer alike for nearly all kinds of fruit, including melons, peaches, etc.

Lodge Locals.

Regulars are invited to correspond. Lodges may also send suitable notices here for "Good of the Order."

OUR CITY LODGES.

Fidelity, No. 138.

This vigorous Lodge is marching ahead in numbers. On Wednesday evening, Aug. 8th, five candidates received the M. W. degree. The work was done in an unexceptionable manner, and at the close the officers were given several compliments. At the recess the large number present held an impromptu celebration. A new feature has been adopted in this Lodge requiring the Medical Examiner, in the case of each applicant to make a chemical analysis to detect any disorder of the kidneys or kindred diseases. It is always a pleasure to visit Fidelity Lodge.

Franklin, No. 44.

There is a time in the history of all Lodges when there are seasons of inactivity. A masterly spell of this state of rest has hung over Franklin, No. 44, during most of the last year. A happy change has lately, however, taken place, as there is a movement on foot to increase their membership during this term materially. It is to the credit of a few zealous workmen of this Lodge who started this policy and which has been seconded by a large number. At their last meeting one new member was admitted by card, and we are assured that at their next meeting there would be five petitions for the degrees. This old pioneer has been one of the prominent Lodges in our Order, and from what we know of her present membership we may expect a brighter future. The officers for this term are working like Trojans to set a boom, and the word is being passed along the line for each member to assist.

Harmony, No. 9.

Old Harmony is adding to her roll membership. At their meeting on the 5th inst. five candidates received the M. W. Degree, whose average age was 32 years. The following meeting, one was received by card and one was given the J. W. Degree. Summing up their additions for this term their net increase has been eight members, and it is whispered that this is less one-third of the number that will find a Workman's home in this honored and solid Lodge before the term ends. We take this occasion to congratulate the members of this Lodge on their fortunate selection of officers for this term. Their meetings are as a rule pleasant, always well attended, and on each meeting night a number of visitors are in attendance.

Hercules, No. 53.

It is a notable fact that Hercules, No. 53, which meets in Hamilton Hall, corner Steiner and Geary, is one of the prominent features in the social life of the Western Addition. On Friday evening, July 27th, there was a very interesting meeting, and a good attendance. The J. W. degree was given to two candidates, and the work of the Master Workman, Bro. I. N. Congdon, was given in a very correct and able manner.

Presentation at Sts. John, No. 73.

This Lodge recently had one of those pleasant occurrences so frequent in our Order. After the business of the Lodge had been concluded, Brother H. S. Fletcher, P. M. W., in his kindly and fatherly manner, took occasion to recount the long continued services of H. S. Grey, acting P. M. W., and that his official conduct had been duly appreciated, in token of which, on the part of the members, he presented him with a fine solid gold P. M. W. badge, engraved on which were these words: "Presented to Bro. H. S. Grey, P. M. W., of Sts. John Lodge, No. 73, A. O. U. W., in token of his faithfulness in office, and our esteem for him as a brother, August 5, 1883." Bro. Grey took occasion in a feeling manner to express his gratitude to his brethren, saying that this souvenir would be held in remembrance, and his best efforts would continue to be for the welfare of this Lodge. After this happy event an adjournment was made for a celebration in a royal manner to the Louvre, and everybody appeared to be as well pleased as Bro. Grey. Bro. R. W. Jackson, 614 Market street, was the manufacturer of this jewel.

Reception of Silver Spray, No. 4, D of H., by Magnolia, 41.

Monday evening, the 13th instant, a unique entertainment was held by the members of the above named Lodges. As it seemed by previous arrangement each Lodge had prepared for the occasion. Magnolia, 41, had dressed her hall with an extensive array of evergreens and costly flowers, and had spread the canvas. The members of Silver pillow slip order and marched into Eastern Hall. Their leader, in a humorous manner, introduced his followers, and in turn was welcomed by the M. W. of Magnolia. The order of exercises generally was dancing, social chat, with a fine store of ice cream at the wind up. The places of meeting of these Lodges are adjoining, and the large company alternated between each hall in dancing and carrying out the programme which was for all to join in a grand social jollification.

A Calamity to Triumph, No. 180.

By the recent fire on Post street, all the Lodge property, including the records, belonging to Triumph Lodge, No. 180, was lost. The generous brethren of this Lodge, who always respond by material aid to help a brother Workman or a Lodge (as a sample, they donated $20 to the Lodge at Truckee to replace the loss of their property by a similar disaster), should receive some substantial aid from the sister Lodges. We suggest this without consultation with a single member of Triumph Lodge. It would be a gracious act on the part of our city Lodges if not of our country Lodges, who are in prosperity to make a purse for this unfortunate Lodge, which is composed of such noble and generous brothers.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

Continuing our visits among the Lodges of this county, we are glad to be able to reiterate what we said in the last issue of the WATCHMAN, in a general way, concerning our reception at the various Lodges. Monday evening, the 30th ult., found us at the Lodge room of

West End, No. 175.

Located, as its name would indicate, in that portion of Alameda known as West End. The membership of this Lodge is not large, about 40, and was not fairly represented upon the evening of our visit. Bro. Nau-man, the Master Workman of the Lodge, informed us that they hoped for better attendance as soon as they heard a favorable report from their petition to the Grand Master Workman to allow them to change their night of meeting until Tuesday. A number of the members belong to a German musical society which meets on Lodge night, and if the present regular meeting night is changed there will be apt to be an increased attendance. Past Master Workman, Harvey McGoun is one of the pillars of this Lodge, and they need more like him.

Pacific Lodge, No. 7.

Was the next one visited. As we devoted considerable space to matters of anniversary entertainment and other side issues of Pacific in our last number, it will not be necessary to enter lengthily into details. Suffice it to say that the personnel and numbers of Pacific impress the visitor most agreeably. There are over 200 members, and most of them are mercantile and professional men. On the evening of our visit the J. W. Degree was conferred on two persons, Master Workman Fielding and his corps of officers giving the work in a very accurate and pleasing manner. Pacific is deservedly ranked in the vanguard of Oakland Lodges, and her members all take a justifiable pride in that fact.

Temple, No. 11.

Monday evening, the 6th inst., found us in company with Deputy Grand Recorder J. W. Watson, en route for Temescal, one of the suburbs of Oakland. Here we attended a short session of Temple, No. 11, the Lodge adjourning early to accommodate the Degree of Honor, which wished to use the Lodge room the same evening. T. Pollard is M. W. of this Lodge, and A. C. Adney, Recorder. Temple is not a large Lodge, numbering but forty odd members, but is quite a prosperous one.

Silver Star, No. 2, D. of H.

After Temple had adjourned, the sisters of this, one of the pioneers in the gentler sex's department of our Order, took possession of the Lodge room for their installation, which was well conducted by Deputy Grand Recorder Watson. We will publish a list of the officers as soon as we receive one that was promised us. Sister Babcock continues to occupy the chair of Chief of Honor, and presides well over a prosperous Lodge. Under the head of Good of the Order, speeches were made by Bro. Watson, Dr. Pratt, of Oakland, and the WATCHMAN representative. After this, refreshments were served and a pleasant evening concluded.

High Jinks at Ashler, No. 165.

Tuesday evening, the 7th instant, found us at the rooms of this enterprising and flourishing Lodge in Alameda. Like Pacific, only in a greater degree, its ranks are recruited almost entirely from mercantile and professional men who find enough leisure to pay some especial attention to making Lodge matters interesting. A. V. Cornell is Master Workman, and A. S. Cheminant, Recorder.

As luck would have it, on the evening in question, we happened in just at the revival of the midsummer "high jinks." The present was the first thing of the kind held since May, and as about all the members had returned from their summer vacation, it was determined to renew these jolly gatherings with all the vim possible. A large attendance was on hand, and after dispatching the regular business of the Lodge in short order, the doors were thrown open to a number of invited gentlemen guests and the trouble began as follows: Piano solo, "Les Sirens Waltzes," Brother Chartrez; reading, "Clorintha Maria," Bro. T. H. Hamden; song, "Thy Sentinel Am I," P. M. W., W. D. Littleton; reading, "The Bad Boy" (Peck's latest), H. T. Green; duo for cornet and piano, "Alice, Where art Thou?" Messrs. Poindexter and Winant, encore; reading, "Difficulties of Winter Travel," Bro. Gibbons; lecture on botany, Bro. Enckhoff; burlesque school scene, Bro. Wheaton and company. The programme, though largely impromptu, was excellent and thoroughly appreciated. The encore received by Messrs. Poindexter and Winant was well merited, for their beautiful playing would have done credit to professionals. Prof. Enckhoff's lecture on botany, though short, was most interesting, showing the relations of our best large and small fruits to the order Rosaceae. It was also a good object lesson, being illustrated with colored drawings and the actual fruit. The piece de resistance, however, was the burlesque on a "school." Bro. Wheaton, as teacher, and his tribe of refractory pupils in costume, keeping the assemblage in a roar for some twenty minutes. Flashes of wit and streaks of broad humor followed each other in rapid succession. Ashler expects to have from this on something of extra interest for her members every fortnight in the musical and literary line and on the first Tuesday of each month will continue her regular "high jinks." Her membership of over 80 is fully capable of getting up entertainments on short notice, and the problem of keeping up a lively interest and large attendance in Lodge meetings seems to be here solved by making the Lodge into a sort of club, where the best of good fellowship and bonhomie prevails, and there is a total absence of restraint.

Occidental, No. 6.

Has the reputation of being one of the best Lodges in the State, and on the following Friday evening that we visited her, she fully sustained that reputation. (N. B. "She" and "her" are here used for personification. This explanation is due, because some sharp individual might by these presents accuse us of meaning a real female. Friday being an unlucky day, debars one from visiting one's girl on that evening). But to proceed: Although nothing was on hand out of the regular order that evening, yet the attendance was larger than that of any of the Alameda county Lodges that we have visited under like circumstances, which fact speaks volumes for Occidental's prosperity. The J. W. degree was conferred on one candidate, D. S. Moulton, the M. W., and the other initiating officers having their work well in hand. Will G. Hawket, the efficient Recorder, has occupied that post since the organization of the Lodge, with the exception of an interval when he "went through the chairs," coming out P. M. W. Under the head of "Good of the Order," P. M. W. Schutz, and others, made some interesting remarks in regard to the visiting committees and their relations to sick brethren. Occidental has a membership of 204, has $2,000 in the bank, pays generous sick benefits, and has donated some $95 to other charitable purposes outside of her requirements during the past term.

This completes our round of visits to all of the A. O. U. W. Lodges in Oakland proper or in the immediate vicinity thereof, with the exception of

Keystone, No. 64.

Which we aim, however, to visit before our next issue, when we will be able to give this worthy Lodge a more extended notice. In lieu of this it may be in order at present to give a few facts concerning Keystone learned in conversation with one of her prominent members. There are 126 members in good standing. While paying no sick benefits as such, yet Keystone never lets her sick go uncared for or unrelieved, but draws freely on her treasury when necessary for their relief. She is among the first that inaugurated the system of public installations in Oakland, and at her last one, while providing a good programme for entertainment, prepared a more substantial one for the inner man in the shape of coffee, cake and ice cream.

MENDOCINO COUNTY.

From the Mendocino Democrat of a recent date we take the following account of the Workmen's work in that county: "Last week we gave a brief account of the installation of the officers of the Westport and Mendocino Lodges of Ancient Workmen, and of the favorable impression made by Grand Master J. T. Rogers by his public lectures at those two points. At

Navarro, No. 200.

The following officers were installed by the Grand Master: T. B. Severance, M. W.; James Stewart, F.; Robt. Keller, O.; Jno. Eckrath, Recorder, J. L. Lunt, Receiver; Charles A. Linscott, Financier; Albert Mead, G.; Chas. Johnson, I. W.; Dan. Doyle, O. W. Geo. A. Cameron is the new Trustee, and Dr. W. A. McCornack the Examining Physician. The lecture delivered by J. T. Rogers, the Grand Master, was his best effort on the coast, and it was full of sound arguments, convincing proofs, and eloquently delivered and well-rounded sentences. The members of Navarro Lodge are a noble set of men, enthusiastically engaged in the good work of helping themselves and their fellow-associates and brethren throughout the State.

Gualala, No. 221.

Held a surprise in store, for the Grand Master was not only required to deliver a public lecture, which was well received, but he afterwards had to repair to the Lodge-room, where he was called upon to initiate a class of seven applicants. Gualala Lodge, is quite young yet, but its members are imbued with the right spirit, and are determined to do all the good they can. The applications of seven or eight others were being considered by the Order, which goes to prove that the members thereof have not been idle since the Lodge was organized. Between the conferring of the first and second degrees the members of the Order were invited out to the ante-room to partake of the good things that had been bountifully prepared by the ladies of Gualala beforehand, and to which ample justice was done by each and everyone there. Afterwards there were several short speeches delivered, both of a serious and serio-comic vein, which added to the pleasures of the occasion. We are satisfied that the visit of the Grand Master to the Lodges on the coast has already resulted in great good to the Order at the head of which he stands in this State. The Lodges were inspired with new life, the public was made acquainted with the objects of the Order, and with its prompt manner of settling up all death claims against it.

A High Priced Doctor Checked.

Under the head of "An Unpaid Bill" the Chronicle of recent date published the fact that Dr. George H. Reich had brought suit for $280 against Public Administrator Roach, in the matter of the estate of William Rose, a member of the A. O. U. W. Mr. Roach rightly felt, that even leaving aside the pecuniary condition of the deceased and the smallness of the estate, he was justified in placing a lower estimate on the value of Dr. Reich's services than the doctor himself placed upon them. When spoken to concerning the matter, Mr. Roach said: "It is my duty to protect the interests committed to my care, and this is the first instance during my term of office in which I have felt called upon to reject a physician's bill. The decedent was a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and the only asset was a certificate of membership entitling his estate to $2,000 on his death. The deceased was kept in good standing for years by a friend paying his dues and assessments. What may be the claims against the estate I do not as yet know. The consulting physician, who is eminent for his ability in his profession and for his kindness of heart, was willing to reduce his bill $150, on the representation of the smallness of the estate." Dr. Reich's bill was as follows:

SPECIFIED VISITS.
April 21st—To continuous attendance day and night.	$40
April 22d—To continuous attendance day and night.	40
April 23d—To six visits day and three night visits.	35
April 24th—To six visits day and three night visits.	35
April 25th—To six visits day and two night visits.	30
April 26th—To six visits day and three night visits.	38
April 27th—To six visits day and three night visits.	35
April 28th—To two visits day.	10
April 29th—To post-mortem examination.	20
Total	$280

It is well that in such a case we have a Public Administrator who knows his duty and is willing to do it. The above will be a new phase of said officer's duties to many in relation to our Order.

The Triennial Conclave.

Who are the Knights Templar?

The origin of Masonry is shrouded in the haze and twilight of antiquity. Whether it originated in the mysteries of Isis and Osiris in Egypt, or of Eleusis in Greece or had some relation with the sun and star mythology of Persia, as many think, or originated at the building of King Solomon's Temple, as our best Masonic archaeologists believe, is a matter really of very little consequence. All admit that it is the most ancient fraternal Order in the world, the trunk-principle, the mighty tree; under whose boughs all other secret Orders have sprouted, and drawn their vitality and inspiration. The early Masons were a peaceful class, fond of science and occult studies. Possessing considerable knowledge of the laws of proportion, harmony, symmetry and beauty, and bound together by mystic words and signs, they went forth from some central school or Lodge, to build the palaces of Kings and the fanes of religion. Their symbols have been found under the obelisks at Alexandria, on the ruins of Karnac, and their cabalistic marks may still be seen on the magnificent cathedrals, the spacious arches, and pilasters of mediæval Europe!

But no dark cloud of myth or tradition hangs around the origin of the Order of Knights Templar. We know its date, and the path it has come. It was the child of war, born sword in hand, and cradled on a shield. Its history begins with the crusades, those tornadoes of religious and military enthusiasm which blew at intervals across Europe for three centuries. At the breaking out of those wars, the sons of noblemen, stimulated by piety, love of glory or adventure, wild, restless spirits who loved martial sports and the bustle and excitement of camp-life, offered their services, and were taken into the pay of the great barons and chieftains. The prowess, the daring and renown of these valiant Knights, have been celebrated in romance, art, poetry and song. Among the numerous Orders that sprung from this form of Knighthood, the Hospitalers and Templars are the best known, and most distinguished. The Hospitalers, or Brothers of St. John of Jerusalem, or Knights of Malta, as they were subsequently called, were instituted in 1040 for the purpose of nursing the sick and wounded crusaders, and consoling the dying. It was the first Sanitary Commission that ever followed the burnt path of war. After being driven out of the Holy Land, they first occupied the island of Rhodes, and then Malta, whence they were expelled by Napoleon Bonaparte, in 1798.

The Order of Templars was founded in 1118. Nine French gentlemen, pious and valiant Knights, bound themselves under solemn vows of charity, poverty, and obedience, and to employ their swords in defense of poor pilgrims on their way to the Holy Sepulcher! Their rigid austerity, their valor, and enthusiasm soon attracted the attention of their King, Baldwin II., who gave them an apartment in his palace, near the supposed site of King Solomon's Temple. Hence they became known as Knights of the Temple or Templars. The rules of the Order were prepared by the Council of Troyes, and ratified by the Pope. They were commanded to wear white mantles in order to distinguish them from the Hospitalers. The Red Cross was also prescribed by this Council as a badge of distinction, and was worn over the heart. For many years the Templars lived in great poverty, fed and clothed by charity, and giving all they could spare to the poor pilgrims who had been spoiled by the enemy. So poor were they that two often rode the same horse, and a rough, cheap dagger was all they could offer as a ransom for a captured brother. They were very pious, in accordance with the gloomy asceticism of the day, that believed the Devil was in everything bright, beautiful, and enjoyable, and could only be driven out of human nature by a watery diet, horrid smells, and a bad air. The motto upon their banners, "Not unto us, Oh Lord, not unto us, but to Thy name give the glory," was no empty declaration of self-abnegation. They ate in silence. It was unbecoming a good Knight to indulge in boasting or frivolous conversation. The Evil One was concealed in a laugh or joke, and to kiss even a mother or sister was considered as dangerous to the purity of the heart and desires, as the touch of frost on flowers.

But this rigid, monkish austerity did not last long. The Count Anjou made a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and became so deeply impressed with the piety and valor of the Order that he joined it; and his example was soon followed by other pious and chivalrous princes. The Order rapidly became the most popular and powerful in Europe. The spoliation of the heathen, and the donation of kings and noblemen made it extremely rich; and the vow of poverty was forgotten. The Templar never lost his courage, but the stout arm which had flashed the sword where the battle raged the fiercest against the Saracen, in luxury and ease, had lost its cunning; and when the Great Saladin mustered his hosts to recover Jerusalem, he won an easy victory at the battle of Hittin. When the Crusaders were finally driven out of Palestine, the Templars were the last to yield. They threw themselves into the strong fortress of St. Jean d'Acre, and there fought their last battle for the possession of the Holy Sepulcher, only eight or ten escaping the terrible carnage. The shattered remains of the Order fled to Cyprus, and elected Jacques De Molay, Grand Master, and for a season prosperity smiled upon them, and they again became rich and powerful. But their wealth became an object of envy to Philip IV., King of France, and he persuaded Pope Clement V., a servile minion he had elevated to the Papal See, to suppress them. They were accused of the abominable heresy of Ophidic, Gnostic, and even Mohammedan practices; especially the worship of the Baphomet, a human figure carved out of stone, with two heads, male and female, and entwined with serpents and astrological devices. De Molay was enticed to Paris, and treacherously seized and burned alive. A large number of his followers suffered the same fate. Fifty-four Templars were burned in Paris the same day. With the death of Molay, it was supposed the Order had perished, but he, in anticipation of danger, had appointed John Mark Samienus his successor; and the chain of succession of Grand Masters from him, has never been broken.

The Encampment of Baldwin, established at Bristol, by Richard I., on his return from the Holy Land, preserved the ancient costumes and ceremonies; and this, in connection with one at York, and another at Bath, constitute the original Encampments, from which all the British and American Commanderies now in existence have derived their authority.

The Templars, broken up as a military Order, no longer permitted to poise the lance or join the tourney, or hold public meetings, met in secret places, in caves and glens, and the somber depths of the forest, and agreed to make war upon vice in all its ugly shapes, using their ancient weapons of bloody strife, as the symbols and emblems of a spiritual warfare. The Knight, wearing the cross, wielding his sword in defense of innocent maidens, destitute widows, helpless orphans, and the Christian religion, may come into sweet fellowship with the spirit of the Crucified One, which has been aptly called an "enthusiasm for humanity." As long as the soul lives in the body, it carries about a burning taper that may easily be blown out. The heart should ever be clad in penitential garb, for what is life but a pilgrimage, and are we not all looking anxiously forward to that asylum, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. And that must be a very cold, apathetic nature that can stand around the Knightly triangle and join in the ascension hymn, and not feel that life is more than a thought or memory, more than a blossom on the stem of organization; that the soul has powers which sweep beyond the world of time and sense, and carries within it the earnest of a grander destiny.

We have received a private letter from G. A. Krenkel, Master Workman of St. James Lodge, No. 9, Winnemucca, Nevada. We hope to hear more fully from Bro. Krenkel and other brothers in the Silver State in regard to the progress of their Lodges and the State of the Order there, etc. We desire correspondence of fraternal interest from all points.

THAT which forms the inside of our paper, before it is cut and sewed, and which also contains our Lodge Directory, is printed nearly a week before the outside or last form. This will account for the fact that it is not always possible to make changes in the Directory immediately, even when notification is received before the time for the paper to go to press. Corrections are, however, always made before the succeeding issue.

We hear that one of the Berkeley Lodges held a minstrel entertainment to celebrate its anniversary. We await particulars.

Northern Scenery.

As if vieing with the territorial extent and material resources of the Pacific coast, the scenery of the country is equally varied, always charming and often sublime. Whether by the placid waters of some crystal lake, gazing into its mirrored depths, or roaming along the verdant banks of some majestic river of the north; whether reposing in some shady grove and listening to the silvery music of some babbling brook, or following the devious course of some meandering creek or rivulet, on its way home to mother ocean; whether wandering over hill and dale, or contemplating the bright carpet of emerald sward, decked with vari-colored flowers, covering the broad savannas of the interior; whether in beholding the awe-inspiring spectacle of immense thundering torrents madly leaping down from giddy precipitous heights and lashed into fury as they fall and break on the rocks below; whether wrapt in ecstatic admiration as from some convenient eminence his eye feasts on the whole grand panorama, crowned by the cloud piercing peaks of the distant mountains, nowhere else will the tourist find scenery more charming or on a scale of greater magnificence. In a word, it is Switzerland and Italy combined.

Our engraving represents one of the many charming and extensive prospects that may be enjoyed by one who visits the northern region of the Pacific coast, and shows Mt. Baker as seen from the Gulf of Georgia. A contemporary contains the following pen picture of the scene: "The situation is very beautiful, as the whole neighborhood is a gently sloping, grassy park, inclining to the placid sea. In summer this spot is clothed with exquisitely colored flowers of every hue, shaded by a grove of oak, on which hang long pendant fringes of the gray lichen.

"Let the stranger lay down where he will, he must, regretfully, and with sorrow, crush the beautiful, the delicate and exquisite gems of Flora; but ere he does so, let him choose a spot where, from beneath the gracefully hanging branches of the oaks, he may catch a vista of the scenery outside, for there, before him, the shimmering waters of the straits of Fuca lie smiling in the full blaze of the midday sun, when all the world beyond is shut out by a soft ethereal cloud, or, it may be the mystic vapor in mirage, is playing a charade by picturing scenes of spirit land as I oft have seen it do on Arab's barren sands. Presently, however, the veil dissolves before the retiring sun, and the unnumbered isles appear in their varied hues from aerial silvery gray to dark and somber blue. Thence rising from the sea and breasting the sky for half the length of view, is the high Olympian range, in massive softness, reared and smoothly clad in purple, giving rest to the wondering eye. Then upward, in admiration, the gaze is carried to the countless snow-clad peaks, which boldly probe the sky. This glorious range is only lost to view, or seems to cease, in distant Rainier's needle pointed peaks; then, northward, the waters of the sound make the break, when, up springs, as if from a mighty plain, the hoary Mount of Baker, rearing its cold and stately head, turbaned with a cloud, and its white fingers, far up in heaven, pointing everlastingly to unknown realms, and silently kissing golden and vermilion adieux to the setting sun."

The Mesquite and Its Fruit.

The mesquite tree finds its habitat in the deserts of Southeastern California and in Arizona, and countries to the east and south. It is a low tree, from fifteen to forty feet in height, with a straight, clear trunk, ten to twenty inches through, and a bushy top. The wood, which is hard and heavy, makes good fuel, but is not fit for lumber. It bears a leaf and pod something like the locust, to which species it belongs. These pods are large and crooked in shape and contain a bean, which, when dried and pounded up, is both nutritious and palatable. These trees are said to be the present year loaded with fruit to the delectation of the Indians, who gather these beans, and after roasting or sun drying, grind them between stones into a coarse flour, which, on being baked, makes a tolerable good bread. In many places they form their staple of subsistence. The burro likes this bean and thrives upon it.

POWER OF THE WAVES.—The tremendous power of the sea waves has been illustrated at Wick, on the extreme northeast coast of Scotland, where a breakwater was being built. It may give an idea of what wave power really can do. It was found that stones of ten tons weight were as pebbles to the waves, which have been measured to be fifty-two feet from the crest to the bottom of the trough. The outer end of the breakwater, where the storm beats most violently, was built of three courses of 100-ton stones, laid on the rubble foundation; next above these were three courses of large flat stones, and upon these a mass of concrete, built on the spot, of cement and rubble. The end of the breakwater was thought to be as immovable as the natural rock, yet the resident engineer saw it yield to the force of the waves, and swing around into the troubled waters inside the pier. It gave way, not in fragments, but in one mass, as if it were a monolith. The displaced mass is estimated to weigh about 1,850 tons.

Alligator Leather.

The hide of the alligator, which was first tanned as a curiosity, has now become quite an important article of merchandise, and is worked up into a multitude of articles of everyday use. The New York Sun furnishes the following:

A large variety of pocket-books, card-cases, hand-bags, and other articles made of a peculiar mottled leather, was seen in a Chambers street show-case. A long, narrow piece of the same leather hung over them. It was rounded at one end and tapered away at the other. Two flippers projected from each side of it.

"The use of the alligator skin seems to be increasing," the reporter said to the proprietor of the show-case.

"The increase is astonishing," he replied. "Twelve or fifteen years ago alligator leather was tanned as a curiosity. Few articles were made of it. About four years ago, however, the manufacture of alligator leather began in earnest. First a few shoes were made of it, and the manufacturers of such goods saw there was something in it. It is a peculiarly beautiful leather. There are no two skins marked just alike, and it follows that no two articles made of the leather can be alike. The natural color of the leather is attractive, aside from the beauty of the markings. It finishes soft and flexible. It is conceded the Americans tan and finish it in a manner superior to the best workmanship in the old country. Here is a pocket-book. American alligator skin forms the outside; American calfskin the lining. Any judge of such goods will say that it is by all odds the handsomest as well as the best leather of the kind in ex-scales. There are other imperfections in the skins. The demand for colored goods helps us out, however, as the coloring matter covers a multitude of imperfections. When you want an alligator leather article of any kind choose the uncolored goods, pay a fair price, and you will get the cheapest as well as the handsomest and best."

Concerning Sanitary Science.

The New York Star, in an able editorial, makes some assertions which must be startling to members of the profession who have been taking a Rip-Van-Winkle sleep during the last generation or two. We quote a few paragraphs: "One of the marked changes of our time is the altered position of the physician in the community. The traditional duty of the doctor is to cure disease, and disease was supposed to be a sort of malignant entity which had got into the system and could be expelled only by the most energetic and heroic remedies. Physicians were said to belong to the medical profession, as the chief business of the doctor was to prescribe medicines, which were mostly drugs. And Voltaire wittily summarized the work of the physician as an attempt to work a miracle by reconciling intemperance and health. A half century has altered the whole scope of medical study. Sanitary science profoundly affects medical theories. And the upshot of it all is that the old faith in drugs and medicines of all kinds is fast dissolving. People are everywhere learning that sunlight, pure air, good food, a proper dress, regular habits, plenty of sleep—in short, that right living is a million

The Wonders of New Mexico.

There is a remarkable salt lake situated 150 miles west of Albuquerque, in New Mexico, and about fifty miles from the Arizona line. The lake is located on the top of a volcano mountain, and evidently occupies an extinct crater. It is perhaps three-quarters of a mile in diameter, and is so strongly impregnated with salt that a thick crust of pure white salt, of a spongy consistency, like floating ice, encrusts the margin. It is so plentiful that it is carried away by the wagon load. It has been long used by the Indians. The salt is white, of the purest quality and destitute of sand or any foreign ingredient. The texture is porous, like congealed white foam.

The most curious feature of this lake is a tall column, or monument-shaped formation, which rose up near the center to the height of 100 feet, and which appeared to be composed of white lava thrown up by some convulsion during some ancient period. The outside of this singular column is sloped from the base towards the top, and was rough enough to enable it to be ascended. On reaching the top of the cone, the interior we found to be hollow like a tube, and at the bottom there was seen a circular pond of water with bright emerald green color in appearance, probably to be attributed to the sparse rays of which penetrated the huge tube, and were reflected from the smooth, mirror-like surface of the water. On the projecting sides of the interior of this bowl were found no incrustations of salt on the surface like that on the outside, but on thrusting the hand into the water and withdrawing it the hand came out perfectly white from particles of salt that adhered to it. It was evidently a very strong brine.

There is also a desolate, arid plain, composed of lava, 100 miles in width, situated beyond the Organ mountains, so called because the basaltic columns rising up, as seen at a distance, resemble the pipes of an organ. The great plain beyond is about eighty miles west of Las Cruces. It is entirely destitute of water, which has to be conveyed by those crossing this inhospitable waste. But the remarkable thing about this desert is an immense stratum of gypsum or selmite of a pure white color, and when seen from a distance resembles a huge snow drift. The gypsum bed is several miles in extent, and is in sufficient abundance to furnish a supply for all purposes for which it is used to the habitable globe. There are other remarkable physical appearances in the region mentioned scarcely known to the outside world. It is a scene of wonders.—Times.

The Moss Gatherers and Their Work.

A very interesting and rather aesthetic industry is growing up in Santa Barbara which promises in time to give profitable employment to a number of women and children possessing the requisites of good taste and nimble fingers. The gathering, assorting, and curing of the numerous varieties of the delicate sea moss, and its proper display for exhibition, is steadily growing into a business, which, while it is not altogether lucrative—when the time consumed in it is taken into consideration, is nevertheless profitable to those who understand the art. The varieties of sea moss obtainable upon the sea shore of Santa Barbara are very numerous. These weeds, for that is their common name, are daily gathered by women and children who after each successive high tide pass along the sea shore and with sharp eyes and nimble fingers, pick out from the tangled mass cast ashore by the surf those delicate sprays which are most desired for the purpose in view. These sea side gleaners, after securing the requisite assortment of ocean foliage of the most beautiful hues and fragile form, carry it to their home where by an art known to themselves and a skill which few possess, first assort it, then properly display and press each delicate spray, after which it is arranged in tasteful forms and displayed for sale.

One of the dealers in these beautiful sea-side treasures, stated to a reporter this morning, that the principal manufacturer of sea moss ornaments in Santa Barbara, a lady of rare taste and experience, finds a ready market for all the sea moss pictures and cards she can supply. They are inexpensive and exceedingly beautiful, surpassing in their designs anything of the kind obtainable on the Northern Pacific or the Atlantic coast. The favorite designs at present are baskets arranged upon card board, crosses and anchors formed of coarse sea weed or kelp, around which many varieties of delicate sea mosses are displayed. During the forthcoming Knights Templar Triennial Conclave, the Maltese Cross and other Masonic emblems will be most fashionable, and many mementoes of Santa Barbara will find their way to far distant states in this form. It is not every one who may successfully work these sea shore trifles into works of art, for it requires fine taste as well as skill to convert the fragile moss into things of everlasting beauty. The labor is said to be tedious and as each minute leaf upon each spray must be straightened out upon cards by the aid of a needle point it requires a large store of patience. It is certainly a fine art and one which may be made profitable to many families in Santa Barbara. The demand for well arranged sea moss pictures is practically unlimited and it will increase, as each specimen sent from this place reaches the large centers of population.—Santa Bar'a Press.

MOUNT BAKER, W. T. SEEN FROM THE GULF OF GEORGIA.

istence. Sixty dollars per dozen for such goods, small as they are, is a low price.

"While the beauty of alligator leather is its chief characteristic, its durability is of hardly less importance. These grip-sacks of alligator leather will outwear their owners, no matter how youthful. With these two things in its favor, it is no wonder that the sale of alligator leather is increasing."

"How many alligators were slaughtered to satisfy the demand last year?"

"Not less than half a million."

"How do you get the skins, and where do they come from?"

"Most of them come from Florida and the other Gulf States. The alligators are shot with rifles, and the negroes have almost a monopoly of the business. When an alligator crawls out on the sand for his after-dinner sleep he falls a victim. The negro gets from fifty cents to one dollar apiece for alligators. The hunt is carried on so vigorously that the reptiles are beginning to grow scarce. Laws will have to be enacted to protect them during the breeding season and when young."

"All sizes from two to eighteen feet in length are now killed. The choice skin is six feet long. There is as much difference between the six-foot skin and the eighteen-foot skin as there is between a calf-skin and an ox-hide. The skins are packed in lime for two months to remove the horny scales. The remaining process is much like that for any leather. It takes four months to prepare a skin. There is a tannery for alligator skins in Brooklyn."

"Has any one developed an imitation of alligator leather?"

"The frauds are in using imperfect skins. No lime will soften the horns that have stood the attrition of red hot sand for half a century. Those skins do not wear well between the times better than all the medicines of the world.

"The great physicians of our times are vastly more interested in sanitary science and hygiene than in therapeutics. They are studying anew the questions pertaining to life. They are investigating the conditions of perfect physical existence. They are giving lectures and writing books on the great art of keeping well, of developing physical force, of building up a perfect body. The questions of drainage and ventilation, of the nutritive values of the different kinds of food and the proper methods of cooking, of artificial exercise when it is necessary to resort to such expedients, the heating of houses, and the quantity and fashion of clothes that should be worn—are assuming an importance hitherto unknown. Everything that relates to the art of living so as to avoid sickness and pain, and maintain the highest degree of power and enjoyment, is invested with new importance. The physician is no longer a medicine man. We send for him when ill, it is true, and value his curative services as highly as ever; but we would pay him a double fee to keep us well. He is a member of a health police, whose function it is to keep people from getting sick and hold disease at bay. And instead of killing a doctor when a patient dies, after the manner of the Emperor of China, the skill and proficiency of the physician of the future will be determined by his success in keeping his patients strong and well; and should they fall ill, he may be dismissed for a better one."

Fat is said by Dr. F. L. Oswald to be the best lung food, and among all fat-containing substances sweet cream is the best, salt pork the least nutritious. Consumptives should avoid all scorbutic articles of diet; salt meat, pickles, cheese, pungent spices, made dishes, and all intoxicating drinks.

Preserve the Landmarks.

There are some people in this world who are never content to let well enough alone. In fact, there are so many of them, that we are constantly having change just for the sake of change, it would seem, for no earthly good comes of it in the great majority of cases. Men get hobbies and crude notions, and cannot rest night or day till they see them put into tangible shape, and then in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, experience proves those hobbies and notions to be the veriest humbugs.

The A. O. U. W. has been and is one of the most conservative and successful of all fraternal societies, but yet it has many of these hobby riders and dreamers in its high places; hence we have too much legislation and too much blotting out of the old landmarks that have guided us in the path of safety, and the substitution of something else that perhaps looks more comely and fair upon its face, but lacks the one quality most essential—that of guiding aright. Of this character are some of the amendments to our beneficiary law passed at the last session of the Supreme Lodge. We believe that we hazard nothing in saying that the improvement that was intended is not an improvement at all. The old law was intrinsically better than the new, awkward as it was in its construction. True, it was a little difficult to understand, but when understood, it was possible to work it and not do violence to other laws. The present one is simply impracticable, and must be added to and judicially construed in order to be worked at all.

At the next session of the Supreme Lodge these law-tinkers will very likely want to make a still worse and more radical change in our beneficiary laws, by substituting for our present system of uniform assessments a graded system, based alone on age at admission. We have over and over again exposed the fallacy of such a system, but still its advocates persist in their foolish efforts to change a system that has worked better than any other, for one not a whit more equitable, and complicated to such a degree as to make it practically impossible for Lodges as they are generally constituted to work it correctly. And what could we hope to gain by the change? The A. O. U. W. is the oldest beneficial society of its character in existence. It does not appear that its death-rate increases more rapidly than that of its younger contemporaries. In fact, it scarcely increases at all. The average age of its membership is as low as that of the others. It gets as many young men; if that is the one great thing of all others most desirable. Its assessments are no more burdensome than are those of any other like society, and much less than in some of the graded institutions. None of them do their business more promptly, cheaply, or safely, or satisfactorily, than our Workmen, and none stand any higher in public esteem and confidence. Now you men of hobbies, and quirks, and vagaries, and crude notions, just keep hands off a little while if you please. We are doing well enough.

The Seceding Iowans not Ready for Trial.

From a circular received from W. R. Graham, Grand Recorder of the loyal A. O. U. W., of Iowa, dated the 26th ult., we learn the following facts of interest concerning the trial of the test case of the Lodge of the seceding organization. Grand Recorder Graham's circular says:

It has been my desire to bring the legal points to an early conclusion, and from the many statements proceeding from the seceding organization, wherein they claimed their cause just, and their past action right, and demanding (apparently) an early determination of the vexed question, and as the position assumed and action taken by them was originally based upon legal grounds, I had every reason to anticipate that such professions were honestly made, and as an early trial agreed with our wishes, requested our attorneys, Jno. N. Rogers, and Jas. T. Lane of Davenport, and H. C. Hemenway of Cedar Falls, to prepare a stipulation, wherein a jury was waived and the case to be tried this July term. The following correspondence explains itself:

Then follows correspondence between the attorneys of the old Order and H. B. Fouke, of Iowa, attorney for the seceders. The former asks the latter to waive a jury trial, which could not be had at the July term, and proceed immediately to trial. The latter replied that the defense would insist upon a jury trial.

Mr. Graham concludes his circular as follows:

Quo warranto proceedings are in their nature criminal, but in remedy civil; a jury trial can be demanded, but is not necessarily indispensable, and will, without question, ultimately be dispensed with.

On July 10th the case was called, and Messrs. Fouke, Boies and Tolerton, assisted by Mr. Nichols, presented a motion to the court wherein they ask for a more specific statement touching the incorporation of the Supreme Lodge—an immaterial point, inasmuch as the articles of incorporation were fully set out and made one of the exhibits attached to the petition. Mr. Hemenway thereupon wired Messrs. Rogers and Lane to come to Waterloo and argue the motion. Mr. Rogers came. The court—remarkable its immateriality—decided the motion, and on its order, said incorporation of the Supreme Lodge was set out. Mr. Nichols, in presenting the motion, intimated that if the prayer embodied in the motion was granted that his client would demur. That, of course, would bring up the law points and result in a decision, but the result simply was that Mr. Fouke asked for ten days further time in which to file his answer. It would appear to be a mere ruse to gain time and to advance any technicality whereby the early determination of this unhappy controversy can be prevented.

We are ready for trial—we have made every advance to gain it. The other side simply stand upon their rights as secured them by rules of practice. Their avowed faith in their cause does not square with their acts. The trial will pull aside the curtain behind which truth has been concealed; hence delay. Rest assured that no effort will be spared on my part to bring to a speedy conclusion the phases of this unpleasant controversy.

Yours in C. H. and P.,

W. R. GRAHAM.

The Great Experiment.

No fraternal society was ever more successful than has been the A. O. U. W. in California since its introduction here. Its membership is composed of picked men largely from the oldest and best of kindred society so that in personnel none can hope to be better. Many of our most eminent and earnest Workmen have believed and now believe that the Degree of Honor can be made a source of much strength and benefit socially to the Order. Its failure, heretofore, is attributed with much show of reason to the fact that not only has it not received the fostering care of the Supreme Lodge, but it has lacked any permanent bond of union. This jurisdiction has undertaken to supply this defect, at least so far as we are concerned, by attaching a beneficiary feature and forming a complete code of laws for the government of such Lodges. These laws went into force on the first day of this present month, and the Lodges have all been supplied with all the necessary books and blanks for carrying out the provisions of the new Constitution.

We do not think we can do the Order a better or more timely service at this juncture of affairs, than to give, so far as we may be able, some instructions in relation to the organizing and working of Degree of Honor Lodges. The following points should be remembered:

1st. In all matters not specially provided for, Degree of Honor Lodges are to be governed by substantially the same rules and regulations as other Lodges of the Order.

2d. The membership is divided into two classes—beneficial and non-beneficial.

3d. Non-beneficial members have the same rights and privileges as beneficial members, except participation in the beneficiary fund of the Degree.

4th. The beneficiary system is new and novel, and besides, more simple than any other ever devised. Assessments are dispensed with altogether, except to meet extreme cases, and regular monthly payments of a specified and constant amount substituted. As these payments will aggregate more funds than will probably be needed to pay the current death-losses amongst the beneficial members, provision is made to stop payments till necessary to resume.

At once, after the last Lodge meeting in each month, the entire amount of beneficiary funds in the hands of the Receiver is to be forwarded to the Grand Recorder.

There are no exempt beneficial members, and hence no funds to be kept back for such.

5th. The Finance Committee of our Grand Lodge have fixed the price of a full set of supplies to be furnished a new Lodge at institution, at twenty-five dollars. A set embraces everything a Lodge will usually need, except a seal and badges. The Grand Master will no doubt specify a small fee to compensate the deputy that institutes a Lodge.

No Lodge can be instituted with less than twenty charter members. It would be better to start with at least thirty, if possible.

Any Master Workman in good standing is eligible to become a member of a Degree of Honor Lodge. The wife, mother, sister, daughter, or female blood relative of either a Master Workman or his wife, if members of his household, and over sixteen years of age, are also eligible. There is no maximum of age fixed. Old age is no bar to membership in the Lodge.

6th. Applications to become beneficial can only be received in an organized Lodge, hence cannot be made by charter applicants for a Lodge till after the Lodge is organized.

Medical Examiners must be chosen just the same as in other Lodges, and the Lodge must pay him two dollars for each and every examination he makes. It must also pay the Grand Medical Examiner twenty-five cents. These sums should therefore be collected from each member applying to become beneficial in addition to the fees specified in the Constitution.

The cost of becoming beneficial will, therefore, be:

For Medical Examination.....$2 25
For Beneficiary Certificate.....1 00
For Beneficiary Fund.....1 00

If a male over fifty and under fifty-seven years of age, three dollars additional for each year over fifty must be paid into the Beneficiary Fund. The same rule applies to females over forty-seven and under fifty years of age.

7th. Rejection of an application to become beneficial by the Examiners does not otherwise affect the standing of the member in the Lodge.

8th. Recorder's are required to make monthly reports of all important matters transpiring in the Lodge in accordance with blank forms furnished by the Grand Lodge.

9th. All remittances must be accompanied with the formal Remittance Report. These are the Grand Recorder's vouchers by which the correctness of his accounts are determined by the Finance Committee. No receipt for money can be given in the absence of the Remittance Report.

Ventilate Your Lodge Rooms.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes is credited with this remark about the benefits of equestrian exercise in the pure air: "The outside of a horse is good for the inside of a man." There are several other things that most of us could name that are good for the inside of a man, but not one of them would be re-breathed air. All persons of sense are supposed to understand this well enough in theory, and yet it is amazing to see how many of them totally disregard it in practice. These thoughts are called forth by our experience in many Lodge rooms that we visit, where that cheapest and best of all luxuries, pure air, is as rigorously excluded as though it were malarial poison.

Men who would feel insulted if you should offer to lend them your tooth-brush or tooth-pick for their personal use, or should present them the fag end of one of your half smoked cigars, will do much worse than even to accept such an offer—i. e., complacently sit during an entire evening and breathe with impunity, yes, even with a drowsy satisfaction a mixture that once was air, but now by exploring and re-exploring all the depths and crannies of every pair of lungs in the room, has become so heavily charged with carbonic acid gas, as to even make the lower lights flicker and grow dim.

There may be some satisfaction in the thought that as these lungs have all been examined some time or other by a physician, it may not be quite as bad as where the exhalations come from diseased lungs of a ward of hospital patients. But such air is poisonous and stupefying nevertheless, and many who sometimes wonder at the dullness of Lodge meetings may be able to trace the cause to the dereliction of the janitor.

We disapprove of coolness and formality, and we like sociability, but deliver us from that degree of it, where we are forced to become so affectionate as to take into our systems that which has already been through dozens of others and has been getting worse with each successive step. Nay, it would hardly be surprising to find out that even to start with, this mixture, which is chiefly remarkable for its lack of oxygen, is the remains of the last Lodge meeting, and has carefully been saved up for the occasion. If we would have interesting and healthful Lodge meetings let us beware how we disregard the first principles of sanitary science.

QUITE a number of Lodges have failed to report to us their elections of officers. Brethren, you cannot expect us to have your cards in the Lodge Directory correct unless you furnish us the wherewithal to correct them, in the shape of names of newly elected officers. Recorders, please take notice.

Grand Recorder's Department.

HEADQUARTERS of Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., Rooms 40 and 41, St. Ann's Building, corner of Eddy and Powell, San Francisco. H. G. PRATT.

REMITTANCES for the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN can be forwarded to the Grand Recorder. Always enclose statement, separate from the Grand Recorder's, of the amount sent for different purposes. Don't forget this.

THE total number of beneficiary certificates issued in this Jurisdiction is a little over 19,000. The number now valid is 15,500. We have lost by death 435, and the balance from suspensions, withdrawals from the Order, transfers to other Jurisdictions, and expulsions. Our experience, therefore, shows a proportion of losses from other causes to those by death of one to six, very nearly.

THERE will probably be but one assessment for September, and one for October—certainly not more at our present death rate. Last year we had assessments 12 and 13 in August, and 14 and 15 in September. The probabilities now are that we shall close the year with not more than seventeen assessments, against nineteen last year.

SUCH supplies as our Lodges of the Degree of Honor are presumed to need in addition to such as they already have, were sent out to the Lodges some days since, and it is hoped and expected now that these Lodges will henceforth make a very creditable record. Not only their own reputation but the reputation of this Jurisdiction is at stake. Let it never be said that the Jurisdiction of California has inaugurated even a partial failure. We should be satisfied with nothing short of a grand success.

UNDER the beneficiary laws as amended by the Supreme Lodge at the last session, suspension for non-payment of assessments cannot take place previous to the 28th day of the month in which the assessment is issued.

Supreme Master Workman Fish's Reception.

On Tuesday evening, the 14th inst., the much talked of reception to Supreme Master Workman Fish took place in the Independent Church, Oakland, and was very largely attended, and passed off most successfully. As this interesting event occurred, unfortunately for us, just as we were about to go to press, a full report will have to be delayed until next issue. He has served one term in the State Senate of Mass., and one

Recorder of the Grand Encampment of the United States in 1871, and has held the office ever since. He came to this coast and made a survey of the situation when there was a little doubt in the minds of some of the Eastern fraters as to the ability of San Francisco to accommodate the Triennial Conclave, and his warm and term as a Representative in Congress. His is one of those beautiful large-hearted natures that is ever open like a harbor to the sea, to the call of suffering and distress. His is a fine exemplification of the spirit which moved the Ancient Knights to go forth and do battle for the innocent and oppressed. His keen sense of honor and affable bearing have won for him hosts of admirers and steadfast friends. Representative men of this stamp do honor to the Order that honors them.

enthusiastic report has contributed largely to the success of the Conclave. He is a Knight Templar in heart, life and deed, as well as profession, and as a citizen, his influence is felt in religious and educational interests of the State. His home is Iowa City, State of Iowa. His presence at the pending Triennial Conclave will be hailed with delight by all the fraters of California, who all greatly esteem him, and many of whom hope soon to make a closer personal acquaintance with him.

A Good Idea.

While conversing with one of the wide-awake District Deputies of this city recently, he suggested the idea of creating a boom in A. O. U. W. matters, by getting up a mammoth meeting of the Order as soon as practicable after Conclave week, and while the public mind would be still alive to matters fraternal, resulting from the great event so close upon us. The idea is a good one and will bear elaboration. While the growth of our Order is steady, and we are not suffering for a boom in fraternity matters, yet a large increase of membership of the right character, would be desirable. Every organism is benefited by the infusion or creation of fresh, new, warm blood. The same is figuratively true of every organization depending for its existence upon the life and active interest of its members. Those who are accustomed to feel the public pulse assure us that this is one of the tides "which, if taken at the flood, will lead on to fortune."

In the multiplicity of fraternal beneficiary societies which have of late years sprung up, patterning to a greater or less extent after this, the parent organization, there is danger that unless something is done to preserve our identity and individuality the great features of our Order will be lost sight of by the undiscerning many, who take no especial interest in such organizations. And yet it is chiefly from this class when once interested, that we get our best recruits. Men who have heretofore belonged to no similar organization, and are induced to join ours, are apt to have all their interest or devotion centered in the one Order with which they ally themselves.

Our idea of the working of this plan would be substantially as follows: Let the Lodges of this city combine through the proper committees, and secure one of the largest and best auditoriums to be had—the Grand Opera House, for instance—and on some stated evening, hold a grand meeting to which the general public would be invited. For the entertainment let there be provided a literary and musical banquet which in itself would commend the Order. To do this it would not be necessary to step outside of our own ranks. We have orators, musicians and elocutionists, the peers of any in the State. The presence of the grand and past grand officers would lend prestige to the occasion. Words of instruction, advice and eloquence from their lips would add dignity and official force, and the general aims, objects and successes of the Order could thus be brought afresh to the minds of the public, not only to those present, but to those who would be reached by the newspaper reports which would follow. The waves of influence which would follow this stirring of the waters, would be apt to radiate all over the State, even as already promises to be the case in a perhaps a lesser degree from the more limited reception soon to be given to Supreme Master Workman Fish, by the Oakland Lodges. The cost of such a meeting properly divided would rest lightly upon the shoulders of the various city Lodges, and would be a mere bagatelle compared with the substantial benefits in the shared increase of membership, etc., which would accrue to every Lodge participating. We hope the matter will not rest with a mere idea, but may take practical shape while the times are yet ripe for it.

OUR FRATERNAL PAPERS are appreciated. All that is necessary to prove that fact is to point to the numerous cheering words written to us by subscribers, or to call attention to the many complimentary notices received in print, of which the following from the fraternal department of the Call, concerning recent issues, is a sample: "The current number of the FRATERNAL RECORD contains portraits and sketches of C. O. Burton and Isaac L. Lang, Grand Councilor and Grand Secretary of the Independent Order of Chosen Friends, and the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN has a picture and biography of Grand Foreman McClure of the A. O. U. W. The enterprise and liberality of the publishers of these fraternal journals, together with the character of the papers they issue, accounts for the success which has attended their efforts."

Electric Light for the Southern Exposition Building.

The machinery Committee of the Southern Exposition, on July 3d, signed the contract with the Edison Company for isolated lighting, of New York. The contract is the largest that was ever made for lighting a building with electric lights. The company agrees to light the building and the annexes with 4,600 Edison lights of 16 candle power each. In other words, the plant that will be used will furnish more light than any other plant ever did. It will even be larger than the combined plants used at the great electric light exhibition at London last year. Some idea of the undertaking may be gained when it is announced that the wire to be used would reach 40 miles in length if stretched out in a straight line. The wire is all of copper, and much of it is very thick. Its weight will be 40,000 pounds. The number of dynamo machines will be 15, worth about $4,000 each. To run them will require four of the Armstrong & Sims engines used by the Edison Company, and one very large Reynolds Corliss engine, furnished by the Exposition. The cost of the entire plant will be about $100,000, and it will require about 100 men, working constantly for a month, to string the wires and put all the electrical machinery in order. The plant will be sufficient to supply a village with 20,000 lamps and will be equivalent to a gas plant manufacturing 35,000 cubic feet of gas an hour. These figures give some idea of the enormous supply of light that will be required and furnished; but no one can really comprehend how much light will be necessary until the great building is entered and inspected; then it may be understood what the necessities are. Edison himself will superintend the work. The advantage of the incandescent electric lights in such a building as the Exposition building can not be overestimated. It generates no heat, nor does it absorb any of the oxygen of the air. Were the building lighted by gas the consumption of oxygen would probably equal the amount that a crowd of 75,000 people would use up. The display of electric lights will certainly be beautiful, and those who see it will have the satisfaction of knowing that they have seen the largest display ever made. The Electric Light Company will make special exhibits of electric motors and of sub-marine lamps, which are very wonderful and interesting. An Edison light of 16 candle power has been sunk 100 feet in the sea and could still be seen from the deck of a ship. Other incandescent light companies will make exhibits of their lights here.

The "Bared Right Arm."

The "bared right arm" is the significant name which has been given to the peninsula, known on the maps as Cape Cod, which gives such a peculiar contour to the eastern coast of Massachusetts. The map shows it, in strange aspect and outline, as a peninsula of sand, thrust out from the mainland nearly fifty miles to the eastward, then heading abruptly northward for forty miles. This curious formation makes what Thorsen called the State's "bared right arm," thrust out seaward, as for protection against the booming Atlantic, and the northward-turning part representing the forearm, from the elbow to the hand, with the carved-over end standing for the doubled-up fist. In the hollow of that fist is the harbor of Provincetown, where the Pilgrims first landed before they went to Plymouth; in the greater hollow of the enclosed sea (it is thirty miles across) is Cape Cod bay; off at the west is the inland sea of Buzzard's bay. Away back in the early Puritan days, there was agitated a project to cut a canal, for commercial purposes, through this narrow, sandy isthmus. The question has again been seriously agitated for several years past; one or two efforts have been made to secure the necessary capital, but, hitherto, every attempt has failed, and the inhabitants along the line of the proposed canal, dryly remark that the route is strewn with empty champagne bottles, left by the various parties of engineers who have viewed the same. But the Massachusetts Legislature has just passed a bill, after bitter opposition from the railroad companies, incorporating a company who will now proceed to transform the "arm of Massachusetts" into an island.

The old Colony Railroad, which extends to the very extremity of the cape, fought the bill intensely. Something like 50,000 vessels now pass in a year around the extremity of Cape Cod, and the number is constantly increasing. The new incorporators show an earnest of their intentions by depositing $200,000 in the State Treasury, to be forfeited unless the scheme is carried through within a limited time. The new company is backed by French capital. A canal would save eighty or ninety miles of sailing, save human life, and secure great economy in freight and insurance.

Boston is going to have a summer home for domestic animals. The building is about to be opened. Small dogs will be charged seventy-five cents a week, cats fifty cents, and birds, without regard to size, race, color or previous conditions of servitude, thirty-five cents. This human establishment is the work of Miss Ellen M. Gifford, who has given $20,000 for the purpose.

A Submarine Observatory.

If all that is stated in the following is reliable, the story of M. Jules Verne in his "Ten Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," may come nearer to being realized than has hitherto been dreamed of. A correspondent of an English technical journal writes to the effect that the forthcoming international exhibition of Nice is reserving some wonders for those who may propose to pass a portion of the winter of 1883-84 upon the borders of the Mediterranean. One of these wonders is a balloon which its inventor, M. Toselli, calls "the observatory under the sea." It is made of steel and bronze, to enable it to resist the pressure which the water produces at a depth of 120 meters. This observatory under the sea has a height of eight meters, and is divided into three compartments. The upper compartment is reserved for the commander, to enable him to direct and to watch the working of the observatory, and to give to the passengers the explanations necessary as to the depth of the descent, and what they will see in the depths of the sea. The second division, in the center of the machine, is comfortably furnished for passengers to the number of eight, who are placed so that they can see a long distance from the vessel or machine. They have under their feet a glass which enables them to examine at their ease the bottom of the sea, with its fishes, its plants and its rocks. The obscurity being almost complete at seventy meters of depth, the observatory will be provided with a powerful electric sun, which sheds light to a great distance in lighting these depths. The passengers have at their disposal a telephone, which allows them to converse with their friends who have stopped on the steamboat which transports the voyagers to such places as are known as the most curious in the neighborhood. They have also handy a telegraph machine. Beneath the passengers, the third compartment is reserved for the machine, which is said to be constructed on natural principles—that is to say, as the bladder of a fish, becoming heavier or lighter at command, so as to enable the machine to sink or rise, at the wish of the operator. If all that is stated is true respecting this wonderful "machine," we may well exclaim, What next?

CLIMBING MOUNT SHASTA. Ascending this grand old mountain is a perilous undertaking, but it has just been successfully accomplished by three of Butte county's dashing young ladies. Their names are Misses Alma and Laura Klinger and Flora Steele, and they live near Gridley. The girls are traveling through the mountains with a party of campers from that vicinity, and they are having a most jolly, rollicking time, swimming, rowing and fishing. Only one man in the party had nerve enough to accompany the girls up the steep and rugged incline. One of the girls writing to the Record says that the trip was not very arduous, the ascent being full of excitement and, in her opinion, very easy of accomplishment. The temperature at the summit is of an arctic character, and the air being so very light they did not remain long on the hill-top. The atmosphere was so hazy that the view to be obtained was not very good. The descent to the base of the mountain was full of excitement, and one that tries one's nerves. In many places there is some snow and ice, which the visitors slid over with lightning swiftness, but arrived safely at the bottom. Nearly a whole day was consumed in making the upward and downward trip.—Chico Record.

STORING GRAIN.—It is a long recognized fact that grain stored in prismatic receptacles does not have a weight upon the floor of the same corresponding to the weight of the column of grain above it. This is owing to the fact that the grain forms a fixed curve or arch-shaped layer so that a part of the weight of the mass bears against the side walls, and only the weight of that portion lying under the arch is sustained by the floor itself. Isaac Roberts gave before the British Association in Southampton an account of the series of experiments which he made with different grains in receptacles of various shapes, the floor being connected with an arrangement of scales. He found that up to a certain depth the pressure increased in proportion to the quantity of grain, but beyond this sometimes quickly reached limit, the pressure remained constant, however much the height of the column was increased.

DECAY OF STONE.—Dr. Julian, of Columbia College, comes to the following conclusions in regard to the life of stones, defining life as the period during which the stone presented a decent appearance: Coarse brownstone, best used out of the sun, from five to fifteen years; laminated fine brownstone, from twenty-five to fifty years; compact fine brownstone, from one to two centuries; Nova Scotia stone will probably last from 50 to 100 years; Ohio sandstone—the best of the sandstones—100 years; Caen stone, from thirty-five to forty years; coarse dolomite marble forty years; fine marble, sixty years; pure calcareous marble, from 50 to 100 years; granite, from 75 to 200 years, according to variety. Bluestone is as yet untried, but will prove a good building material.

The jury returned a verdict that Captain Matthew Webb came to his death while attempting to swim the whirlpool rapids of Niagara river, but the immediate cause the jury is unable to determine.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W., and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN's progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be partakers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

WATCHMAN PUBLISHING CO.,

The FRATERNAL RECORD is recognized as a standard fraternal newspaper on the Pacific coast, and one of the leading society journals of the age. It is the official organ of several leading Orders, and the recognized representative of various other prominent fraternal and beneficiary associations flourishing west of the Rocky mountains. Among the Orders represented in its columns are the following:

FREE AND ACCEPTED MASONS,
ORDER OF EASTERN STAR,
KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS,
ANCIENT ORDER UNITED WORKMEN,
INDEPENDENT ORDER ODD FELLOWS,
INDEPENDENT ORDER CHOSEN FRIENDS,
ANCIENT ORDER OF FORESTERS,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
NATIVE SONS OF THE GOLDEN WEST,
AMERICAN LEGION OF HONOR,
PATRIOTIC SONS OF AMERICA,
UNITED ANCIENT ORDER OF DRUIDS,
IMPROVED ORDER OF RED MEN,
KNIGHTS OF HONOR,
KNIGHTS OF GOLDEN RULE.

The RECORD is also one of the best home and family papers on the coast, being extensively and handsomely illustrated, and well-filled with original and carefully selected matter, conveniently arranged and carefully condensed matter pertaining to the household, health, culinary and general information. It is a welcome visitor to every member of the household.

The RECORD is issued by reliable and experienced publishers, who are liberal and enterprising in meeting the wants of their numerous patrons. Having the countenance and support of many of the best writers and most active members of the more than ordinary class of citizens, they are enabled to make their journal superior in influence and usefulness in one of the most wide-awake and progressive portions of our Union.

The publishers will endeavor to make every number a credit to the Orders represented, and a desirable representative to present to their neighbors and friends at home and abroad.

All members of the Orders represented, who are familiar with its columns, will readily see the advantage of subscribing and assisting in further enlarging the circulation and advancing the influence of the paper as rapidly as possible.

A limited number of first-class advertisements will be received at very reasonable rates for its circulation and good standing.

Free sample copies sent, on application, to all those who desire to assist in extending its circulation.

FRATERNAL RECORD PUBLISHING CO.,
252 Market St., S. F.

Work for the Advancement of the Order.

Let the family of each Workman to which comes the WATCHMAN, show to their neighbors who are not members of the Order, but who would make good and efficient Workmen, the advantages of this the oldest of beneficiary organizations, and the one which they believe to be the best, as superiority is shown in each issue of this journal. If you are pleased with our paper, make it do the best possible work for the advancement of the Order, by circulating it where it will do the most good in creating favorable opinions of the Order in the minds of those who may be induced to join it and become good members.

Look for Your Subscription Credit.

Subscribers on paying for this paper should look at the date of the printed labels on their papers, and if the same is not credited, in due time, up to the date paid to be sure to write us without delay. If an agent or clerk receiving the money should inadvertently or intentionally omit credit, it is important to the subscriber and ourselves that we be informed of it IMMEDIATELY, that we may act accordingly. Subscribers will please notify us of all errors which they may notice of any kind on our mail list. Be sure to write us if the paper comes after you wish it discontinued.

"ONE OF OUR MOST INTERESTING EXCHANGES," is the way the Southern Planter, of Richmond, Va., speaks of the RURAL PRESS.

Notices of Recent Patents.

Among the patents recently obtained through Dewey & Co.'s SCIENTIFIC PRESS American and Foreign Patent Agency, the following are worthy of special mention:

CAR COUPLING.—Frank Miller, Olema. Assignor one-fourth to N. M. Gordon and David Nye, San Rafael, Cal. No. 281,779. Dated, July 24, 1883. This is an improvement on a device of a similar character previously patented by the same inventor. It consists in a means for forcing back the guard and swinging the coupling bar to one side to uncouple the device, and is a means for adapting the coupling for use in connection with the ordinary link and pin. The object is to simplify the construction of the former coupling, as far as it relates to the means for uncoupling the device, and to adapt it to a more extended use.

CAN-FILLING MACHINE.—Mathias Jensen, Astoria, Oregon. No. 281,767. Dated July 24th, 1883. This invention relates to an improved machine for filling cans with fish preparatory to sealing the same, and it consists in a means for automatically supplying the fish and shaping it to enter the can, and a means for supplying the can and adjusting them to the filling spout or nozzle, compressing the fish into them, and finally removing them ready to be capped.

HEATING APPARATUS FOR CARS.—Isidor Shipser, assignor to Paul Steck, S. F. No. 281,801. Dated July 24, 1883. The object of this invention is to heat a train of cars by the introduction, through suitable registers in each, of air heated at and delivered from a single place in the train by simple and efficient means, whereby the danger of fire, in case of wreck, is avoided.

PLAIN TRUTHS

The blood is the foundation of life, it circulates through every part of the body, and unless it is pure and rich, good health is impossible. If disease has entered the system the only sure and quick way to drive it out is to purify and enrich the blood.

These simple facts are well known, and the highest medical authorities agree that nothing but iron will restore the blood to its natural condition; and also that all the iron preparations hitherto made blacken the teeth, cause headache, and are otherwise injurious.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS will thoroughly and quickly assimilate with the blood, purifying and strengthening it, and thus drive disease from any part of the system, and it will not blacken the teeth, cause headache or constipation, and is positively not injurious.

Saved his Child.

17 N. Lutaw St., Baltimore, Md. Feb. 12, 1880.
Gents:—Upon the recommendation of a friend I tried BROWN'S IRON BITTERS as a tonic and restorative for my daughter, whom I was thoroughly convinced was wasting away with Consumption. Having lost three daughters by the terrible disease, under the care of eminent physicians, I was loth to believe that anything could arrest the progress of the disease, but, to my great surprise, before my daughter had taken one bottle of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, she began to mend and now is quite restored to former health. A fifth daughter began to show signs of Consumption, and when the physician was consulted he quickly said "Tonics were required," and when informed that the elder sister was taking BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, responded "that is a good tonic, take it."
ADORAM PHELPS.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS effectually cures Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Weakness, and renders the greatest relief and benefit to persons suffering from such wasting diseases as Consumption, Kidney Complaints, etc.

Grand Master Rogers is in town, having come down from Ukiah, to attend the reception accorded to Supreme Master Workman Fish. He expects to visit a number of Lodges before his return.

A special session of the Grand Lodge of Nevada and adjacent territories was called for August 3d, at Gold Hill, to petition the Supreme Master Workman to set them off as a separate jurisdiction as soon as they shall have acquired the necessary 2,000 members. Fuller particulars hereafter.

The Fraternal Institute meetings continue interesting. To excite still greater interest, the District Deputies in charge are planning to give some testimonial to the officers who show the most improvement and best work for the ensuing term.

An interesting case has come up involving the question whether or not a Workman's beneficiary certificate necessarily constitutes part of his estate. The case in question is a suit brought against the Guarantee Fund Association, on the certificate of the late Fred. Hoffmeister by his creditors. The money was intended to revert to his aged mother. The conclusion is awaited with interest.

Deputy Grand Master Wilson, District Deputy Danforth, and Past Masters Sanderson, Rourke and Reading, visited Noe Valley Lodge Tuesday evening, the 7th inst., and report an interesting meeting, and the conferring of the second degree in an able manner.

A Bacheloric Suggestion.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—Our Order in this State contains perhaps 300 to 400 unmarried members. [Considerably more than that. EDS. WATCHMAN.] Now as it is the duty of every able-bodied man to get married, and thus check immorality, promote civilization and make man what he ought to be, and as some of the primary objects of our Order are to attain the same end, why couldn't we bachelors encourage both marriage and the growth of our Order by forming what might be termed a "Bachelor's Division," the object of which would be to form an association for mutual benefit? Each member of this association or "division" could be taxed one dollar on the marriage of another member. This would raise a fund of about three-hundred dollars, which to many newly married couples would be quite a help; membership, of course, to be limited to unmarried members of the A. O. U. W. and D. of H., both male and female. What think ye of it?

A BACHELOR.

[Our bachelor friend's suggestion, though not entirely new in abstract, is perhaps new in the present proposed application of it. The fund would probably realize over $1,000 for each assessment, if all the bachelors in the Order would join the proposed division. We have no doubt but that all our bachelor Workmen contemplating matrimony would join immediately. Perhaps that is the case with our correspondent, and it may be the reason why he urges so eloquently the formation of such an association—possibly contemplating large and early returns for his suggestion and investment. We should like to receive the opinions of other correspondents on this subject.—EDS. WATCHMAN.]

The Knights Templar Trophies.

The unique and beautiful trophies for the competitive drill, which have been on exhibition in the various Montgomery-street show-windows for some time past, have been the wonder and admiration of the many who have seen them. We append brief descriptions of them in the order that they appear on the Committee's circular. The successful Commanderies will decide upon their relative merits as they choose them.

No. 1 is manufactured by L. Miller, Jr., and is on exhibition at 205 Montgomery St. The body of the trophy consists of a solid mass of silver in the form of a vase, being eleven and one-half inches in height and twenty-four inches in circumference, having on either side a handle of massive silver surmounted in gold, each handle containing eighteen separate compartments of gold quartz and silver specimens, etc., in polished slabs; the handles protruding from side of vase, making a total width of thirteen inches. On the top of one of the handles is a group of battle implements, consisting of two shields, in the centre of which are Knight Templar crosses, the whole to be made of gold and silver; between the shields and crossing each other is a battle-axe and sword. On the top of the other is a helmet, lance and gauntlet, likewise to be made of gold and silver. On the obverse side of the vase is an emblem of the Coat of Arms of the State of California. On the reverse side is an emblem of the Coat of Arms of the Grand Commandery, both of which are in fine enameling. The cover of the vase is a cylindrical mineral cabinet containing granulated particles of different minerals of California mines, in all twenty-six compartments in number, and classified. On the top of this cylinder is a Knight Templar on horseback, of gold and silver, both horse and Templar in complete armor. The vase, as hereinbefore described, is resting on two horns of cornucopia, in gold and silver, the one containing the vinicultural and agricultural products of the State of California; the other containing gold quartz. On the front side of the vase, and resting on a circular plate, is a miner, of gold and silver, five and one-half inches in height, examining a quartz specimen; on the reverse side is a farmer resting on his plow. The horns, miner and farmer are standing on a circular plate eleven inches in diameter, and one and one-half inches in height, on the bevel side of which will be represented eight cabinet designs of Knight Templar crosses; and between these, slabs of gold quartz, etc. The bottom of this circular plate, and representing the foundation of the trophy, will rest on four bear's feet. The entire height of the trophy is twenty-four inches, and the weight will not be less than two hundred ounces.

No. 2 is manufactured by Geo. C. Shreve & Co., as are also Nos. 3 and 4, and are all on exhibition in the firm's show-windows 110 Montgomery street. This trophy represents a mounted Knight in armor made of bronze, silver and gold, standing on a column of California onyx. Beneath the capital and surrounding the column are four shields of gold-bearing quartz and specimens of the minerals of the State of California, and four medallions in silver and gold representing a mining scene, Yosemite, the Big Trees, and insignia of the Grand Commandery of California; around the column are twined grapevine and clusters of grapes in oxidized silver. At the base are banners and Knights Templar armor in silver and bronze, with a shield bearing the cross, and another the Coat of Arms of the State of California. The whole stands four and a half feet high.

No. 3 is a revolving globe of silver representing the earth, ten inches in diameter—California being represented on the map by solid gold, inlaid. The figure of the Knight in armor with drawn sword standing on the globe is made of silver and gold. Beneath the globe and to the right is a mimic fort made of polished gold quartz. To the left are tents of silver. The base supporting the whole is bronze and silver, with a large central medallion containing three leaders of the first crusade, and medallions on either side with Templar emblems in gold-bearing quartz and specimens of ores. To the right and left, leaning against the base, are two grizzly bears of oxidized silver. This piece stands two and a half feet high, and rests on a pedestal of maroon velvet.

No. 4 is a silver plaque eighteen inches in diameter, the center being a finely engraved view of Yosemite, with a border filled with gold-bearing quartz and specimens of ore; an outer border contains four medallions of Knights Templar emblems, and four medallions with California subjects—Sutter's Mill, Farmer, Miner, and the Big Trees. Twined about the medallions are grapes and leaves of silver in full relief. A silver bear surmounts the top of plaque. An easel five and a half feet high, to support the plaque, is made of polished California woods, the design being battle-axes, sword and Templar emblems.

No. 5 is manufactured by Randolph & Co., and is on exhibition at their rooms, 101 Montgomery street. It is a solid silver vase surmounted by a Knights Templar in armor on horseback, and bearing the grand beauseant, the standard of the Order, the whole being twenty-one and one-half inches in height. The front view presents an engraving representing tents, with a sentinel at each, and pilgrims journeying to the Holy Land. On the back there is represented a Knight on horseback in the display drill. On the sides are handles, elaborately carved and ornamented with wreaths. Around the base are engravings representing the Coat of Arms of the State of California, agriculture, art, chemistry, etc.

The Laying of the Corner Stone of the Garfield Memorial.

As may be seen by reference to the official programme published elsewhere, the Garfield Monument Association is making the arrangements for the laying of the corner-stone of the Garfield monument in the Golden Gate Park on the 24th inst. The corner-stone will be laid by Clay W. Taylor, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Masons of California. The base upon which the monument is to be erected is completed as far as practicable until the corner-stone is laid.

The box which will be placed inside the corner-stone will contain samples of all the gold, silver and nickel coins of the year 1883; copies of various journals containing accounts of the murderous assault upon the late President and the obsequies in this city on the 26th of September, 1881, and various records of the association. Inclosed in the box will be a copper plate with the following inscribed upon it: "To the memory of James Abram Garfield, who faithfully served his country on the battlefield, in Congress and as President of the United States of America—born November 19, A. D. 1831; died September 19, A. D. 1881, from wounds received at the hands of the assassin. May his illustrious career serve as an example, and his memory remain sacred in the hearts of his countrymen. This corner-stone was laid August 24, A. D. 1883, by Clay W. Taylor, Most Worshipful Grand Master, Free and Accepted Masons of the State of California, to hold records and to assist in the support of this monument, erected by the voluntary contributions of the people of the Pacific Coast of the United States of America; Frank Happersberger, a native of California, designer and artist; Griffith Griffiths, builder of the granite work; John Wright, Henry C. Macy, and Henry Kenitzer, supervising architects; Executive Committee Garfield Monument Association of the Pacific Coast: M. C. Blake, President; Horace Davis Vice-President; W. W. Montague, Vice-President; Moses Heller, Treasurer; Hon. A. J. Bryant, L. L. Baker, W. T. Coleman, Jules Cerf, M. H. De Young, Hon. H. L. Dodge, James Duffy, W. W. Dodge, Arthur M. Ebbets, W. D. English, M. J. Keating, Davis Louderback, Captain W. L. Merry, Hon. P. A. Roach, John W. Schaeffer, Claus Spreckles, Jacob S. Taber, Lloyd Tevis, A. P. Williams, Albert W. Preston, Colonel United States Army, Secretary of the Association, and Grand Marshal of the Day. Frank J. Murphy, Assistant Secretary. "God and our country."

A platform capable of seating 125 persons will be constructed around the base for the accommodation of the Grand Lodge of Masons, the invited guests and members of the Executive Committee of the Association.

The procession will undoubtedly be one of the largest ever seen in San Francisco. It will consist of the Grand Lodge of Masons of the State of California, sixteen subordinate Lodges in this city and several from the interior, the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons of the State and subordinate bodies, the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of the State and subordinate bodies, the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of the State and subordinate Commanderies, the Grand Consistory of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite and subordinate bodies, the various Commanderies of Knights Templar from the East and the Pacific coast; Lincoln Post, George H. Thomas Post, J. A. Garfield Post, Colonel Cass Post and General Meade Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, all of this city, and ten or twelve Posts from various points in the interior, as well as the National Guard of the State and the United States troops stationed in and around the harbor, and a representation from the United States navy. This is but an outline of what the procession will be, and it is confidently expected that at least 15,000 persons will take part in it. A strong guard of police and military will be in attendance at the park to preserve order and will as far as possible preserve the flowers and shrubs from being trampled under foot and destroyed. The point from which the procession will start has not yet been fixed upon, but it is probable it will be south of Market street, on either Third or Fifth street, and the route will be along Market street to Golden Gate avenue, and thence to the park. The great length of the procession will necessarily prevent a march through the principal streets. The hour for starting will not be later than 9:30 A. M.

Invitations to attend the ceremonies have been extended to Governor Stoneman, Lieutenant-Governor Daggett, Mayor Bartlett, the Board of Supervisors, the Park Commissioners, Ogden Hoffman and Lorenzo Sawyer, the Justices of the Supreme Court of the State, the foreign Consuls, the press, Major-General Schofield and Staff, officers of the United States Navy, W. T. Welcker, A. J. Moulder, United States officials, the architects and builders of the monument, and Senators Miller and Farley. Owing to the lack of accommodations, these are the only invitations which will be issued.

A Legal Holiday.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
SACRAMENTO, Aug. 4, 1883.

WHEREAS, Petitions, numerously signed by many citizens of this State, requesting that Friday, the 24th day of August, 1883, be proclaimed a legal holiday; and, whereas, a great number of prominent and influential citizens of other States will on said day be visiting this State as the guests of an important organized society of our citizens; and, whereas, on said day the corner-stone of the monument to our late President, James A. Garfield, will be laid in Golden Gate Park, in the city and county of San Francisco, by the Most Worthy Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, escorted by the Knights Templar from all parts of the Union then sojourning in San Francisco, and by the military force of the United States and the State of California. Now, therefore, I, George Stoneman, Governor of the State of California, do hereby proclaim Friday, the 24th day of August, 1883, a legal holiday in the State of California.

[SEAL.] GEORGE STONEMAN,
Governor of the State of California.
Attest: THOMAS L. THOMPSON,
Secretary of State.

As will be seen by its card in another column, the General Relief Committee have opened an office in Shiel's building, and the Secretary will be there from 7 to 8 o'clock each evening.

The San Francisco School of Expression.

The account of the first reception given by the June Class in Elocution, Friday, July 27th, at Saratoga Hall, Geary street, should have been in our last week's issue, but "better late than never."

Prof. H. C. Eastman, manager, opened the programme with a few remarks showing his objects in this work and making clear to the audience the necessity of such an institution as he proposes to establish in San Francisco. He apologized for two of the members of the class being absent. Miss Smith being in Santa Rosa, and unable to attend; also Miss Haile, who was in Suisun. Both ladies are teachers in the public schools.

After explanatory remarks, the class gave in a very satisfactory manner the "Charge of the Light Brigade," followed by a piano solo, by Master Dennis Foley, a blind boy, who captured the audience with his artistic touch. He responded to an encore with an equally well rendered solo, but even then the audience seemed loth to let him go.

Miss Selina Cohan then gave in a very vivid and tragical manner the poem entitled "Mad Mag," which was heartily appreciated by the audience, and insisted upon her responding, which after some hesitation she did, giving a comic recitation—"The Frenchman and his Flea Powder."

Miss Josie Williams then recited the very difficult recitation entitled "Parrhassius and the Captive," showing much pathos and feeling. She responded to an encore with "King Robert of Sicily."

Miss Cullen then rendered in a very careful and feeling manner the "Angels of Buena Vista." This was a credit to her, and had she had a little stronger voice it might have been more satisfactory to some.

Mr. Rinaldo Livingstone also gave some fine ventriloquist illustrations, which so exercised the laughing powers of the audience as to compel him to "give them some more."

"Rocket's Christmas," was exceptionally well rendered, considering that the one giving it, (Miss Mand Stover of Oakland), had had but little instruction before the June Class, and being quite young, she showed remarkable talent in portraying pathos and strength of character, as well as a touch of the comic. She responded to the enthusiastic encore with Tennyson's "Bugle Song," which showed the sweetness and power of her voice to a good effect. Miss Stover will, without doubt, make an artist.

Owing to the lateness of the hour, Mr. G. Frank Perkins did not recite his "Street Cries," which was intended to show the compass of the voice and power in sudden transitions. Many of our Brother Workmen have heard Mr. Perkins in song and recitations and know his capabilities.

It was a matter of regret, that neither Mr. Perkins nor Mr. Eastman could have the opportunity to show what the voice can do. Mr. Eastman's abilities are well known as an elocutionist, and what we would be glad to add might not be necessary.

We say to the new School of Expression "God speed." It is needed here, and with such a faithful teacher as Mr. Eastman, and the business push of Mr. Perkins, who has been a business man and understands what it is to "push things," we can see no need of anything but a future success.

Latin and Greek, French and Spanish, and ventriloquism, are to be taught in the school by experienced instructors, and as we look over their circulars we see an entertainment bureau is connected with it, for the purpose of furnishing to parties who may wish entertainments—such as lectures, concerts, readings, short dramas, etc. by applying to the management, H. C. Eastman, Phelan's building, S. F.

A Confident Subscriber.

[From Pacific Rural Press, S. F.]

Rufus Fiske, of Santa Clara county, who shows his faith in the RURAL PRESS by paying his subscription two years in advance, writes as follows:

"Your paper has become such a valuable aid to me in my business of farming that I cannot afford to be without it. Not only every farmer ought to have it, but all who are interested in the welfare and development of the State. Success to you in the future as well as in the past."

Business Notes.

THE art of manufacturing steel reed accordions has only been developed by a few persons in any country. We, as Californians, have a pride in Bro. Louis Miller, 108 Third street, who has manufactured so large a number here that he may be justly styled the leader of the coast. He is also repairer of instruments upon this coast.

If you wish to see the finest and most extensive line of men's furnishing goods, go to Bro. Robert C. Hahn, 1006 Market street, above Powell. Shirts made to order, and the latest patterns in stock just arrived.

Bro. J. F. Lewis, one of the charter members of Bay View Lodge, No. 159, has removed his place of business to the corner of Seventeenth street and Railroad avenue, South San Francisco. All those desiring any plumbing, gasfitting, metal roofing in all its branches, pump and steam fitting, will find it to their interest to submit it to Bro. Lewis.

The Wonders of Electricity.

Hon S. S. Cox, in the annual address delivered before the Indiana Asbury University, at Greencastle, on the 19th ult., said:

"The electric monograph transmits messages in the original handwriting. The hektograph multiplies your epistles; the telephone enables people to make contracts through an orifice; but as there is no witness, photography comes in and records the shadow of the sound by curves in vowels and consonants!"

"Electricity is an element elusive and subtle, yet it is stored in a box and imprisoned in a metal to be used at pleasure for portraiture, sound, light, or power. I have seen an organ in Berlin played by electricity, but this is simple compared with other experiments. Is it not a marvel that we can telegraph from a moving railroad car or the speeding steamship? A California photographer obtains six photographs in one leap of a clown in six different positions. He catches a horse on a gallop, a rabbit on a run, and a bird on the wing. By means of a wire a circular saw or a locomotive may be—nay, has been—run miles distant from its source of force. Electricity is born of the sun. It may be converted back to its source, so that when one talks by telephone he may see his distant colloquist. It is shrewdly believed that nerve power depends for increased strength on light. It will not be strange if the polyscope illuminates the animal organism, rendering the body transparent. The vast current of liquid force which we call electricity is condensed in boxes like desiccated meats, or spread over continents to convey intelligence. Man can never overdraw from this vast, bankruptless depository of nature."

JAMES S. WATERMAN, who died recently in Chicago, was the founder of the town of Sycamore, Illinois, and its wealthiest citizen. With his brother, R. W. Waterman, of the Hot Springs, near San Bernardino, he owned one of the very richest of mines on the Mojave Desert, near Calico district. With his wife, Mr. W. recently spent several winters in southern California, forming warm attachments among the good citizens of San Bernardino and Riverside, who sincerely sympathize with Mrs. Waterman, and other relatives of the deceased.

COMPLIMENTARY SAMPLES OF THIS PAPER are occasionally sent to parties connected with the interests specially represented in its columns. Persons so receiving copies are requested to examine its contents, terms of subscription, and give it their own patronage, and, as far as practicable, aid in circulating the journal, and making its value more widely known to others, and extending its influence in the cause it faithfully serves. Subscription rate, $2 a year. Extra copies mailed for 10 cents, if ordered soon enough. Personal attention will be called to this (as well as other notices, at times,) by turning a leaf.

Conditions of Health-Giving Exercise.

The summer air of the highlands makes outdoor life a luxury, but the chief advantage of the plan is this: The stimulus of a pleasant pastime enables a man to beguile himself into about ten times as much exercise as he could stand in the Turner hall. The visitors of a hygienic gymnasium take their turn at the horizontal bar as they would swallow the drugs of a public dispensary; they know that it is a lesser evil; they know that the road to Styx is the alternative; they intend to come every day, but the intolerable tedium of the crank-work exercise soon shakes that resolution. The motive, for exertion is too abstract: it lacks the charm of progressiveness and the stimulus of a proximate, tangible and visible purpose. The sham competition of a regiment of invalids under the command of a turnmaster does not much sweeten the bitter broth; it is still crank-work, minus the club of the jailer, and nine out of ten hygienic gymnasts will soon find or make a pretext for discontinuing their visits. How many out of a hundred pupils of a young ladies' seminary would dream of performing their "calis-thenics" at home? They would as soon walk on all fours, or ride on a dry clothes-line. But arrange a May day picnic in the mountains, and they will beat a kid in climbing up the steepest rocks, and swing on wild grapevines for hours together.

It is likewise certain that fatigues can be far better borne if the body is not incumbered with a surplus of calorific clothes. A pair of linen trousers, a flannel hunting shirt, and a loose necktie make the most hygienic summer dress.
In the afternoon remove the necktie and roll up the shirt sleeves; it can do no harm to imbibe fresh air by all available means, and let the cutaneous lungs share in the luxury. Nor is there any excuse for the widespread fallacy that it is dangerous, even in the most sweltering nights, to remove the bed-blankets. Kick them into the farthest corner if they become too warm, and sleep in your shirt and drawers, or under a linen bed-sheet. Half-naked lazzaroni sleep the year round on the stone terrace of the Museo Borbonico, and outlive the asthmatic burghers in their sweat-box dormitories. The body effects part of its breathing through the pores. Painting a man with yellow ochre and copal varnish would kill him as surely as hanging him by the neck. The confined air between the skin of the body and a stratum of heavy blankets gets gradually surcharged with carbonic acid—in warm weather even to the verge of the saturation point. The perspiration is thus forced back upon the body, and the lungs, perhaps already weakened by disease, have to do double work.—Dr. Felix L. Oswald, in Popular Science Monthly.

PROGRESSIVE INDIANS.—The Putes at the Pyramid Lake reservation, Nev., are showing considerable progress. They have dug five miles of ditch for irrigating purposes this year, and will raise 1,000 bushels of wheat this summer. A number of children are attending the boarding-school, begun last fall by direction of the Government, and many of them can read, write and do some work in primary arithmetic. They are also taught to cook, sew, etc., and have made considerable progress in this direction. Mrs. Mc Masters has charge of the school, and Mrs. Mapes is matron. Religious service is conducted on Sunday by Mr. Aibby, the Baptist minister of Wadsworth. The services are well attended, and the Indians are generally respectful and attentive.

PHYSICIANS say it combines all the desiderata of every ferruginous tonic prescribed by every school of medicine. Brown's Iron Bitters.

(ESTABLISHED 1830.)

Inventors on the Pacific Coast will find it greatly to their advantage to consult this old experienced, first-class Agency. We have able and trustworthy associates and Agents in Washington and the capital cities of the principal nations of the world. In connection with our editorial, scientific and Patent Law Library, and record of original cases in our office, we have other advantages far beyond those which can be offered home inventors by other Agencies. The information accumulated through long and careful practice before the Office, and the frequent examination of Patents already granted, for the purpose of determining the patentability of inventions brought before us, enables us often to give advice which will save inventors the expense of applying for Patents upon inventions which are not new. Circulars of advice sent free on receipt of postage. Address DEWEY & CO., Patent Agents, 252 Market St., S. F.

Oakland's Tribute.

The Reception to Supreme Master Workman Fish.

The reception tendered to Supreme Master Workman Dr. M. W. Fish by the various A. O. U. W. Lodges of Oakland on the 14th ult., at the Independent Church, was very largely attended, and passed off most successfully. A brief report was given in the last issue of the WATCHMAN—all that could be done at the time, as the event occurred right on the eve of our going to press. We present herewith a full and detailed report. The spacious auditorium of the church was handsomely and appropriately decorated. The audience, which filled the building to overflowing, was intelligent and appreciative. The various speeches were full of eloquence and instruction, giving, as they did, in graceful, oratorical periods, a concise and interesting history of the Order, which alone would pay the seeker after information for perusing. The music was thoroughly first-class.

The exercises began with an overture artistically played on the large pipe organ by Prof. N. L. Le Noir. Hon. C. K. Robinson, P. M. W., and ex-Mayor of Oakland, acted as President of the evening, and delivered a short opening address, in which he welcomed all, and stated the objects of the reception to be for the purpose of congratulating themselves, California, and the Order at large for the deserved honor conferred on this jurisdiction by the election of Dr. M. W. Fish, of Oakland, as Supreme Master Workman. He also referred briefly to the rise and rapid progress of the Order in this State since it was planted here by Bro. H. G. Pratt, the present Grand Recorder.

The organ then pealed forth the stirring notes of "Hail to the Chief," and the Grand Lodge officers entered, escorting to the front Dr. Fish, the audience all rising to their feet. Grand Recorder Pratt, in a brief presentation speech, introduced the Supreme Master Workman. President Robinson responded, saying that words were inadequate to express the pleasure felt by subordinates in the election of a leader in whom they feel a just pride. "This is not an idle office, not a void and empty honor, but a responsibility among the grandest in the country, requiring in its officials men of ability, integrity, sobriety, and worth. We who know you best know that no mistake has been made in your election. You were the first Grand Master of this State—never absent from the Grand Lodge in its six years of existence. Next you became Supreme Overseer, then Supreme Foreman, and now the Eastern brethren have elevated you to the highest office obtainable in our Order. Allow me to welcome you and introduce you as Supreme Master Workman."

After the applause had subsided which accompanied the introduction of Dr. Fish, he replied as follows:

Dr. Fish's Address.

Mr. President, Ladies, and Gentlemen:—I sincerely regret that I am not able to frame in fitting speech the thanks which I desire to express for this cordial welcome. On behalf of the Supreme Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workman, whose servant I am, I return my heartfelt thanks for the honor you have shown her.

It is fitting, perhaps, that at the birthplace of the A. O. U. W. in this State this reception should take place; not that the membership of the State at large are less warm in their devotion to the Supreme Head of the Order, or less earnest in upholding its honor and dignity, than are the membership of Oakland. But here first struggled into life the feeble infant that so soon has grown into such vigorous manhood.

My mind reverts to that eventful 13th day of November, 1877, when thirty representatives from ten Subordinate Lodges met in Kohler's Hall and formed the Grand Lodge of California. The two hundred members who sent these representatives to that meet-ness, resting upon the homes of the widow and the orphan.

At the meeting at Kohler's Hall I was elected Supreme Lodge Representative, my colleagues being the late Dr. W. T. Bradbury and Grand Recorder H. G. Pratt, neither of whom, however, found it possible to attend. In March following, I was present at the session of the Supreme Lodge that met at St. Louis, Mo., and have been present at every session since that time. At the St. Louis session (1878) the strength of the whole Order was reported as 35,886 in eighteen different Grand Lodges, California the youngest and weakest of them all. Five years later, how stands the account? In the race for numerical supremacy, California has overtaken and passed one after another of the older Grand Lodges, until now only the Empire State remains to be vanquished. Not only in numbers is California strong, but in her zealous devotion to the great prin-

DR. M. W. FISH, SUPREME MASTER WORKMAN.

ing little comprehended the magnitude of the structure destined to be reared upon the foundations then and there laid, and those intrusted with this work "built better than they knew." The men who formed that Grand Lodge were worthy of grateful memory. Some have gone to their reward, while more have remained to rear the structure there begun. The pioneers of this Order in this State were good men, and true, unselfish in their devotion, zealous in their work, and worthy like Abou Ben Adhem to be "counted as those who love their fellow-men." The officers elected at that meeting entered upon their duties with an energy and zeal that compelled success. Some of them have remained at their posts ever since. Nine months after, the membership had increased tenfold, and California became separate in its Beneficiary Department. On July 16, 1878, with 2,000 Master Workmen degree members, already had the practical benefits of the Order been illustrated, and the sunshine of its beneficence penetrated the dark-principles that are the corner-stones of our fraternity; and, without disparagement of any, she is second to none in her unquestioned and unquestioning loyalty to the Supreme Lodge. Never has the distress call, no matter whence it came, fallen upon unheeding ears, and willing hands have time and again been opened to extend help to the needy of other jurisdictions; and when the dark pall rested upon the yellow fever stricken South, the mail and the express were too slow, and the telegraph was evoked to place their gold at the service of the sick and suffering across a continent, if perchance it might assuage their dying anguish, or lighten the dark passage to the tomb. Truly, such charity may be likened to — "A plant divinely nurs'd,

Its fruit on earth, its growth above the skies."

It is in this doing unto others as we would that they should do unto us that the A. O. U. W. in California must look for the cause of her unprecedented and marvelous growth in the past. The wise man said,

"There is, that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is, that withholdeth more than is need, but it tendeth to poverty." The unblemished record of the Grand Lodge of California, the Supreme Lodge recognizes and appreciates. This has influenced them in bestowing upon this jurisdiction the highest office in their gift. That it has fallen upon me I owe to you. It shall be my earnest endeavor to so strive that you may not wish it had otherwise been bestowed, and that the Supreme Lodge may not regret the confidence placed in me. I love the Order for the good it has done, and sincerely believe its future will be far more glorious.

It is but a few short years since a poor workman in a machine shop in an obscure village of Pennsylvania originated the Ancient Order of United Workmen. At Buffalo, good old Father Upchurch had the satisfaction of greeting the Representatives of a membership of 121,271. It would be superfluous, had I the time or ability, for one to enter into any argument to convince this audience that the Order we represent is worthy of their love and confidence. Too often in the past have they witnessed its beneficence, and listened to the benisons of the widows and orphans of its deceased members, saved from penury and want by its wise and humane provisions, to need such proof. Sickness and death are alike the inheritance of the rich and the poor, and none may say that the one or the other when approaching the dark valley and shadow of death shall not need the strong arm and warm heart of a brother to uphold and comfort him in that trying hour, and care for his loved ones when he shall have passed over the dark river to the other shore. Since July 16, 1878, over 400 of our brothers in this State have been borne to their last resting-place in the silent cities of the dead, and over $800,000 have been distributed to the sorrowing loved ones they have left behind. The Supreme Lodge in a little over a decade has distributed over a million and a half of dollars to the widows and orphans of its deceased members, while the various separate beneficiary jurisdictions would multiply this sum many fold. But who can measure or compute the value in dollars and cents of this ever flowing stream of practical benevolence? As well estimate the value of the gentle dews and the sunshine to the budding flowers or the ripening grain. Only when the books shall be opened at the last great reckoning, shall it be known.

It has become a recognized fact that woman is entitled to stand shoulder to shoulder with man in all humane and benevolent enterprises, and those Orders are most in favor, and grow most rapidly, and are most prosperous that accord to woman her proper place in their councils, recognizing that here as elsewhere she is man's equal. With singular wisdom and foresight the founders of the A. O. U. W. at the very first meeting of the Supreme Lodge, provided a degree which might be conferred upon the wives and daughters of Workmen and named it the "Degree of Honor." Later the Supreme Lodge attached to it a beneficiary feature, so that the mother or sister may provide while in life and health for those who are dear to her, to shield them from want when she shall have passed away. In this branch of the fraternal working of the Order California has again taken the lead, and already has twenty-six Lodges with over 1,000 members; and I confidently predict that the time is not very far distant when, wherever a Lodge of Workmen exists, there will be found a Lodge of the De-

The Fireside.

Solitude.

Let the world laugh with you,
Weep, and you weep alone;
For the sad old earth must borrow its mirth,
But has trouble enough of its own.
Sing, and the hills will answer;
Sigh, it is lost on the air;
The echoes bound to a cheerful sound,
But shrink from voicing care.

Rejoice, and men will seek you;
Grieve, and they turn and go;
They want full measure of all your pleasure,
But they do not need your woe.
Be glad, and your friends are many;
Be sad, and you lose them all.
There are none to decline your nectared wine,
But alone you must drink life's gall.

Feast, and your halls are crowded;
Fast, and the world goes by;
Succeed and give, and it helps you live,
But no man can help you die.
There is room in the halls of pleasure
For a large and lordly train,
But one by one we must all file on,
Through the narrow aisles of pain.

Edith Wharton.

Fireside Chats.

WRITTEN BY EDITH WHARTON.

"Why will girls marry young, before they know what it means?" whispered Mrs. Cloverleaf to herself, as she went skimming round the old barn hunting pieces of board for firewood. When she had gathered her arms full she ran to the house as fast as her tired feet would carry her, giving a terrified glance at the clock as she broke the slimmest pieces across her knee and pushed them into the stove with trembling haste.

"Oh, God! what shall I do if dinner is late again?" she whispered. "If he finds fault I can't bear it. No, no, no, I can't, oh God!" She cuts the potatoes into quarters so they will boil quickly, and drops the fresh ears of corn into the kettle, while her eyes full of anxiety and fright turn every minute toward the door, lest her methodical John should happen in earlier than usual and transfix her with his reproachful glance as he asks, "Do you intend to have that for dinner?"

She knew she would have to say "yes," and then he would look at the clock and look at her with eyes that would seem to cut right into her heart. She could feel just how horrible it would be, and see just how he would founce out of the room, hating her for being so slow.

"Oh, God!" she almost screamed, flinging her arms above her head and then shaking them toward the spot where she could almost see him looking at her. "I hate you, hate you, hate you!" she whispered. "I've worked every minute, and I am not to blame. Let me alone, say!"

She ran and spread the tablecloth, put on the dishes, the bread, butter, baked apples and pitcher of milk. She makes the pudding sauce and peeps into the oven to find the cottage pudding almost done. Now she can ding the bell and go about more calmly rishing the meat and making the gravy.

"Is dinner ready?" queries Mr. Cloverleaf, looking in at the kitchen door suspiciously, as he turns back his shirt sleeves preparatory to washing his hands.

"I think it will be by the time you get your hands washed."

"You think! Don't you know? And here it is quarter past twelve, too."

"Yes, I know!" short and sharp, as she sends the skimmer under the potatoes to lift them out.

"Always getting mad without any reason," thinks Mr. Cloverleaf as he begins his scrubbing.

Three pleasant-faced boys come trooping by the kitchen window and laugh at her till a smile on her face quickly answers them.

"Got green corn for dinner, mamma?" asks the youngest, as he leans in at the casement.

"Yes, dear; and if you like you can take it to the table for me when your hands are washed."

His face brightens, and he darts away to the water as eagerly as some children would at the promise of a reward.

"Now you may call the lady," his mother tells him, after he has carefully set his dish upon the table. At his summons a lady and little girl come from the sitting-room and take their places. They are the boarders for whom Mrs. Cloverleaf feels there must be something at every meal a little nicer than she would get for themselves if alone.

"Why don't you eat something?" asks Mr. Cloverleaf, looking across the table at his wife. "I want to rest a little first," she answers, trying to give a pleasant look in return.

"Well, you ought to get dinner all ready to set on the table by half past eleven, and then lie down and rest till noon. That is the way to do."

"But the butter was so long coming to-day; then I had to salt and work it, skim the milk, and do so many other things, that I couldn't even go out to pick the corn till eleven o'clock."

"That's just the trouble; you don't begin early enough, and the corn—you ought to have had the boys get that in the morning."

"Yes, they would have got it if they had thought of it, or if I had thought to tell them;

but the first I knew they were off at work with you too far away to call, just for that."

"Well, come on boys, we must be off; if we ever want to get that land cleaned up we must keep at it," says Mr. Cloverleaf as he leaves the table.

His wife looks after him with her lips just parting to ask him to stop and cut a little wood; but she is slow of speech and hates to ask for anything when he has so much to do. So she lets him go thinking she will pick up enough wood to get supper with. But it happens that company comes and there must be a little extra cooking done, and just as Mrs. Cloverleaf starts out towards where the wood pile ought to be, her husband comes rushing through the yard in hot haste, the perspiration streaming down his face.

"Oh, John, won't you split a little wood before you go back?" she asks.

"Wood, wood! it seems as though all you do is to burn wood," he scolds, as he snatches the axe and begins to whack away at the chunks of redwood laying about the yard.

Mrs. Cloverleaf turns and goes into the house without a word in answer; but when she is safe in the kitchen, her hands strike out blindly, and her bitter whispering commences:

"Oh, yes, you can say that to me, when the money for the butter and the board is almost all we have. And whose work brings that in if not mine?" Her head drops upon the table with a thud, and a stifled cry swells in her throat: "I wouldn't mind the work half so much if he would give me credit for what I do. If he would only see how I work and feel a little bit sorry and be kind about things, I shouldn't feel half so tired."

If Mrs. Cloverleaf had only said this aloud to John it might have done some good—that is, if he could have been induced to listen, but he had taken the notion that she was unreasonable, and whenever she began to show him that she thought he was wrong about things, he would stop her before the words were half out of her mouth. He hated complaining, and meant to show her that he would not have it, but as he did not stop his own faultfinding, she failed to see the justice of this. Not being allowed to speak when she was blamed was turning her into the unhappiest of women, because it led her to brood over all the hard speeches he had uttered since their married life began.

As I have said, her words did not come as readily as most women's words are expected to. So in their first years of marriage when he found fault with her she went away by herself and sobbed out her sorrow without trying to defend herself by one word, even when she knew she was innocent. After ten years of this quietness, when she did begin to answer back he called her quick tempered, and determined to have none of it. Yet Mr. Cloverleaf was a good man—did not drink or use tobacco, or gamble or swear, was strictly honest about paying his debts, and if he could have been made to see that he owed a debt of kindness to his wife, it may be he would have paid that. His wife was well educated, economical, a good mother, and tried to be a good wife.

Now, where was the trouble? They had married, after a few months' acquaintance, without knowing whether there was any sympathy between them, or whether they had charity for each other's opinions or could even express them freely to each other. So the want of sympathy and freedom of expression, of kind feeling and confidence, was driving one of them to an ever present misery; the misery of knowing herself to be held forever in the wrong, and with no hope of love in all the years to come.

The ranch was quite a distance from town, so they never attended church, or lectures, or concerts; though Mrs. Cloverleaf was welcome to go to town when her husband did if she would be ready in time; but woe be unto her if there was ten minutes waiting; she was made to feel that she was heartily disapproved of at the very least, and for a woman like her, that was enough to depress her and bring up all the old grievances to be fought down again. Mr. Cloverleaf had taken the idea that his wife did not care when she was late, or when dinner was late; that she did not care to please him, because she rarely had a fluent excuse ready for him. But, in truth, she cared much more than the careless, light-hearted women who have a smooth flow of words ready for every occasion.

A learned scientist wonders why many wives, when they are sick and lose their reason, turn in bitter hate from their husbands who have always been so kind to them. If Mrs. Cloverleaf should be so sick as to lose her power of repression, I suppose he would think she was another illustration of the depravity of a wife toward a model husband.

There should be more serious thought before the marriage vows are taken. Young men and young women should try to make sure that they can bear with each all the years of their life to come before they marry. And girls don't marry before you are twenty-three years old, and waiting till twenty-five is better. How can you have the judgment to govern a child rightly when you are scarcely more than a child yourself? Many girls who marry at seventeen feel a child to be a burden to them because the proper care of it keeps them from the pleasures other girls of their age are free to enjoy. They get a fretful dislike to their children, with only an occasional remorseful love and pride in them.

Remember, if a man really loves you he will be willing to wait till you are of suitable age;

if he don't really love you, it is better to find it out before marriage. There are too many unhappy marriages; too many divorces.

If a young man as he has grown from boyhood up has been disrespectful to his parents and unkind to his brothers and sisters, he is pretty sure to be a peevish, unkind husband. If girls scold their mothers and indulge in fits of passion toward each other, they will be ready for a quarrel with their husbands, even if they don't start it.

So, dear mothers, give much thought and care to the training of your little ones, for it is more than likely that you are bringing them up to be kind or unkind to yourself, and happy or unhappy in their married life.

I think that most any young mother would find Jacob Abbot's books a help about training her children. His Franconia Stories—Beechnut, Phonny and Madaline, Caroline, and others, are delightful for mother and children to read together as soon as children are large enough to understand.

Pa's Rural Holiday.

Said the bad boy to the grocery man: "You see one of the deacons in our church lives out on a farm, and all his folks were going away to spend the day, and he had to do all the chores, so he invited pa and ma to come out to the farm and have a nice, quiet time, and they went."

"There is nothing my pa likes better than to go out on a farm and pretend he knows everything. When the farmer got pa and ma out there he set them to work, and ma shelled peas while pa went to dig potatoes for dinner. I think it was mean for the deacon to send pa out in the cornfield to dig potatoes; and after he had dug up a whole row of corn without finding any potatoes, he set the dog on pa, and treed him in an apple tree near the beehives, and then go and visit with ma and leave pa in the tree with the dog barking at him. Pa said he never knew how mean a deacon could be until he had sat on a limb of that apple tree all the afternoon."

"About time to do chores, the farmer came and found pa, and called the dog off, and pa came down, and then the farmer played the meanest trick of all. He said city people didn't know how to milk cows, and pa said he wished he had as many dollars as he knew how to milk cows. He said his speculatively was milking kicking cows, and the farmer gave pa a tin-pail and a milking-stool, and let down the bars and pointed out to pa the worst cow on the place."

"Pa knew his reputation was at stake, and he went up to the cow and punched it in the flank, and said: 'Hist, confound you.' Well, the cow wasn't a hissing kind, but a hissing bull, and pa knew it was a bull as quick as he see it put down its head and beller, and pa dropped the pail and started for the bars, and the bull after pa."

"I don't think it was right in ma to bet two shillings with the farmer that pa would get to the bars before the bull did, though she won the bet. Pa said he knew it was a bull just as soon as the horns got tangled up in his coat tails, and when he struck on the other side of the bars and his nose hit the ash-barrel where they make lye for soap, pa said he saw more fireworks than we did at the Soldiers' Home. Pa wouldn't celebrate any more and he came home after thanking the farmer for his courtesies, but he wants me to borrow a gun and go out with him hunting. We are going to shoot a bull and a dog, and some bees; maybe we will shoot the farmer if pa keeps on as mad as he is now.—Puck's Sun.

THE BOY FARMER.—The boy that commences early in life to practice agriculture for himself, on a small scale, becomes interested in obtaining the best results with the least expenditure of money, and not only learns many practical lessons which are of great value in after life, but he becomes so strongly attached to the farm that he has no desire to leave it. In fact, the boy who begins to gather up practical knowledge relating to the best methods of producing farm crops, and continues it up to manhood, learns one of the most reliable trades that man has ever yet followed. Give the boy a few rods of land to cultivate, and then encourage, and, if necessary, assist him to make it the most productive portion of the farm. In a few years he will begin to realize that farming is an occupation which requires quite as high intelligence as any other occupation, and also that the profits of the farm depend in a great measure on the intelligence, of the farmer. As soon as he realizes this, he will entertain a higher respect for the occupation, and will feel a desire, not simply to become a practical farmer, but to be able to direct the practice with the highest scientific intelligence. Massachusetts Ploughman.

FATHER O'KELLY "Oh Pat, Pat! stealing pigs again, I hear. You know I only absolved you last time on condition you paid the owner their value." Pat—"Yis, yer Riv'rence. But when I buy a pig from Mick Doolan, he fixes the price; now when I stake a pig, it's meself that fixes it—and, bedad, your Riv'rence, there's a dale o' difference!"

THE enterprising Georgia girl who raised four acres of onions and sent lots of them as presents to her rivals, but carefully avoided touching them herself, has won and will soon be married to the young man that all the girls in her section were after.

Farmers' Girls.

We have long said that the best wives in the world are farmers' girls. We believe it is true. Not but that many mechanics, and merchants, and bankers' girls make good wives and excellent women. But the rule is that farmers' girls are healthier, fresher, fairer, more useful and sensible than any other class of young women. What is a girl good for that has no health, no vigor of body, whose waist is like a wasp's, whose lungs are cramped into half their proper size, whose spine is crooked and diseased, whose nerves are as weak as a spleeny old woman's, whose physical organization is so weak and unstrung that every wind gives her a cold, every change in the weather a neuralgic attack, every accident a hysterical fit, and every spider that sets foot in her pathway a frantic terror?

What is a girl good for if she has no useful information, whose hands can serve no useful turn—can neither make bread, nor butter, nor clothes, nor wash, nor nurse, nor mend? Wives live to some purpose, or ought to. Theirs is a great mission. They have a field to occupy. They have noble service to humanity to do. They have to preside over the interests of the thousands of homes that dot our country. The dress, the comfort, the taste, the health, the happiness, the intelligence, the virtue of our homes are not a little in their keeping. All the interest that clusters around the fireside are confided to them. Our civilization, our intelligence, our virtue, our progress in all that is great and good, depend as much upon our wives as upon any class of the community.

They should, then, be healthy, strong, and useful. They should know how to do something that will be of service to their families. To cook, to wash, to make, to mend, to pickle, to preserve, to cure, to nurse, to instruct, to please, to bless, to entertain, to serve, to encourage, to cut, to knit and sew—are some of the offices devolving upon a wife. If she knows not all of these things, she must fail in some of her duties. If she cannot put her hand to some of these services, she cannot fulfill her mission. To do these things she must be well stocked with common sense and useful information. To embroider, to finger a musical instrument, to paint, to read French and nurse flower-pots and lap-dogs, is a small part of a wife's mission. To go into hysterics over the last novel, to weep over a newspaper doggerel, to study the fashion-plate, to feast on the Lady's Book as though it were solid food, to snuffle over love stories and be delighted with coxcomb literature—are accomplishments of a very questionable character in a wife. Half a grain of common sense sprinkled into a few hours of useful occupation is worth more than all of them. Because farmers' daughters are freer from these fooleries, are sounder in health, are trained to more useful employments, is the reason why, as a general rule, they make better wives. All true accomplishments are to be prized; but the first and best and ever to be esteemed accomplishment is to be useful. This always makes one agreeable, always makes one honored. When usefulness is joined with intelligence, virtue and graceful manners, it consummates the character of a good wife.—City and Country.

Women in the Water.

Fragile woman, so often considered as a mere plaything for man, has more than once both astonished man and humiliated him by her exploits of endurance in the water. It is the fact, however, that woman can float more easily in the water than a man can, because she has the advantage over him in having smaller bones, in proportion to her total weight, than a man has, and has also a larger proportionate amount in her body of adipose matter, which is lighter than water, than man has. But, nevertheless, for a fragile vessel she has performed feats on the frisky wave more marvelous even than those accomplished by her male rival, and has done them far more gracefully; for it is an undeniable fact, that though women cannot walk as gracefully as men, she excels him in her grace of movement in the water, and becomes in its embrace as fair a nymph, indeed, as ever floated in the mythic waters of Greek mythology. But to prove assertions by accomplished deeds, Miss Agnes Beckwith, when only fourteen years of age, swam with the tide five miles and three and a half furlongs in the Thames river, Eng., in one hour and nine minutes. Miss Emily Parker, when of the same age, swam in the Thames river nine miles and three and a half furlongs in two hours, twenty-four minutes and thirty seconds on tide water. Miss Agnes Beckwith, when fifteen years old, swam ten miles on the Thames river, with tide, in two hours and forty-three minutes. The same lady, when seventeen years old, without assistance, swam in the Thames river twenty miles in six hours and twenty-five minutes. The longest time ever swam by a woman was thirty-one consecutive hours, the feat having been accomplished by Miss Edith Johnson, at Blackpool baths, Eng. One hundred hours out of one hundred and thirty-seven were swum by Miss Agnes Beckwith at the Westminster aquarium, London. The longest consecutive swim ever made in fresh water by a man was forty miles in the River Thames, Eng., in 1878, by Captain Webb, who was killed last month in trying to swim the Niagara river below the falls.

SAID the girl who had quarreled with her lover: "Oh, it's all right! Harry said he should try to forget me, but he always fails in everything he undertakes."

The Danger in Moderate Drinking.

An eminent clergyman told me this story of himself. He had recently been installed as pastor of an influential Congregational church in the chief city of his State, and in a few days after, with two friends, members of the church, made the rounds among his people, calling upon them all. He was a young man not long out of college and the seminary, of brilliant promise, which he fully justified in after life. Everywhere, he said, wine was offered, and nowhere did he or his friends decline it. Presently he began to feel its effects, and stopping his friends upon the sidewalk, while on their way to another call, he said: "I'm tipsy, or nearly so. I've not been accustomed to wine, and this habit of taking it will make drunkards of us all. I will from this moment take no more while I live; that's the safest way, the only safe way." One of his friends, he told me, responded heartily to this, and joined him in the promise, while the other laughed at their fears, and having none for himself, kept on in the "good old way," and died a miserable drunkard in middle life.

On a Sunday not long since, and at a church in this city, a Boston clergyman was preaching, and his point was to show the tendency of evil and sin to extend and perpetuate itself. He told a story of which he was personally cognizant. A gentleman of fortune and high social position was a moderate drinker. He came home one day in a state of great exaltation, and his little boy ran to the door to greet him, crying out, "Mamma, here's pa! Here's pa!" The father caught him up playfully, swinging him about furiously in his semi-delirium, and the little fellow's temple came into contact with the corner of a marble table, and he fell down dead. The mother shrieked and fell to the floor in a state of absolute insensibility, and the father staggered off to a bed, upon which he threw himself, and was soon in a state of drunken stupor, unconscious to all the surroundings.

The pastor was called and spent the whole night in that fearful scene, the wife in wild delirium, and she died without recovering consciousness. The father, when reason returned, inquired for his boy, and upon being told the facts, fell to the floor in spasms, became insane and died in a mad-house. The pastor who saw the whole of that fearful tragedy, described it afterwards at a ministers' meeting, painting it in all its horrors. This pastor at the time was a most respectable moderate drinker. The scene he had witnessed suggested nothing to him, and in ten years after he was himself an outcast and a drunkard, and is now a hostler at a tavern stable. Moral: Sin has an inevitable tendency to extend and perpetuate itself.—Neal Dow.

WHO are the men of history to be admired most? Those whom most things become; who could be weighty in debate, of much device in council, considerate in a sick room, genial at a feast, joyous at a festival, capable of discourse with many minds, large souled, not to be shriveled up into any one form, fashion or temperament.—Helps.

Old World Monkeys.

Old Mollinelli, the Italian organ grinder, and his monkey Beppo, stopped before the home of Alice and Guy Raynard one lovely evening. When the organ began to play it did not take long for the children to reach the gate, and then the monkey began to dance, which performance wonderfully pleased Alice and Guy.

As soon as the children had dropped their pennies into a little tin cup which Beppo held out to them, he immediately stopped his antics. "Well," said Guy, "I don't think you are a very polite monkey to stop dancing just because you have got your money."

"And do you know that I think Beppo is an awful homely monkey, even if he is so smart," responded Alice.

"He is a homely mug, that's a fact. See how he scowls. Does he ever get angry, Mr. Mollinelli?" asked Guy.

"Angry!" answered the old organ grinder, "well, you had best not tempt him too much, that's all. And besides, I want you to know," he added with dignity, "Beppo is no common monkey. He came many, many miles to dance for me. He is a Hindoo monkey." So saying, old Mollinelli shouldered his organ, monkey and all, and started off.

"Well, I wonder what makes a Hindoo monkey any better than any other?" exclaimed Alice. "But come, Guy, we will ask papa about it."

When the children were snugly ensconced one on each side of him, Mr. Raynard said: "So you want to know why old Mollinelli thinks so much of Beppo because he is a Hindoo monkey, do you? I really thought that the old man was too sensible to believe the stuff about monkeys that the Hindoos do. There they hold them in great veneration, and build temples and hospitals for them, and in fact, I believe they quite make gods of them. These monkeys go into their houses and steal things to eat; but their visits are thought to be a great honor. They believe that whoever kills one will die before the year is up."

"There is a species of monkey in India called the entrubus which is very fond of killing snakes. When it sees a snake asleep it creeps up on all fours, seizes it by the neck and knocks its head against a tree until it is dead. Monkeys may be taught a great many amusing tricks, and in some large cities in Europe there are theaters in which monkeys are trained to act like men and women. More than two hundred years ago trained monkeys were shown at fairs and other public places in England. So, you see, it is by no means a new thing for them to dance and perform as you have seen Beppo do to-day."

"The word 'monkey' is supposed to come from the old Italian word monicchio, a monkey, which is from monna, an old woman. People say the animal is so called because it looks like an old woman. But I guess I have told you enough about monkeys for one night, and enough, too, to make you both very thankful that you were born in a Christian country, where they do not worship monkeys."

When Alice and Guy said their prayers that night they both breathed a prayer for the little Hindoo boys and girls, and resolved that the next time their pennies should go to teach these poor children of a better life, instead of to Beppo for dancing for them.—Mary Howe.

Importance of Ventilation.

One of the great evils arising from the aggregation of large numbers of people, as in cities, is the vitiation of the air in the halls, rooms, closets and cellars of our dwellings. Thousands of people are carried off annually from the entrance of such gases into our houses, and its unnecessary retention there in consequence of imperfect ventilation.

Of course no gas will rise from the sewer into our homes except it be enough lighter than air to force its way up, and often through the best constructed traps. It rises to the highest part of our halls and rooms, above the windows even, if open. By contact with air—it may in some cases be warmer or colder, moister or drier—a heavy resultant is precipitated to the bottom of our rooms. If our rooms are not ventilated at the bottom, the accumulating heavy gases, the most deadly of all, gradually fill the space upward until it reaches the height of our beds, the heads of our little ones, and finally the nostrils of adults, before it reaches an opening in the wall; while if there was a ventilator near the floor, or an opening under the door, it would flow off without rising under the same law as water flows, and without injury to the humansystem.

True Principles of Ventilation

Let no one rest in a room closed at the bottom, no matter how open at the top, and consider the place well ventilated. The breath that leaves our bodies, like the light sewer gas, rises upward, and in contact with cool air, falls in part as a heavy gas to the floor, and will finally contaminate the air up to the point of ventilation before it can flow off, under the same law that a tumbler holds all the water poured into it until the fluid reaches the top. Another point, your breath rises above you in a room, and no fresh air from without can reach your nostrils from an opening above without passing through and mixing with air already contaminated with your exhalations.

Now, if an opening is made below the height of the head, whether we are reclining or standing, the coolest air always entering at the lowest point will supply our nostrils with the purest atmosphere.

If no opening is made at the top, of course our exhalations, lighter than air, rise above us, and no matter how open our room may be at the bottom, they are held in the same manner that light gases are held in an inverted vessel.

If there is an opening at the top as well for all impure air to pass off before becoming cool and heavy, the fresh air coming in below the point of breathing will be as fresh and pure as that outside. In a cold or windy climate, those who are delicate should carefully experiment as to the amount of opening which is best for themselves at both top and bottom, always remembering, however, that the nearer the extreme top the upper openings are made, the more perfect will be the ventilation. In some cases it will be well to commence with moderate ventilation and increase gradually as one becomes accustomed to it until the most desirable amount is reached, which may be different, according to conditions, with different persons.

Those who have children or invalids in their care, who need older and stronger minds to act for them, should not pass the matter of ventilation lightly by as of little importance, because in their own strength, or other fortunate circumstances, they have hitherto prospered without giving it thought or attention.

Those who are growing old and feeble may add much to their strength, comfort and length of days by careful and well-regulated ventilation.

Keepers of hotels, and health resorts especially, may add much to their profit by so arranging the ventilation of their rooms that guests will rest themselves into good humor and health, to the liking of the establishment, and the praise of the climate and everything pertaining to the comfort and health of the place.

There are many landlords and landladies in California, who, through both ignorance and indifference, are killing scores of inmates, simply by not conveniently providing the means of ventilating their rooms at both the top and bottom, when only one "almighty dollar" would pay for the entire alteration necessary for good ventilation. They are not only slowly and surely destroying their patrons, but making victims for doctors who do not believe in ventilation.

Oakland, August, 1883.

HOT WATER BOTTLES.—For many purposes dry heat is better than moist, as for warming the feet or hands, and in many cases of neuralgia. Water cools more slowly than most solid substances, and hence a bottle filled with water will retain its heat a long time. The water may be made to retain its heat longer by adding salt. A still better fluid is a solution of acetate of soda, which may be made by dissolving ordinary baking soda in strong vinegar as long as effervescence continues.

GRANULATED EYELIDS.—We have found the hot spray applied to the eye one of the most useful of all means of treating this disease. If a spray apparatus is not at hand, simply lavage the eye with water as hot as can be borne without inconvenience may be employed. The application should be made daily for several months, as this disease is one which requires months, and in some cases years, for its successful treatment.

BARLEY.—Barley is a very nutritious article of food and easily digested. The American grain is richer in starch than the European. Some samples contain as much as 69 parts of starch in 100, with 45 parts of albuminoids, 3 to 4 parts of mineral matter, and over one part of phosphoric acid. Ground into a fine flour and mixed with one-third its weight of equally fine oatmeal flour to improve the taste, and we have an article for gruels for the sick excelled by nothing else, and far superior in every respect to beef tea.

Household Hints.

Kitchen Progress.

Even in the kitchen inventive genius has gained a strong foothold, entirely usurping the primitive methods practiced by our grandmothers in the performance of their domestic duties. Mechanical contrivances of all kinds supply what in former years required dexterity. Griddles themselves do the cake turning; eggs are beaten by a crank; the coffee bean is not only roasted and ground by machinery, but the drink made by a clever contrivance that considerably whistles when the beverage is done. A child nowadays may successfully fry Saratoga potatoes. An open work basket is set in a pan of fat with the article to be fried in it. The pan is furnished with a high handle, with a hook in the middle. The instant the thing to be cooked has assumed the delicate golden brown, appropriate to viands cooked in this way, the basket is lifted and hung upon the hook to drip and dry. There is no marring of the symmetry of outline of the fragile delicacies, no spattering of grease in the endeavor to fish them out, and there are no last ones to burn while waiting their turn to be taken out. Then the new broiler, which permits the article to be tightly shut in, obviating all danger of depositing it upon the floor or in the fire, but catches every drop of juice that may exude. When the broiler is turned over, the juices are thrown back upon the meat, which thus bastes itself. To those unsuccessful ones who have not yet arrived at the solution of the problem of how to cook a chop over a quick fire without burning the fat these broilers will bring success and relief from their perplexities. Those fond of nicely shaped griddle cakes will rejoice over a griddle made with a hinge in the middle. One side has a number of circular depressions into which the batter is dropped. When the cakes are done on the under side, the griddle is simply folded over on itself, which deposits them on their other side on the opposite half of the griddle, leaving the empty places ready for more. Then there are ironing boards covered and ready for use, and the various articles, light and serviceable and unbreakable, like buckets and basins and foot-tubs, made of papier mache. In consequence of these improvements, housework need no longer be dreaded by the unskillful.

GRAPE CATSUP.—Any variety will make the catsup, and it will be nice, but the tart is preferred. Let five pints of grapes simmer till they are so soft that you can rub all but the seeds through a colander with ease. After this is done add two pints of brown sugar, one pint of vinegar, two tablespoonfuls each of allspice, cloves and cinnamon, one and one half teaspoonfuls of mace, one of salt, and half a teaspoonful of red pepper. Put all in a porcelain kettle, let boil slowly till as thick as you like catsup to be. The grapes must first be picked from the stems, and be washed thoroughly, or they will be gritty and the catsup be spoiled.

SOUP MILK CAKES.—A quart of buttermilk will do as well as a quart of sour milk to make cakes, and some persons prefer it. A teaspoonful of soda is needed to neutralize the acid in either, and the soda and milk must be beaten to a foam with two teaspoonfuls of molasses. Pour the mixture into a bowl, in which three cups of flour and one of Indian meal have been sifted together with a teaspoonful of salt, and stir them together with a wooden spoon.

SCALLOPED CHICKEN.—Cut cold roast or boiled chicken as for salad. Season it nicely with pepper, salt, minced onion and parsley. Moisten it with chicken gravy or cream sauce; fill scalloped shells with the mixture and sprinkle bread crumbs over the tops. Put two or three pieces of butter the size of a small white bean upon each, and brown them quickly in a hot oven.

HOW TO COOK PEAS.—Gather them fresh from the vines, hull and wash them; place them in a pan with a little less than enough water to cover them; cover tightly, and in about half an hour take off the cover; season with salt and pepper to taste, a lump of good fresh butter, and let the water evaporate; stir them frequently, and when they are dry they will be ready for the table.

BEEF SALAD.—Young beets boiled, skinned and sliced make a very pretty salad if mixed in layers with hard-boiled eggs. They should be seasoned with pepper, salt and butter, and a little vinegar or lemon juice.

OUR CITY LODGES.

Valley, No. 30.

At a meeting of Valley Lodge, No. 30 held just on the eve of the Conclave celebration, a session of unusual interest rewarded those present. After the usual routine of business a recess was had to make the acquaintance of distinguished guests who were present. Sir Knight Lewis L. Bailey, P. M. W., and who also has been Financier of Quaker City Lodge continuously since 1877, in response to a call, said, among other things: "Since August 1877, I have collected $77,000 in assessments and received $70,000 from the Grand Lodge. We now number 1,126 members, and from Quaker City Lodge there have been four Lodges formed." John W. Van Horn, formerly of Quaker City Lodge, now a resident of this city, was also present. Sir Knight S. E. Murphy, P. M. W., of Central Lodge, No. 19, Harrisburg, Penn., also made brief remarks. He spoke in the highest terms of the A. O. U. W. in Pennsylvania with 15,000 membership. From him we learn that about one-half of the Lodges there pay sick benefits. About 9 o'clock, a large and distinguished delegation from Fidelity, No. 136, called in a body, having with them J. T. Rogers, Grand Master Workman. In an eloquent and logical speech he forcibly illustrated the benefits to be derived by fraternity. His speech was filled with apt illustrations and interesting thoughts and was received with much favor. E. M. Reading, Secretary of the Guarantee Fund Association, in forcible and pleasing words, related his pleasant experiences in standing within a Workman Lodge beneath the Union Jack in British Columbia. Geo. H. Stewart, M. W., of Fidelity, in his practical way, said that he was the "escort for the Grand Lodge" and was glad to be in such pleasant company, and to continue it he invited all, especially our Eastern visitors, to Fidelity, No. 136. District Deputy Danforth said this presence of distinguished visitors reminded him of the pleasant visit he made as the guest of the noble Workmen in the East. T. A. Farless, P. M. W., who may be properly titled one of the hearty workers, said a few words that were well timed and appropriate. Wm. Broderick, P. M. W., and E. F. Loud, P. M. W., spoke words of welcome to the Grand Master Workman, and the other distinguished visitors present. Bro. Mysell, of Valley, closed the speaking for the evening. Valley has raised the price of admission to twenty dollars; by card, five dollars and seven dollars and a half. At this date it has 957 members in good standing. The total number admitted has been 1,064. A number of those who have withdrawn are parties who have established the Order in other localities, among them T. G. Beatty, of Grass Valley, Oscar Robinson of Colusa, Fred. W. Bell of Eureka, and Wm. Munson of Greenville.

Since the foregoing was in type, we have received the following copies of correspondence, passed between Quaker City and Valley Lodges, which will be of interest in this connection:

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 1, 1883.

To the Master Workman, Officers, and Members of Valley Lodge, No. 30, A. O. U. W., of California—DEAR SIRS AND BROTHERS: At a stated meeting of Quaker City Lodge, No. 116, A. O. U. W., of Pennsylvania, held this evening, a resolution was unanimously adopted requesting our esteemed Bro. Lewis L. Bailey, P. M. W. and Financier of the Lodge, while on his trip to California, to visit, if convenient, Valley Lodge, No. 30, A. O. U. W., of California, and that he extend to that Lodge the fraternal greetings of Quaker City Lodge, No. 116, of Pennsylvania, and assure them that we hail them with pride as the only Lodge likely to be a rival in membership with ours. That as success and prosperity

have attended them in the past, we wish them peace, harmony, and continued prosperity in the future; that they may long be a power for the advancement of our noble Order. Though separated by the width of a continent, we are united in the bonds of a common brotherhood.

Fraternally yours, in C. H. and P.,
WM. H. JAMES,

Recorder of Quaker City Lodge, No. 116,
A. O. U. W., of Pennsylvania.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 29, 1883.

To the Master Workman, Officers, and Members of Quaker City Lodge, No. 116, A. O. U. W., of Pennsylvania—DEAR SIRS AND BROTHERS: On the 15th day of August an alarm was sounded at our doors announcing to us that an officer and Past Master Workman from across the continent were asking admission, and when the announcement was made that one of the brothers hailed from Quaker City Lodge, No. 116, of Philadelphia, Penn., our members were on the qui vive. Our Master Workman welcomed the brother in a neat and appropriate speech. The brother from Quaker City Lodge said that he had a mission to perform—that a set of resolutions had been offered by his Lodge calling upon him to visit a sister Lodge on the Pacific coast that has been and is a rival in membership. We earnestly hope that Bro. Bailey enjoyed the few minutes he had with us, and we hope that he may return to his home and Lodge with a satisfactory account of his visit, and that the time will not be far distant when other brethren will visit the Pacific coast, enjoy our climate, and find out the fraternal sociability of the Californians. And now as the ice has been broken, let us hope that a friendly correspondence will be kept up between the two Lodges, so that even if we are miles away we can always feel that there is a true brotherly love between Quaker City Lodge, No. 116, and Valley Lodge, No. 30, A. O. U. W. We trust that Bro. Lewis L. Bailey, P. M. W., will return to his family and brethren safe and sound.

Fraternally yours, in C. H. and P.,
A. G. LYLE,

Recorder of Valley Lodge, No. 30, A. O. U. W., of California.

Although we have devoted considerable space to this mammoth Lodge in this issue, our reports would by no means be complete without an account of the grand literary and musical entertainment given in their spacious Lodge-room, Laurel Hall, in Shiels' building, 32 O'Farrell street, last Wednesday evening, the 29th ult. The following was the programme rendered:

In a programme of such length and general excellence, it is hard to particularize without making invidious distinctions. Suffice it to say, that almost every member was encored—some doubly—and all deservedly so. The amateurs on the programme held their own excellently well with the professionals. P. G. M. W., Wm. H. Barnes, was particularly happy in his remarks, and his audience were thoroughly en rapport with him. The hall was filled to repletion, over 1,000 being estimated to have been on hand, and many were unable to gain admission. The only regret attending this, one of the most notable fraternal events of the season, is that a larger hall had not been engaged, as would have been the case if the committee had anticipated such a large attendance.

Memorial, No. 174

On Monday evening, the 20th ult., the brethren of Memorial held a very interesting meeting. Grand Master Workman J. T. Rogers, Deputy McKaig, Deputy Poland and a number of the members of Magnolia, were present. Interesting speeches were made, and many pleasant acquaintances formed. Grand Master Workman Rogers has been putting his time in to good account visiting Lodges during his recent sojourn in this city.

Presentation in Friendship, No. 179.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—After the business of the Lodge was concluded last Wednesday night, the 22d ult., Bro. Swan took the floor and made some "very disparaging" remarks concerning our honored P. M. W. Bro. Sherry, viz: That he had occupied the chair of M. W. for two terms, during which it had become apparent to all that he was eminently fitted for the same, and that his zeal, kindness, and fitness for the position were duly appreciated by the Lodge, who begged of him to accept as a testimonial of their appreciation, a handsomely engraved gold watch. Bro. Sherry, though thoroughly surprised, expressed his appreciation of the compliment in a feeling manner, saying that this event would become to him as one of the old landmarks to be forever remembered until his life course was run.

R. B. KITTREDGE, Recorder.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

Keystone, No. 64.

Tuesday evening, the 21st ult., found us in the pleasant Lodge-room of Keystone, in the Medical College building, on Clay street, in Oakland. A brief notice of this flourishing Lodge appeared in our last issue, the facts of which were learned from an interview, but an actual visit is better for it gives the chance to get acquainted with a pleasant group of brethren. Master Workman Schade and Recorder Alden, both fit well in their respective niches of usefulness. Bro. Alden is also the efficient Deputy of District No. 2, in this county, and has his official work at tongue's end, impressive, and letter perfect, as was evinced by the off-hand installation with which he inducted a newly elected brother on this occasion to the office of Overseer, recently vacated by a resignation. While paying no sick benefits, as such, yet Keystone does not lose sight of the great principle of charity, judging from the alacrity with which $25 was ordered donated to a sick brother who was reported by the Master Workman.

Newark, No. 169.

This pleasant little Lodge received and welcomed us Monday evening, the 27th ult. They number somewhat over thirty members, and meet in a Lodge-room especially fitted up for them, in the second story of Newark's handsome new school-house. A fair percentage of the membership was present, and a pleasant meeting had. A number of the members came from some distance in the country. Bro. Thomas Bedard of Niles, is the Master Workman, and Bro. Geo. Thom, Recorder. They have recently made a change in the times of meeting, holding meetings now only on the first and fourth Mondays of the month.

Haywards, No. 18.

The next evening (Tuesday), we visited the Lodge at the pleasant town of Haywards. This, as will be seen by its number, is among the early organized Lodges of the State. It has a live membership of over sixty, and although a number of its members who are farmers were detained from Lodge on this evening, by harvesting affairs, yet the attendance was very fair. They meet in the handsome and spacious Lodge-room of Good Templars' Hall. Bro. A. M. Bullock fills well the double role of M. W. and organist. Bro. Geo. A. Oaks, the gentlemanly editor of the newsy Haywards Journal, is the Recorder. The Lodge pays no sick benefits, as such, but like numerous other well conducted Lodges of the same kind, nevertheless looks closely after the welfare of its membership.

NAPA COUNTY.

Fortuna, No. 18.

This flourishing Lodge may be said to keep up with all the modern improvements, inventing them for herself when not obtainable elsewhere. We present herewith for the thoughtful consideration of other Lodges, a new feature and a good one, recently devised by Fortuna, whereby, if from carelessness or misfortune, a brother becomes delinquent on an assessment, he is not summarily suspended from the Beneficiary Fund, but otherwise provided for. And yet the small penalty attached will cause him to not repeat the experience too often. The following resolutions explain the arrangement:

Resolved, 1st. That the sum of $20 be drawn from the General Fund and placed in the hands of the Financier as a "Delinquent Assessment Fund."

2d. That on the 4th meeting night of each month the Financier shall (unless otherwise ordered) draw from said fund a sufficient amount to prevent any member from becoming in arrears to the Beneficiary for the current month, and shall charge the same to the Brother for whom paid, provided no member shall become indebted to the "Delinquent Assessment Fund" for more than the assessments of any one month, except by vote of the Lodge.

3d. It shall be the duty of the Financier to immediately notify any brother for whom he has paid an assessment out of the "Delinquent Assessment Fund," and any member receiving such notice shall pay, in addition to the amount paid, a fee of twenty-five (25) cents within twenty (20) days from the date thereof, which sum shall be placed in the "Delinquent Assessment Fund."

4th. Any Brother refusing to pay said fee of twenty-five (25) cents shall be deprived thereafter from the benefits arising from the "Delinquent Assessment Fund."

5th. The Financier shall make a report to the Lodge of all accounts of said fund the first meeting in January and July of each year.

The above, however, will probably have to be amended so that the first lines of the second paragraph of the resolution will read "on the first meeting night after the 28th of each month, etc," to agree with the last amendments to the Beneficiary Law.

SANTA CLARA COUNTY.

Mt. Hamilton, No. 48.

We met Bro. J. B. Church, Grand Trustee, during Conclave week. He informs us that Mt. Hamilton has a small boom on hand. On Wednesday, the 22d ult., they initiated fourteen candidates and received five petitions for the degrees. We are glad to hear of the prosperity of the San Jose Lodges in general, and cordially re-invite their members as well as all others to send us notes of news or personal opinion concerning the good work.

A. O. U. W. Chitchat.

For the year ending June 30, 1883, there were paid to the heirs of 940 deceased members $1,940,000, of which California paid to 142 families, $284,000.

In the publication of the Lodge election of San Francisco Lodge, No. 4, the name of the Overseer should have been Edward Stock instead of Isidore Blum.

Bro. I. Barnard, Recorder of Ventura Lodge, No. 173, writes: "We are having some new members join our Lodge, and think we will soon apply for a charter for a Degree of Honor Lodge."

District Deputy E. S. Thompson, of District No. 1, Placer county, writes us as follows: "I consider your paper, of which I am a constant reader, a great benefit to me in my capacity, and would not be without it."

The Workmen's Guarantee Fund Association, an institution with which our readers are generally familiar, has paid out within the past seven months over $15,000 to the widows and orphans of its deceased members.

In this State the Grand Master of the Odd Fellows, the Grand Councilor of the I. O. C. F., the Grand Master of the Masons, the Grand Dictator of the K. of H., and the Grand Chancellor of the K. of P., are all members of the A. O. U. W.

We acknowledge the receipt of a very handsomely gotten up card, which reads as follows: "Yourself and friends are cordially invited to attend the fifth anniversary party of Silver Spray Lodge, No. 3, Degree of Honor, A. O. U. W., at B'nai B'rith Hall, Eddy street, Friday evening, September 14, 1883."

We had the pleasure recently of meeting in the Grand Recorder's office Bro. E. Barrett, Recorder of El Monte Lodge, No. 188, of Los Angeles county. Bro. Barrett reports his Lodge in a flourishing condition. He expects to remove soon to this part of the State and settle at Fruitvale, Alameda county.

On Friday evening, the 17th ult., we had the pleasure of attending the Italian opera of "La Traviata," which was presented most creditably at the Grand Opera House by amateurs, for the benefit of Miss Adelina Speranza, daughter of the director of the Italian Musical Institute. Miss Speranza took the leading female character. We make mention of the performance here because she was very ably supported by Bro. J. L. Cahill, a member of Olympic Lodge, No. 127, who took the leading male character, and by his fine tenor voice and graceful acting won many favorable comments.

It is well to ornament one's productions with the jewels of poesy, provided that one does not "give himself away" too badly when it comes to crediting the authorship. We have heard lawyers in court adorn their pleas with quotations from the Bible and credit them to Shakspeare. We would suggest to the Recorder of Future Great Lodge, Mo., that the next time he has published one of his nice little essays on "Life" in the St. Louis Overseer, and bedecks its heading with the beautiful but trite quotation from Philip James Bailey's "Festus," that he does not saddle its authorship upon the "immortal Bard of Avon."

There is no way in which members of an Order distributed over a large area can become acquainted with one another better than through the columns of the fraternal press. A short note to the editor will occupy probably ten minutes of your time, and a sheet of paper, an envelope and a three cent stamp (not counting the moisture necessary to stick it) will pay the cost. Your letter will be read by thousands of the members of the Order, and if you make a "hit," your name will always be remembered. Then should you ever meet personally, you are already old friends. Try it.—Fraternal Censor.

Other Jurisdictions.

Michigan has no assessment for August, and was the first jurisdiction to pay Relief Call No. 3.

Minnesota and Dakota have an organ of their own now in the A. O. U. W., the Guide, an Order paper recently started at St. Paul, Minn., by E. H. Stevens. The Guide has our best wishes.

We are in receipt of the Indiana Recorder, a new venture in the A. O. U. W. journalism, published by J. L. Holtman, at Evansville, Ind. The new paper looks bright and progressive. We wish it success.

From the official report of Supreme Recorder Sackett for the month of June, 1883, we learn that the total membership is 122,428, a gain of 1,157 for the month. New York reports 17,929, and California 15,467. A year ago New York reported 17,224, and California 14,609, showing that during the year California has gained 808, and New York 705 members. The next highest States are Pennsylvania, 13,900; Illinois, 12,348; Missouri, 9,614.

Once more the graded assessment plan is being discussed by the journals of the Order. We cannot see how any good can possibly result therefrom. The A. O. U. W. was founded on the plan of assessing all members alike. It has been and is prosperous under that system to a degree not excelled, if equaled, by any organization. And we are content to let well enough alone.—Indiana Recorder.

The Loyal Grand Lodge of Iowa is having a satisfactory growth, and in time will win back most of the Foulkeites. We repeat our assertion of last month that the seceders have no moral or legal right to use the name A. O. U. W. We suggest that they change their title to "The Independent Order of Kickers," or "The United Band of Scoffers at Charity," or "The Disciples of Foulke," or something of that kind.—Pacific Overseer.

Maryland is having a phenomenally healthy time, judging from the following from the Baltimore Protector: "The members of the Order are to be congratulated—not upon the mere fact of their being no assessment for any one month, but upon the evidence which that fact presents (together with the additional item that there has been no death in the jurisdiction for nearly three months), that the Order is in an extremely healthy condition, and that its growth and prosperity is assured, which gives promise of light assessments in the future, and a happy and contented frame of mind for the individual members."

The Canadian Workman wants to reduce the age limit to forty-five years. We don't. What is the use of changing our laws? They are good enough now, and we believe in letting them alone for the present, or until our experience shall have determined many of these points impossible even to guess at until we get out of our teens. And graded assessments in this Order are simply impossible. Those who want that kind of beneficiary can find it in the Royal Arcanum, the American Legion of Honor, the Chosen Friends, the Royal Templars of Temperance and other organizations, but the Ancient Order of United Workmen was founded upon the level plan of assessments, and, so far as we can see, it is to-day a peer to any Order on the earth.—Fraternal Censor.

Nevada a Separate Jurisdiction.

Special Session of the Grand Lodge. A special session of the Grand Lodge of Nevada, A. O. U. W., was held in Gold Hill, on Friday, the 3d ult.

A constitutional quorum was present. The Grand Master Workman, J. W. Kinsley announced that he had convened this session for the purpose of securing the necessary power and authority for the Grand Lodge officers and Grand Finance Committee to make application to the Supreme Lodge for a separate Beneficiary Jurisdiction in the near future.

The said authority was unanimously granted.

The Representatives refused to receive any pecuniary compensation for their attendance at said special session. From reports received by the Grand Master Workman and Grand Recorder, the number of members in the jurisdiction was ascertained to be 1,992, thus lacking but a small number of the membership requisite for the status of a separate Beneficiary Jurisdiction.

This rapid increase—nearly 500 inside of ninety days—is unprecedented in the annals of the Order, in proportion to the number of members to start with.

Since the above was written, the membership has increased to 2,100, up to the 15th, when Nevada and the adjacent Territories of Utah, Wyoming, Idaho and Montana, inclusive, became, by consent of the Supreme Master Workman, a separate Beneficiary Jurisdiction. It is expected that the assessments will be reduced to a minimum, as the territory embraced in the new jurisdiction is among the healthiest in the world.

[Communicated.]

A Reasonable Conclusion.

A great deal of capital has been sought to be made on the part of insurance men against beneficiary Orders, such as the A. O. U. W., Knights of Honor, Legion of Honor, Mutual Companions, and kindred organizations, on the ground that the plan by which these Orders operated was unnatural and would end in disaster. In order to give pungency to the argument, a question of the following weight is constantly threatened to be dropped in their midst, in the way of a "settler": "How can you receive more money than you pay in?" This question is wielded by the insurance men with great power, and is constantly used to drive home their arguments. That the question is not suited to the argument, and is really misapplied, so far as concerns beneficiary Orders, will appear from a few considerations.

1. If a person is insured in an insurance company and dies the next day after paying his first premium, he receives the full amount of his policy, which is, of course, a great deal more than he has paid in.

2. Most insurance companies pretend to return in dividends to their policy holders, after a certain time, one-fourth of the premiums collected.

From the above considerations it would appear, if the argument of receiving more than one pays in has any force, it cuts no figure as between insurance companies and beneficiary Orders, for the former conduct their operations in the same way, so far as paying back to the policy holder or member more than he pays in. The real difference is in this, an insurance company bases its success on the amount of profit it can make out of the assured; a beneficiary Order bases its success on the number of persons it can insure for the least amount of money. The first is based on the theory of profit and accumulation of money; the latter is based on the theory of cost and aggregation of persons; the basis of each is the capital in the business. An insurance company charges a rate of premium per annum. This premium is fixed, and as it accumulates, is loaned out and a gain is supposed to be made out of the loans made, which, with the premiums collected, is intended to be sufficient to pay the policies as they may mature, and dividends besides to the stockholders first, and if anything is left, to the policy holder also. As this rate of premium is fixed, if too small, it would naturally result that the company would fail; if too large, the policy holders are imposed upon. But let us suppose the rate is just and fair so far as the insurance company is concerned. It does not follow that the beneficiary Orders charge too little, because if they did it would only result in additional assessments to make up the requisite amount; whilst if an insurance company should undertake to charge too low premiums, as their premiums are fixed and no more per year can be collected from the policy holder than a stated amount, having no further recourse on the policy holder after this, were the rate too low, the company must of necessity fail. A beneficiary Order can never fail on this score, for, whilst it is bound by the rate of assessment, it is never bound by the number of them per year, and can regulate itself by the mortality, so that it must appear from these considerations that a beneficiary Order furnishes the insurance at actual cost; and as the assessments are collected from time to time, as needed, from a large number of persons, the profits remain in the pockets of the members or stockholders. It is contended, however, that this large number of persons will in the course of time die out, and that the many who have paid to the few will not have the few or those who have died to pay for them when their time comes. This would, of course, be a natural result if the number of persons of this year had no further increase or accession to their numbers. But why should a popular Order remain stationary? Why should persons join an Order less next year than this? If the inducements are just as good, why will they not be just as desirous to make provision for those depending upon them as they were the year before? It is absurd to suppose that a prudent person will be less thoughtful, simply because it is another year. The safety of an insurance company when honestly managed is in its rates of premiums and the earnings it can make on its investments. The safety of a beneficiary Order is in the numbers it has to assess and its elements of growth and reproduction. Its steady increase of membership reduces the number of assessments which would otherwise gain as the individuals who joined at first neared their expectancy. To perpetuate itself, an Order must increase on the same principle that people are born every day of the year. This is its capital, and when impaired by deaths it must replace it by new members. The young members are the earning it makes. The great error made by many reasoners on this subject as against the final outcome of beneficiary Orders, is in the assumption that because the individual members of the Order have each an expectancy, the Order itself has an expectancy. Has a city, State, country or the world an expectancy? And yet people are dying off all the time, and in the earliest periods of life in a much more rapid rate than the later portions of life. What is the difference, so far as the simple accession to the ranks is concerned, whether you call it birth or initiation? The accession is there. Birth indicates the first appearance in the world, and initiation the first appearance in the Order. The latter may not be less than eighteen years older than the babe, and the initiate may have that much longer to live. That is all there is to it, so far as the principle of increase and expectancy is concerned; and it would be as reasonable to conclude, that a beneficiary Order on the steady healthy increase could perish and become extinct, as it would be to suppose that the world will some day end for want of population because people are dying off all the time and at all ages. The theorists who conclude a growing Order has an expectancy, see only the expectancies of the individual members without regard to the fact that each succeeding year a new series of persons are interposed between the expectancy of the series of this year, and each succeeding year another series. The age of the Order is thus maintained on the same principle as the average age of any well regulated population, and the result is, that whilst the individual members have an expectancy, the Order if it has the elements of growth within itself never has any expectancy.

THE extra edition of the FRATERNAL RECORD, issued last week, is a creditable production. It contains forty pages and is embellished with sixteen portraits of eminent Masons, besides many other engravings. The enterprise evinced by the publishers of the RECORD and PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN deserves the commendation of the Orders which they serve so well.—S. F. Call.

A SLANDER ON THE NORTHWEST.—The following paragraph was inadvertently published in our last issue:

A GOOD COUNTRY FOR THE DOCTORS AND UNDERTAKERS.—The following is clipped from an exchange, and will prove interesting to persons who intend leaving for the Northwestern country: "The undertaking business flourishes at Portland and elsewhere throughout Oregon. What with malaria, quinine and whisky, and the debilitating effects of a long journey in steerage and emigrant car, Death's sickle reaps a large harvest, the children especially dropping off like rotten sheep. But still the Northwest is filling up, and everybody is confident about the grand time coming."

We are perfectly sure that this is a great slander upon the State named, and the only object in publishing it should be to denounce it and warn all readers that it is not worthy of credence. No doubt the journey undertaken by emigrants is often a hard one and a severe test to those in delicate health and to children, but the idea that the mortality is great among them is wholly false. Most of them are strengthened and invigorated by a change of scene and air, and many who are not strong at starting become vigorous by the journey. The inference that Oregon is an unhealthy State is an unwarranted one. There is sickness there, of course, as there is everywhere, which is owing to various causes, but the climate of the State is salubrious and desirable. The Northwest is filling up, it is true, and the people are confident of its future, as they have reason to be. Those who are disposed to take part in the development of its rich resources should not be misled by false reports which bear upon their face the stamp of exaggeration and falsehood.

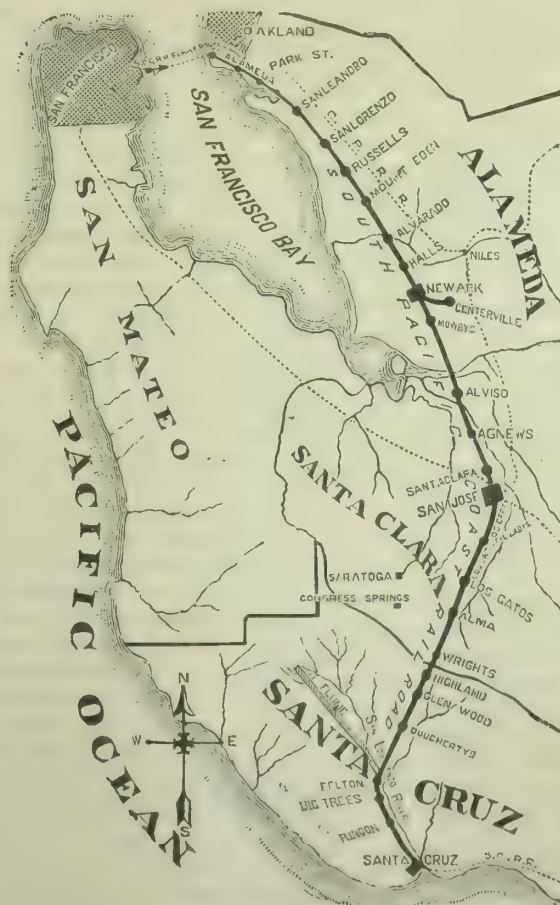

HOW TO REMOVE A TIGHT RING.—A novel method of effecting the removal of a ring which has become constricted around a swollen finger, or in any other similar situation, consists simply in enveloping the afflicted member, after the manner of a circular bandage, in a length of flat India-rubber braid, such as ladies make use of to keep their hats on the top of their heads. This should be accurately applied, beginning, not close to the ring, but at the tip of the finger, and leaving no intervals between the successive turns, so as to exert its elastic force gradually and gently upon the tissues underneath. When the binding is completed, the hand should be held aloft in a vertical position, and in a few minutes the swelling will be perceptibly diminished. The braid is then taken off and immediately reapplied in the same manner, when, after another five minutes, the finger, if again rapidly uncovered, will be small enough for the ring to be removed with ease.—Langdon Glas, des Hop.

COOLING DWELLINGS IN SUMMER.—Dr. Henry Macauley, of Belfast, has recently made a suggestion which, if followed in tropical countries, will turn the tables on the sun with a vengeance. He suggests that Mouchot's sun engine should be used to pump cold air into dwellings, factories, etc., pointing out that the temperature can in this way be reduced from 100° or more to 60°. He points out that not only will this reduce the temperature especially at night, thus rendering sleep possible, but fresh air will be guaranteed during the day, and the plague of flies and insects would be excluded. The weak point about this arrangement is that it requires ice. We think, however, adds Nature, that sooner or later in America, where the heat in summer is more distressing than in any other part of the world, and ice is everywhere, this arrangement, or one like it, is certain to be adopted.

ANTIQUARIANS are jubilant over the discovery at Cairo of the tombs of the Abassides, which scientists have searched for so long in vain. The hall containing the tombs is crowned with a dome of stained glass, and is magnificently carved with detailed inscriptions.

"WHAT a wonderful age of invention it is," said Mrs. Peterson. "I see they are now making wire cloth, and I'll have some this very week to put a seat in Johnny's every-day pants."

CALIFORNIA.

Views and Map of South Pacific Coast Railroad.

South Pacific Coast Railroad.

The map and cut on this page are representations of the route of the South Pacific Coast Railroad to Santa Cruz and scenery in this Switzerland of California. There is no railroad on the Pacific coast which, for a like distance, runs through a more fertile valley or more romantic mountain scenery. The bay steamers plying between San Francisco and Oakland are among the finest in the world. From Oakland the route is through the towns of Alameda, Alvarado, Newark, Centerville, Santa Clara, San Jose, Los Gatos, through the mountains and Big Tree grove, where nature in all her grandeur and loveliness is displayed; immense redwoods, the fragrant bay or laurel, the madrone and manzanita, oaks, pines, maples, sycamores and other varieties of trees. The train sweeps down through gorge and tunnel to the town of Santa Cruz—a "city by the sea," and a "paradise of flowers." It has a world-wide reputation as a health resort for summer and winter. It is a city in miniature, where all tastes and purses can be suited, and where many pleasant attractions are ever found. The Pacific Ocean House, of which Mr. E. J. Swift is proprietor, is one of the best kept hotels on the Pacific coast.

Horseshoes.

Horses were not shod in Egypt, Assyria or Palestine. The latter country was supplied with horses by the Egyptians. Solomon paid 150 shekels of silver, equal in value to $75, for each horse. This was a high price, the difference in relative value of a shekel and a given weight of wheat being considered. Isaiah speaks of horses whose "hoofs shall be counted like flint"—a valuable quality where they were shoeless. The Syrians and Hittites were supplied with Egyptian horses by Solomon, who thus turned an honest penny by this means.

Aristotle and Pliny mention the covering of horses' feet in stony places to protect the hoof from breakage and wear, but it is probable that such a covering was a bandage or boot, and used principally on long journeys. Suetonius refers to the dismounting of Vespasian's muleteer to shoe his mules. Wrappings of plaited fiber, such as hemp or broom, were used, as was also leather. In Japan the horses have clogs of twisted straw, of which a large supply is carried on a journey; when worn another is immediately applied. The American custom of shoeing would no doubt appear a barbarous custom in their minds. Captain Cook refers to the fact that the Siberians and Kamtschatkans use traveling socks for their dogs.

Camels in old times were similarly provided. These boots were drawn on over the feet, and it does not appear that iron or other metallic plates were nailed to the hoofs. Such boots were shod with metal for the rich. The mules of Nero were shod with silver; those of his wife, Poppaea, with gold. For less stately purposes mules were shod with iron. Homer mentions brazen-footed steeds, probably a merely metaphorical expression implying strength. Mithridates and Alexander experienced great difficulty with their cavalry, owing to the soreness of the unprotected feet of the horses in long marches. The first certain mention of shoes being nailed to horses' hoofs is in the works of Emperor Leo, ninth century. The practice of shoeing horses is said to have been introduced into England by William I.

In two respects the shoeing of horses in Holland differs from ours. First, to prevent slipping, the forehoofs are pared away to the toe, and the shoe so fitted that the toes do not touch the ground when the foot stands flat, the weight resting on the middle and heel of the shoe. Second, the shoe is nailed on perfectly flat and close to the foot, which is flattened to receive it—the iron is thereby deprived of all spring, and the hold of the nails is undisturbed. The frog comes in contact with the ground.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Artificial Production.

Chemistry is enabling us to replace animal and vegetable dyes, and to form artificial gems, or creditable imitations. Mineral oils replace animal and vegetable oils for illuminating purposes, and the electric light is treading upon the heels of gas. The expensive outfits for the whale fisheries are comparatively abandoned, whalebone and blubber from the huge marine mammals being less in request. Coral insects may proceed with their submarine constructions unmolested. The sea-tortoise will be pursued less eagerly for its carapace. The ostriches of the desert will be less sought after; and even the great pachyderms of India and Central Africa can be spared to be more usefully employed in extending the march of commerce. Under our enlightened civilization we can now manufacture our own whalebone, coral, tortoise-shell, ivory and feathers, without the need of penetrating into wild jungles and arctic or tropical seas for our supplies. The extinction of whalebone in commerce will not deprive us of our umbrellas, nor the female sex of their parasols and corset backs. Rattans have been converted into wallosin, and horn is shaped into pliable bones, while steel ribs also do duty effectually for baleen. In fact, there is no end to the artificial productions, and the list might be extended indefinitely, including artificial ice, which renders us independent of King Frost; artificial sugar, which we can make from starch or rags; artificial fruit essences; artificial horn, from seaweed; artificial wood, from compressed sawdust or straw; artificial leather, from old scraps of the leather cloth; artificial parchment, from paper chemically treated with sulphuric acid; and, as hides for leather become more in demand, we have come to utilize the formerly neglected skins of alligators, snakes, kangaroos, the porpoise, and other sea mammals and fishes.

THE ART WHICH PRODUCES A CABBAGE.—At a November meeting of the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences, Mr. Thomas Meehan exhibited a specimen of a cabbage which had, before blossoming, grown to the unusual height of three feet, the spiral coil of the stem, which was to the left, having been thus drawn out without any corresponding increase in the number of leaf scars. The cabbage, in its natural condition, is an insignificant plant without any such head of leaves as makes it of commercial value when cultivated. The desired effect is produced by sowing the seeds of the wild cabbage at a period of the year so late as not to allow the formation of flowers, in which case the vegetative vigor of the plant is expended in the production of the mass of leaves, which become better developed and denser as the process of cultivation continues.

MENT.

Resolved. That we consider the complete form in which the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN has for several years published the list of subordinate Lodges of this Jurisdiction, with the names of their presiding and recording officers, and time and place of meeting, is a great convenience and benefit to our Order, and we would recommend that each and every Lodge continue the publication of its card, and afford such other support to our excellent society paper as their means will allow, and further, urge each member of our Order to give it countenance and material aid.

The above was adopted by the Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., April 5, 1883.

Favorable to Advertisers.

The WATCHMAN enjoys a very large and influential circulation. It is certain that no other periodical is now patronized by a better class of industrial, professional and business men. In fact, our subscription list embraces many of the foremost business and representative men throughout the towns and cities of the coast. We have pride in making our paper "clean and handsome," and first class in all respects—to the benefit of both our readers and advertisers.

WATCHMAN PUBLISHING CO.

A. T. DEWEY, Manager.

ENTERED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER

San Francisco, Sept. 1, 1883.

The Ball is Rolling.

We are rejoiced to see that the idea suggested and elaborated in the last issue of the WATCHMAN has been grasped so quickly, and has already begun to take practical shape and bear fruit. We urged then that the present was an excellent time to begin to make preparations to get up a grand boom in Workmanship, to let the public at large know that we still live and flourish, and to make some demonstration that would bring in a troop of fresh recruits to our ranks.

Accordingly a meeting of the District Deputies and other prominent members of this city, was called by the Grand Master Workman, J. T. Rogers, and was held in the Grand Recorder's office Thursday evening, the 23d ult., to consider this question. Bro. E. F. Loud was elected Chairman, and Bro. E. M. Reading, Secretary. After considerable discussion upon the nature of the demonstration to be made, a resolution was passed looking to a general celebration of the Seventh Anniversary of the Institution of the Grand Lodge of the State, which occurs on Tuesday, November 13th. The brothers who were present are to constitute a committee to carry out this plan, and they invite the co-operation of the various Lodges in the vicinity of San Francisco, and also of the Grand Lodge officers, who it is expected, will all be present upon that occasion. We hope to be able to report progress continuously of this committee from now on to the anniversary date.

QUITE a comprehensive history of our Order is entertainingly woven into the addresses delivered by the various speakers at the reception given to Supreme Master Workman Fish, and which are reported elsewhere. They will pay the thoughtful perusal of every reader.

THE allusion made by Supreme Master Workman Fish to the Degree of Honor, in his address published in another part of this paper, is especially noteworthy, and should be read by all, now that that topic is uppermost.

The Social Feature.

In an edition largely devoted to the Degree of Honor, as is the present, it is perhaps appropriate to advert again, and more strongly, to the social feature of the A. O. U. W. In conversation recently with a Workman who is also a member of the Chosen Friends, he said: "Somehow I always feel drawn more strongly to turn out on the night my Lodge of the Friends meets than I do when my Workman Lodge meets. And I find that I am by no means alone in that feeling. The reason is plain enough. In the former we have, in addition to the details of business, the sociability incident to the mingling in our midst of our wives, mothers, sisters, or—or—well, any of the rest of the ladies. In the latter, too often we rush through the forms of the Lodge in a meaningless manner, and there is no other compensation awaiting one."

Our brother here struck the key-note of the failure of so many Lodges to make their meetings interesting. Time and again has the WATCHMAN dwelt upon the importance of developing to its full extent the social feature of our Order. Many Lodges have profited thereby, and now with entertainment of a literary and musical character make their Lodge meetings very attractive, and have a full roll of earnest, interested members. To all this, another feature is now able to be quite fully added which has had much to do with the growth of beneficiary organizations, such as the one aforementioned.

With the addition of the beneficiary feature, the Degree of Honor has taken a new lease of life, and bids fair to keep pace in steady growth with the main body of the A. O. U. W. Our Order is not now a fraternal one only, in the exclusive sense in which that word may be used, but it may also be called a family Order, including the sisters as well as the brothers. Many old-life Lodges have renewed their youth and pristine vigor, by organizing under their protection a Degree of Honor Lodge to which they surrendered at least one meeting night in the month; or in lieu of that, if meetings were desired oftener, the regular Lodge has met half an hour earlier than usual, dispatched its business and been ready to receive and meet with the Degree Lodge easily by 8:30 o'clock.

These meetings thus become in the fullest sense of the word, mutually beneficial both to Lodges and individual members; and all of the refinement and civilizing influence of woman are added to what may have before been a learned and fraternal Lodge, but yet lacked this cap-sheaf which makes its fullest completion.

At Home.

The Michigan Herald thinks the editor of this paper must have taken a vacation because we expressed a doubt as to when a member would become liable on assessments after reinstatement, based on the presumption that the Pengelly case had been decided by the Supreme Lodge, which, by the way, don't seem to have been decided after all, but only laid over for consideration.

The Herald makes the very common error of constructing the law as he thinks the law ought to be, and not as the law is. In the case of Bro. Pengelly, he joined our jurisdiction from Nevada, Aug. 23, 1882. He was from that date our member and entitled to our protection the same as any other member. Under the law, he was to us just the same as if he had been always a member of the Order here, and we issued to him a Beneficiary Certificate. The next month was issued an assessment notice by the Grand Recorder. Then by the plain terms of the law as it is, not as the Herald would have it to be, the Lodge was required to forward one dollar for each Master Workman in good standing who received the Master Workman Degree prior to the date of the death on which the assessment was made. If Bro. Pengelly received such degrees prior to the date of the death on which the assessment was made, he was liable, and his Lodge in duty bound to forward a dollar for him. If not, then it was not. At any rate we cannot read or understand the law as it is in any other way without a violation of the King's English.

This whole exemption business is but little better than a fraud anyway. It is impossible to carry out the ostensible intent of the law in actual practice. We believe—and the Herald will please pardon us—that such exemption is neither equitable nor proper. A member joins the Order and its protection at once begins to him. In turn his liability to meet a share of the common burden should at once begin also. No man ever has or ever will pay into the treasury of the Order one-half of what the Order will pay to his beneficiary at death; so the argument that a member should not pay anything for deaths that occurred before he was a member of the Order would have no force, even if there was anything in it otherwise. Let's join in asking the Supreme Lodge to repeal the exemption clause in the beneficiary law. What say you, Bro. Herald?

The Present Question.

Our reputation is at stake. We have undertaken to make the Degree of Honor a success. Under the old rules and regulations, such as they were, the Lodges languished and finally perished. It was believed by our California Workmen that with a full and complete code of laws, embracing in their scope a beneficiary feature, these Lodges could be made as successful as any others. And why not? If they fail now, we can then come to but one conclusion—that is to say, a fraternal society composed of members of both sexes is impracticable. Experience in other similar societies does not point to such a conclusion, and hence we have faith in our Lodges of the Degree of Honor.

Women as insurance risks are fully as good as men. True, at certain periods in life they might be accounted extra hazardous were it not that the danger in one regard is more than counterbalanced by their almost entire immunity from habits of drink and the dangers of accidental deaths, which two causes carry off a very large per cent of our male population.

We can see no reason why woman should not prove herself as valuable in a fraternal society as in the Church, provided some important end is to be accomplished as the result of her efforts. It requires no argument to show that the Church would fall but for her. The fact is patent. In the beneficiary feature of the Degree of Honor is given an object to strive for scarcely less holy than that presented by the Church—that of providing a protecting shield to guard our loved ones against the grim wolf of want.

We urge upon our Lodges the importance of this degree. All cannot become beneficiary who are eligible as members of the Degree, but those who are should become such if pecuniarily able, and the cost is but little less in proportion to the amount of benefit guaranteed than in any other scheme yet devised; for the reason that much of the usual expense incident to carrying on these organizations is in the Degree of Honor done away with. Let's have a boom now on the Degree of Honor. It will awaken anew enthusiasm for the A. O. U. W. where it may be waning; it will make our Lodge meetings better attended; it will bring our young men into the Order; it will give increased protection to our loved ones and to the homes of the people; it will make men and women better and happier. The end is worthy of the means.

WE had the pleasure of meeting Bro. V. P. Pritchard, of Stockton, in Valley Lodge, No. 30, on the 15th ult.

To Be Settled.

In our last issue reference was made to a case involving the question as to whether the certificate of a member of a co-operative beneficiary organization is a part of his estate. This promises to now become a test case to be settled in one of our Superior Courts. As a similar case has risen and been passed upon in New Jersey it may be well to briefly recapitulate the facts of the case here and add the New Jersey decision, which certainly seems to anticipate the decision that in justice, in all probability, will be rendered here. The executor of Fritz Hoffmeister, a member at the time of his death of the Workmen's Guarantee Fund Association of this city, has sued that Association for $1,000, alleged to be due the estate. The Association admits none to membership but members of the A. O. U. W. Fritz Hoffmeister had his certificate made payable "subject to his will." He died, leaving a will and appointing an executor without bonds. The will directs that after the settlement of his debts and liabilities the balance shall be paid to his mother, who is a resident of Germany, and directing her to pay out of the same the sum of $50 to each one of his three sisters. The will is silent so far as the Workmen's Guarantee Fund Association is concerned. The executor made a formal demand on the Association for the amount specified in the certificate issued to Hoffmeister, which demand was refused on the ground that the certificate was no part of the estate, but if a power of attorney from the mother mentioned in the will was presented, then the money would be paid her representative. Subsequently the executor did present a power of attorney, but it was defective in its direction. The German Consul of this city, interesting himself in behalf of the mother as against the alleged creditors of the estate, obtained a proper power of attorney, which also revoked the one given the executor, and presented the same to the Association for payment of $1,000. The Association was ready to pay the money on presentation of the certificate, which the attorney of the German Consul could not produce, because it was supposed to be in the hands of the executor of the estate. Pending the matter of the surrender of the certificate the executor sues the Association for the face of the certificate.

The case occurring in Jersey City is in many respects similar, and is as follows: A short time ago a Beneficiary Certificate was satisfied, and the money deposited in bank to the credit of the widow of the deceased. At the time of the brother's death there were several unsatisfied judgments existing against him, and the holders of said judgments seek by attachment to recover upon the judgment. The opinion of Judge McAdam, of the Marine Court, concurred in by other legal men on the bench in New Jersey, is as follows:

Where, upon the death of a member of a benevolent society, a gratuity is given to the widow or other person designated by the member prior to his decease, the beneficiary takes the gratuity free of the claims of creditors of the dead member, and it can neither be seized nor taken upon any such demand. The right to the money accrues only upon the death of the member, so that the money was at no time his, and it forms no part of his estate. Where the by-laws of the society make the money payable to the "legal representatives" of the deceased member, a different question arises. In this event letters of administration may be necessary to obtain the money, which would have to be administered upon in due course. But where the money is payable directly to the widow or other person designated, it is like a life insurance policy, which is collectable only by the beneficiary named in it. Such moneys cannot, as before remarked, be reached by attachment or execution founded on a debt owing by the deceased member.

BRO. R. NEWCOMB, Grand Recorder of the Grand Lodge of Oregon, was in this city during Conclave week.

Grand Recorder's Department.

HEADQUARTERS of Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., Rooms and 41, St. Ann's Building, corner of Eddy and Powell, in Francisco. H. G. PRATT.

REMITTANCES for the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN can be forwarded to the Grand Recorder. Always enclose statement, separate from the Grand Recorder's, of the amount sent for different purposes. Don't forget this.

LEAFLETS containing all the amendments affecting our beneficiary law have been sent to our Subordinate Lodges. It will be observed that henceforth suspension cannot legally be made till the expiration of the 8th day of the month. An official circular from our Grand Master will be sent out in a few days, likewise containing these amendments and other matters demanding the immediate attention of the membership.

WE have had printed dispensations for our Degree of Honor Lodges, and will forward one to each. The Supreme Lodge reserves the right to issue charters, but has none, so we have to do the next best thing, issue dispensations, good till charters can be had.

THE cost of organizing a Degree of Honor Lodge is now fixed at forty dollars. Of this, twenty-five dollars goes to the Grand Lodge for supplies and fifteen dollars to the Deputy. In some cases, no doubt, the Deputy would be willing to donate his fee, but in others he could not afford to do it. The set of supplies embraces everything needed for a Lodge except a seal and badges. After the organization, such of the members as desire can apply to become beneficiary. The additional cost to such will be—

- 1st. For expense of Medical Examination, $2.25.
  - 2d. For Beneficiary Fund, $1.
  - 3d. For Beneficiary Certificate, $1.
  - 4th. If a male, and over 50 years of age $3 additional for each year over 50 up to 57, beyond which age eligibility ceases.
  - 5th. If a female, and over 47 years of age, $3 additional for each year over 47 up to 50, beyond which age eligibility ceases.
- After the first payment all pay alike—50 cents a month. Any Master Workman in good standing of any age is eligible to become a member of the Degree, nor does old age bar any woman otherwise eligible, but no one can become beneficial beyond the age limit above specified. As soon as a Lodge is organized a Medical Examiner should be elected under the same regulations as apply to other Lodges. For making examinations of applicants to become beneficial he will be entitled to collect from the Lodge $2; and the Grand Medical Examiner twenty-five cents. The same rule applies to Lodges now organized, and where they have not elected any Medical Examiner, that should be done at once, for any eligible member of a D. of H. Lodge has a right to apply to his or her Lodge to become beneficial.

The Beneficiary Certificate Fee need not be remitted with the application, as we shall open an account with each of our D. of H. Lodges and send bills for supplies, etc., each month; but the Beneficiary Fund must be remitted each month without any call from this office.

Now that we have begun it is desirable that we get at least 500 beneficial members as quickly as possible, in order that we may never be compelled to pay on a death loss less than the full guaranty of $500. A little energy on the part of these Lodges would accomplish the desired result in a few months at farthest.

WE should like to have Grand Recorder Pratt of California tell us how they manage to suspend a member for six months' delinquency on dues and assessments on the Pacific coast. We are anxious for information here in Michigan. We had supposed that if a man was suspended for non-payment of assessments for the period of six months, that was a suspension under the Beneficiary Law, and was in itself sufficient that the by-laws were subservient to the constitution, and that when a suspension for the non-payment of an assessment has taken effect, that the only suspension that could afterwards occur was the suspension from the Order at the end of six months, provided for in the same article as that governing the original suspension. That the suspension from the Order for non-payment of dues was only to enforce the collection of the dues and could not occur when a member was suspended on assessments. However, this is not to the point; what we want to know is how they manage to get a man six months in arrears for dues and six months in arrears for assessments at exactly the same time.—Mich. Herald.

Bro. W. Warne Wilson, Grand Recorder of Michigan, is editor of the Herald. It is courteous that I should reply to the above, and will say, that we do not manage at all to have a member get six months in arrears on both dues and assessments at exactly the same time, but it frequently happens, nevertheless. From the item quoted above a new doctrine seems to be promulgated, to-wit: That a member suspended on even but one assessment cannot be suspended for arrearages of dues until reinstated in the beneficiary department. In other words, that a member cannot be suspended for dues while his rights under his Beneficiary Certificate are held in suspension. I had always supposed that the ruling of the Supreme Lodge on this point as found in the Digest, Secs. 296 and 297, was good law, and that a member so long as he remained a member in any sense, could be suspended from the Order for non-payment of dues as the constitution of the Lodge to which such member belonged might require. Possibly I do not understand Bro. Wilson correctly.

Taken to Task.

The Michigan Herald takes us to task. We did not understand the new law in relation to the reinstatement of members holding Final Cards, and those suspended for six months' delinquency of dues, and likewise those suspended for six months' delinquency of assessments. Nor do we understand it yet; moreover, the more we read it, and the more we get opinions upon it, the more we don't know with any sort of certainty what it means. The Herald kindly attempts to enlighten us, and still we do not understand, begging his pardon for our obtuseness of intellect. We think we know what it ought to mean. We know for certain what we would have it mean if we had the making or construing of the law, but as we have neither of these prerogatives, we are still in doubt. We have no right to presume that a law means anything different from, or more than what it says, unless other laws compel us to such a presumption. Our good Brother understands this, and so quotes in explanation of the meaning of said reinstatement laws, all the provisions of the Supreme Lodge Constitution and General Laws of the Order bearing on the subject, and likewise the provisions of the Constitution for the government of Subordinate Lodges under the direct control of the Supreme Lodge. We wish to hint gently that the provisions of said Subordinate Lodge Constitution affect the case in Grand Lodge jurisdictions just about as much as the constitution of a debating society. Grand Lodges make such constitutions to suit themselves within the bounds prescribed by the higher law. Hence they differ widely. And right here we wish to propound an important legal question: Can a Subordinate body make additional qualifications of eligibility to membership where the conditions of eligibility are distinctly stated in a General Law made by a Supreme body? If this cannot be done, as many able persons contend, and amongst them one of our highest officers, then how are Grand Lodges to provide for adding to the General Law in question so as to collect from an applicant for reinstatement any more than said general law provides for? The proper solution of this question will help us in coming to a correct conclusion in this business. But we submit that a general law should be so comprehensive and comprehensible that others beside constitutional lawyers could understand it, and be able to work under it with a reasonable degree of certainty that they are correct. We venture the assertion that of one hundred of our members, ninety of them would go wrong under this law.

Again, the Herald states as one of the "conditions of membership" that the applicant must pay into the beneficiary fund one dollar. We do not so understand it. It is not a condition of membership at all, and in no case can be required till after a person has received the Junior Workman Degree and become a member. The Herald, we opine, will find the complete elucidation of this subject a more ponderous undertaking than it before dreamed of. But we would not discourage our contemporary. A full and fair discussion of such matters cannot fail to result in good to all concerned.

In conclusion, we submit for solution by the Herald a hypothetical case:

John Jones was suspended from the Order July 1st, 1882, for non-payment of dues, and was so declared by the Master Workman. Now, it so happened that he was also just six months in arrears on beneficiary assessments. The dues are fifty cents a month, and our laws require that an applicant for membership by initiation shall pay a "proposition fee" of not less than $3, one dollar only of which shall be returned to a member if rejected. The Lodge shall pay its Medical Examiner $2 for such examination, and twenty-five cents to the Grand Medical Examiner, to be collected from the applicant. How much shall the Lodge collect from the applicant?

How much if instead he had been suspended for non-payment of assessments and owed five months' dues?

How much if suspended for dues, and delinquent on ten assessments levied in the five months prior to suspension?

Queries and Answers.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—Is it legal to install a Financier (of whom bonds are required) before he files his bonds? [It is not.—EDS. WATCHMAN.]

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—A Brother takes a withdrawal card entitling him to join another Lodge in six months. He fails to do so, but keeps up his assessments and dues after six months. Is any action of the Lodge necessary for him to continue his membership?

[No action is necessary. His membership reverts to his old Lodge, as he cannot be considered to have been withdrawn therefrom (but only at liberty to withdraw) until his card is deposited with another Lodge.—EDS. WATCHMAN.]

OAKLAND, Aug. 18th.

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—A Brother takes a card of withdrawal from our Lodge, and removes to Oregon, expecting to join another Lodge there immediately. Time passes on, and we do not hear of the deposit of the card, nor do we know his address, and as he becomes delinquent on dues and assessments he is finally suspended from the Order and so noted on the books of the Grand Recorder. It is afterward ascertained that he deposited his card on arrival in Oregon, and the Recorder of his Lodge notified us of that fact, but that from miscarriage of mail or some other reason, we never received the letter. What should be done that justice may be meted out to him?

[Justice, though tardy, should not be refused him. In a case of this kind no one seems to blame, and the only thing remaining to be done is for the Lodge that issued the card to take such action as may rescind former actions in the case, and have the errors noted and amended on their own books and those of the Grand Recorder.—EDS. DEGREE OF HONOR Lodges are forming rapidly. The latest petition received by Grand Recorder Pratt for a Dispensation for the formation of a D. of H. Lodge, is from Eureka, Humboldt county, in connection with Bay City Lodge, No. 111, of the same place. There are nearly fifty names on the petition for Charter members. Before they close their roll this number will probably run up considerably above fifty. This Lodge will make No. 27 in this jurisdiction, unless some other one gets in ahead of it.

WE have succeeded in closing up all the gaps in our Degree of Honor Directory, but some minutiae in regard thereto yet remain to be supplied. We call upon the Recorders of all such Lodges, either in this or in the larger Directory, to forward us the necessary facts to make the Directories as complete as possible.

NEW Lodges are being frequently instituted in California. The Order in that State may well be proud of their organ, THE PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN.—St. Louis Overseer.

Thank you, Brother Bacon. We are happy to be able to say as much for Missouri and her stalwart organ, The Overseer.

History of Masonry in California.

EDITORS FRATERNAL RECORD: In view of the fact that there are now in our midst Masons from all parts of our national domain, as well as visitors from foreign countries, drawn hither by the business and festivities of the Triennial Conclave of the Knights Templar; and as the progress and welfare of Masonry is always a source of congratulation to the good Mason, and to show that the beneficent principles of the time-honored institution are nowhere held in higher esteem than on the Pacific coast, and to further show how much has been done in the brief space of thirty-three years in extending its beautiful teachings and gentle influences through our western lands, I propose, as a matter of history, and perhaps, also, as of some interest more than a strictly local one, to briefly touch upon Masonry and its organization in California and the adjacent States and Territories. I shall treat of the subject from a general standpoint, alluding to individual members of the fraternity only as they have become identified in a prominent manner with it.

The Pioneers.

Of the few who first gathered around the altar of Masonry in this then far distant land, but a small number now remains, and in a few more years we shall all have passed away forever; and as we shall have performed well or ill our duties, so will our memories be cherished with affection or forgotten in the oblivion of careless indifference.

Of those whom I met in the Masonic Lodges thirty-three years ago, I do not think there are now two score living; and of those who attended the convention that formed our Grand Lodge in Sacramento in 1850, probably one could number all that are now alive upon his fingers. Of all the Masons in this city, I can now recall but two who were then present—our venerable brother, Jonathan D. Stevenson and myself. My vocation as master of a vessel happening to call me to Sacramento at the time, I attended the convention as a visitor, and was present at the formation and opening of our Grand Lodge.

Subsequently affiliating with the craft, I have since then attended every meeting of the Grand Lodge, whenever present in the place where its sessions have been held.

The First Masonic Lodge

Opened in California, and presumably on the Pacific coast, held its first meeting in the early part of October, 1849, in this city, and was known as California Lodge, No. 13. It held a charter from the Grand Lodge of the Dist. of Columbia. Of its first three officers, the Master, Bro. Levi Stowell, and its J. W., Bro. Bedney and F. McDonald, are both dead. Its S. W., Bro. Wm. Van Voorhees, the last I knew of him, was still living in our sister city of Oakland.

When our Grand Lodge was formed, the Lodge surrendered to it its original charter and received ours as No. 1 on its register. The Lodge being the oldest, it is also numerically one of the strongest in the State, and has numbered among its members the names of many who are closely identified with the early history of the State, and who are familiar to all, as citizens, and their memories endeared to their brethren by the mystic tie of Masonry.

The next Lodge to be opened was Western Star, No. 98.

Under a charter from the Grand Lodge of Missouri. This Lodge was opened at Benton city (near Shasta), on the 30th day of October, 1849. All its first officers are dead these many years. The well known pioneer and mountaineer, Bro. Peter Lassen, was its first J. W. His name is borne by the county where he lived, and more fittingly perpetuated in the name of Lassen's peak, that grand old mountain that lifts its snow-capped summit as far above all others near it of the Sierra Nevadas, as he did above others of his fellow men in his generosity and hospitality. His memory will always be cherished with affection by the pioneers, who so gladly welcomed the hospitable "Lassen's Ranch" as they crossed the last mountain range and looked down upon the beautiful valley of the Sacramento, after the toil, hardship and weariness of the trip across the plains in '49 and '50.

The next Lodge to erect an altar to brotherly love was

Connecticut Lodge, No. 75.

Under a charter from the Grand Lodge of Connecticut. Its first officers have gone over the dark river years ago, but the memory of their good deeds lives after them; for I find, by reference to the proceedings of our Grand Lodge of 1881, that the Masons of Sacramento, gathering around the nucleus of Connecticut Lodge, and by the laws of the Order held to be under its jurisdiction, had raised and paid out to the sick and destitute Masons of the place during the latter part of 1849 and the first few months of 1850, over thirty thousand dollars.

The committee of the Grand Lodge, to whom they made an appeal for aid, most truthfully says: "The noble generosity and disinterestedness with which a few Masons in one of our new cities have contributed so largely to the wants of the brethren coming in upon them from all parts of the civilized world, has afforded

A Brilliant Illustration

To the world of the excellence and strength of our principles, and has been most effective in commending our Order to the respect of those who are not of us, for this is certain, no sick, destitute or suffering brother has been permitted to die in their midst uncared for."

How noble a record! How the heart of every Mason should thrill with pride at the memory of those pioneers who so promptly and generously remembered the stranger who was sick or dying in their midst! And as they have mostly passed to the Grand Lodge above, let us who are now living cherish the hope that, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me," is a passport that needs not the rise of king, prince or potentate to admit them where "Well done thou good and faithful servant" is the Divine reward of all who were here on earth good men and true.

The two last named Lodges, with California, No. 13, in a convention duly assembled, numbering, perhaps, forty in all, took the legal steps to form our

First Grand Lodge.

After adopting a constitution, an election was held, at which Bro. Jonathan D. Stevenson was elected G. M.; John A. Tutt, D. G. M.; Caleb Fenner, S. G. W.; Sashell Woods, J. G. W.; John H. Gihon, G. Sec., and Bro. Berryman Jennings, G. Treas. Bro. Joseph C. Derby was appointed G. Tyler, and the Grand Lodge of California was opened in Ample Form for the first time at high twelve, April 19th, 1850. Although not as a delegate, but as a visitor, was I present, yet I cherish the pleasing recollections of the occasion as an epoch in my Masonic life to which I may, I think, reasonably refer with Masonic pride. Western Star, No. 98, surrendered its charter immediately, and became No. 2 on our register. Connecticut, No. 75, also surrendered its charter, and became No. 3 under our Grand Lodge, and also changed its name to Tehama. New Jersey, U. D., Benicia U. D., and Sutter, U. D., were soon thereafter chartered by the Grand Master, under instructions of the Grand Lodge, and we really

Began the Good Work

In May, 1850, with six chartered Lodges borne upon the roll. By the end of the year we had 10 Lodges in the State and one in Oregon. In 1851, we had increased to 19; in 1852, to 25; in 1853, to 35; and in 1854, to 53, with one U. D. in Valparaiso; also one at the Sandwich islands.

Since that time Masonry has flourished, not only in California, but in all the States and Territories west of the Rocky mountains. California, as the parent Grand Lodge, has planted the Order in Oregon, Nevada, Washington Territory, Idaho, Arizona and the Sandwich islands, and her name among Masons is the synonym of all that is generous, hospitable and fraternal. It may not be amiss to say something for

The Chivalric Branch

Of the Order, as that is the now great attraction which brings our visitors here. There are now 16 Commanderies in the State all in a prosperous condition. There has been an unprecedented activity in that branch of Masonry during the past few years, in fact, ever since it became known that the Triennial Conclave was to be held here the present year. A desire to take part in the festivities of the occasion has been largely the incentive, and the working capacities of all the Asylums have been taxed to the utmost to keep pace with the applications of eager aspirants; and although in comparison with the older and more populous States east of the Mississippi, we are still numerically but in our teens, yet our visitors will, I am sure, most cordially admit that for so small a number of members, we make a creditable showing, and that the brotherly love and hospitality of the Knights Templar of California will prove them to be true and lineal descendants of those worthy Knights of old, who extended to the stranger in their camp the heartfelt greeting, "Gold and silver have I none, but such as I have I give unto thee."

The A. and A. S. Rite

Of Masonry is comparatively new on this coast, the first Lodge of Perfection being formed as late as 1866, but for some reason unknown to me never became an active working body. The Rite languished until 1868, when the late E. H. Shaw, Grand Prior of the Supreme Council of the southern jurisdiction, U. S., took hold of the work, and by his zeal and energy established the Rite in the State on a firm basis. We have now a Grand Consistory in the State, with one Council Knights Kadosh, four Chapters Rose Croix, and eleven Lodges of Perfection owing allegiance to it, and one recently established to work in the German language in this city. The Lodge of Perfection, Chapter Rose Croix and Council Kadosh are in a sound, healthy condition, and hold their meetings with regularity. The attendance has been good, and the work complimentary to the officers. The Rite has largely increased its membership during the past five years, numbering among its members many from the ranks of the Capitular and Chivalric branches of the York Rite. We are not financially able as yet to have rooms especially fitted for our own peculiar work, and consequently labor under the disadvantage of a lack of the proper paraphernalia and accessories to make the degrees as impressive as the beauties of the ceremonies so imperatively demand. In behalf of the Rite, I fraternally invite such of the visitors who shall attend the Triennial Conclave, and are also members of the Scottish Rite, to visit us at our rooms in the Masonic Temple during their sojourn here, promising them a hearty welcome among the "Household of the Faithful."

WM. S. MOSES.

To All "Workmen."

Ever upward and onward is the motto of the A. O. U. W., and with the success of the Order is the Pacific States WATCHMAN'S progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be part-takers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest preventives of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

Work for the Advancement of the Order.

Let the family of each Workman to which comes the WATCHMAN, show to their neighbors who are not members of the Order, but who would make good and efficient Workmen, the advantages of this oldest of beneficiary organizations, and the one which they believe to be the best, as superiority is shown in each issue of this journal. If you are pleased with our paper, make it do the best possible work for the advancement of the Order, by circulating it wherever you can, and among those who may be induced to join it and become good members.

Notices of Recent Patents.

Among the patents recently obtained through Dewey & Co.'s SCIENTIFIC PRESS American and Foreign Patent Agency, the following are worthy of special mention:

HARROW.—Timothy S. Brown and George Williams, Roseville, Placer Co., Cal. No. 283,069. August 14, 1883. This improvement in harrows consists in the construction of the tooth-holding bars, their shape, the means for receiving the teeth, and the braces and other details of construction. They intend to couple several sections together, and by reason of their side bend, make the entire device cover appreciably more ground than it would if it were straight. The sections, being light, may be thus increased and a very effective implement provided.

LOCK HINGE.—Egbert E. Masters, Woodland, Yolo Co. No. 283,128. Dated Aug. 14, 1883. These improvements in lock hinges are in the pawl and ratchet mechanism by which it operates. The object is to provide a useful hinge for screen or inside doors, window blinds, gates, etc., which require to be held open temporarily. The door may be kept closed or in any desired position.

DYSPEPSIA, the bug-bear of epicureans, will be relieved by Brown's Iron Bitters.

The Secret

of the universal success of Brown's Iron Bitters is simply this: It is the best Iron preparation ever made; is compounded on thoroughly scientific, chemical and medicinal principles, and does just what is claimed for it—no more and no less.

By thorough and rapid assimilation with the blood, it reaches every part of the system, healing, purifying and strengthening. Commencing at the foundation it builds up and restores lost health—in no other way can lasting benefit be obtained.

75 Dearborn Ave., Chicago, Nov. 7.

I have been a great sufferer from a very weak stomach, heartburn, and dyspepsia in its worst form. Nearly everything I ate gave me distress, and I could eat but little. I have tried everything recommended, have taken the prescriptions of a dozen physicians, but got no relief until I took Brown's Iron Bitters. I feel none of the old troubles, and am a new man. I am getting much stronger, and feel first-rate. I am a railroad engineer, and now make my trips regularly. I can not say too much in praise of your wonderful medicine. D. C. Mack.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS does not contain whiskey or alcohol, and will not blacken the teeth, or cause headache and constipation. It will cure dyspepsia, indigestion, heartburn, sleeplessness, dizziness, nervous debility, weakness, &c.

Oakland's Tribute.

gree of Honor working hand in hand in this great field of practical benevolence. Then all praise and honor to the United Workmen and its sister, the Degree of Honor—first-born and fairest of the great family of fraternal beneficiary Orders. Their office is to carry joy and gladness into the hearts of the bereaved and to cast sunshine upon the gloom of the sorrowing. They shall endure while there is suffering to assuage or sorrows to heal, and only when these have ceased upon earth shall their blessed missions be accomplished. Then

"Think not, the good,
The gentle deeds of mercy thou hast done
Shall die forgotten all; the poor, the prisoner,
The fatherless, the friendless, and the widow
Who daily own the bounty of thy hand,
Shall cry to heaven and draw a blessing on thee."

Dr. Fish's remarks were greeted by long continued applause.

After a sweetly sung solo by Mrs. J. W. Stevens, entitled "O Loving Heart, Trust On," President Robinson introduced Past Grand Master Workman Wm. H. Barnes, styling him as one whom the Order in this State had been accustomed to lean upon. Bro. Barnes in one of his earnest electric speeches carried the audience almost by storm, and elicited applause throughout. In substance he said:

Address of P. G. M. W., W. H. Barnes.

It is always pleasant to stand before an audience like this if you have something to say, and something that they like to listen to. We are here to-night to pay our respects to this young electrical Order of the 19th century. Like the goddess Minerva, it sprang fully armed and equipped from birth, and has thus far made a record which is our joy and pride. I love to speak in Alameda county. I have here many stalwart friends who in all my official career have ever stood firmly uplifting my hands. During my busy and somewhat eventful term of office, I of course was not free from the criticisms incident to an official position of that class; but be it said to the credit of you all, I never received any but generous treatment and acts of kindness from the brethren of Alameda county.

The vast assemblage gathered here to-night beneath the banner of Charity, Hope and Protection has a meaning; and long after the immediate incidents of this reception shall have faded from the mind, the beneficial effects will remain. This wonderful Order, that first raised its head toward the fraternal sun in 1868, that in 1873 had only 2,000 members, has grown so rapidly that now the smoke of its incense arises from the altars of 5,500 Lodges represented by over 130,000 members, good men and true.

All honor to our good Grand Recorder Pratt for planting the Order in our midst. One week from this night will be August 21st, making only eight years since he introduced this Order here, and now behold its growth.

On the 16th of July, 1878, our number reached its aspired for membership, and in response to our petition came back the lightning message to Brother Jordan, our then Grand Master Workman, "Two thousand is sufficient—California is a separate Jurisdiction." Since then our growth in round numbers may be stated thus: In 1878, 2,000; in 1879, 5,000; in 1880, 8,000; in 1881, 11,000; in 1882, 14,000; in 1883, 16,000. The Order has progressed so grandly and rapidly that we have not time to enter into the details of its growth. Suffice it here to say that $6,000,000 have been sent in a golden stream to supply the wants of its widows and orphans, of which California's quota is $800,000. Of course this money does not mean that the former peace and happiness may be resurrected from the tombs of loved husbands, fathers or sons; but it does mean that mighty bulwarks are built before the home of the widow and orphans, which speak in language plainer than words to the gaunt wolves of hunger and destitution. "Thus far shalt thou come and no farther." These are the words expressed and not the mournful ones too often heard outside the pales of our Order, saying, "Over the hills to the poor house."

After again expressing the pleasure it gave him to signify by his presence and voice the great honor done to our worthy Brother Dr. Fish, Brother Barnes craved the indulgence of the audience to listen to a short poem. The verses were of a humorous vein and impromptu, having been jotted down but a short time before his coming into the room. We append the stanzas, which together with their pardonable Fish-y puns, and the circumstances of their production, the audience highly appreciated, if we are to judge by the applause which followed them and which accompanied all of Brother Barnes' remarks.

Do not deem me officious, if now I relate
Why the honor has come to our own beloved State;
And I think you'll forgive if at this time I trouble you!

With some facts in regard to the A. O. U. W.
E'er since that November, now six years ago,
That our Grand Lodge was formed, the whole world doth know

Our course has been upward, and onward, and grand,
And the fame of our work has pervaded the land;
By hundreds and thousands new members have come;
State by State have we passed, all distanced but one—
Great New York alone stands above in the line,
And to catch up to it's but a question of time.
The men that we've sent from this far distant West
As our delegates East, have been of the best—
Dr. Fish, Horace Pratt, Jordan, Taylor, and Brewer,
None abler, none nobler, none braver or truer.
They've worked with a will, both at home and abroad,
For the Lodge, and the State, and the national good;
And to recognize this, the Supreme Lodge did elect
Our good brother here its affairs to direct.
The honor bestowed we appreciate all,
And, as in the past, in the future each call
That upon us is made will be promptly obeyed,
And every assessment be willingly paid.

The high and the low—rank, file, everyone—
Hath a part and a parcel in this honor that's come From the National Lodge to this land of the West;
This symbol of trust in this home of the blest.

May I tell you, sub rosa, another thing, too,
Why the brethren abroad knew the Doctor would do?
They knew in his practice he was most proficient,
And in knowledge of law was in nowise deficient;
And as Supreme Master, he would be efficient,
And these unto them were reasons sufficient.

Lest you should call me superficial,
I'll say, in words not artificial,
"We, one and all, to-night rejoice
That the Supreme Lodge, by its voice
From California, made the choice Of Bro. Fish for its official."

Firm, inspired, let's go forward, joyously and true;
Never, never, cease our efforts while there's work
To do.
May the widow and the orphan throughout all our land,
As they think of blessings rendered, bless our Workman band.

Mr. George H. Carleton, who possesses a magnificent bass voice, then favored the audience with a vocal solo, entitled "The Three Fishers," and in response to an enthusiastic encore gave, with equal effect, "I Gather Them In."

Grand Master Workman Rogers' Address.

Grand Master Workman J. T. Rodgers, of Ukiah, Mendocino county, was then introduced, and in a brief but eloquent speech convinced the audience of his earnestness and ability. He said:

Although I do not desire to make a formal address, I do want to assist in the paying of this proud tribute to your townsman, the Supreme Master Workman of our National Jurisdiction. I wish to make but one remark as illustrative of the peculiar philosophy that lies at the base of the principles of our Order. Its sentiment is embodied in a song that has come floating down the centuries from ancient Greece. Prometheus, seeing the distress of his fellow-men, stole into the courts of Olympus and took the sacred fire from the altar in order that from its supernatural power he might bring happiness to his companions. So, a few years ago, another Prometheus from American soil, seeing that his fellow-men were in the darkness as to the futures of their families, took from heaven this fire, which has proved a great Promethean light to our hitherto difficult and obscure paths. Father Upchurch was not a man of great rank or high birth, but his instrumentality has duly proved what history continually teaches—that all great and beneficial revolutions have come not from the ranks of the aristocracy, but from the great middle classes. As he planned an Order whereby unity and fraternity might be combined with financial benefits for our loved ones, so, with the assistance of the host of helpers who sprang to his aid, he has grandly carried out his plans until they have grown far beyond his first conceptions, and prove that in the Workmen's dictionary there is "no such word as fail." If he who solves the problem of making two blades of grass grow where but one grew before is to be considered a human benefactor, what will you say of him who solves the greater problem of increasing happiness, who makes hearts happier and eyes brighter? He is the man who works out the great promise of humanity, making men more temperate and moral, better citizens, husbands, fathers, and sons. That is what the A. O. U. W. is doing, and that is what we all should approve.

Like the other speakers, Grand Master Workman Rogers received hearty applause. Following him, the audience were treated to a tenor solo, "Death of Nelson," by Prof. D. P. Hughes, and a violin solo, "Traumerie," by the accomplished violinist, Mr. S. S. Beel. Both were deservedly encored. President Robinson then read telegrams of congratulations from Past Grand Master Workmen M. T. Brewer, of Sacramento, and Clay W. Taylor, of Shasta, who were unable to be present.

Past Master Jordan's Address.

Past Grand Master, W. H. Jordan, was next introduced as one who had been connected with the Order since it numbered but 325 members, ten years ago. Bro. Jordan opened his remarks with a feeling allusion to the life and character of Dr. Hamilton, a prominent Workman, and Pastor of the church in which this reception was held, who gave up his life on the very platform from which the speaker was addressing them—truly dying in the harness. Proceeding he said: "It is scarcely ten years since we as an Order numbered hardly 300 souls, and now we are as the torrents that rush over the cliffs of Yosemite—the individual drops hardly to be numbered. Our wonderful growth has been remarked by our brethren of the East, and they attribute it all to the glorious climate of California, whose productive fame is outrunning the limits of heavy wheat and mammoth squashes. They have also learned that all of our wonderful things are not directly the product of soil and climate, but among our other great things we rear men. The long time I have associated as a colleague with our Supreme Master Workman, gives me authority to assure you that although Fish in name he will yet prove himself a whale in Workmanship." The speaker then narrated in graphic style the familiar story of the artist Murillo and his little slave Sebastian and made application of it as follows: "In the great gallery of fraternal life a new artist's work appears, the greatest of the present century—an unsuspected force and power drawn from an obscure source, and yet rivaling the best creations of old and educated genius. On the same wall with the art of the antique master, Masonry, with the portrayal of the wonderful career of Odd Fellowship, is seen glowing in beauty of form and outline and brilliance of color the late and great picture of the child Workmanship—such a wonderful picture—not of King or soldier, but a picture of peace, of homes protected by love and lighted by joy. May this wonderful Order always go on under the generalship of such able and fitting leaders as Dr. Fish."

After the subsidence of the applause which greeted Brother Jordan's earnest address, Mrs. Stevens again treated the audience to another hearing of her rich contralto voice in, "My Love has gone a Sailing." She was followed by Mr. Carleton with the song, "In that Celestial Dwelling." Both singers were applauded loudly and long. The musical part of the entertainment was under the able supervision of Professors N. L. Le Noir and D. P. Hughes, the former of whom acted as organist and the latter as piano accompanist. The members of the General Committee from the various Lodges, who so successfully carried out this reception, were as follows:

CALIFORNIA No. 1.—Wm. Harrison Wood, Horace G. Pratt, Joseph Hollywood.

BROOKLYN No. 3.—C. H. Townsend, W. H. H. Hamilton, E. W. Bradley.

OCCIDENTAL No. 6.—D. S. Moulton, F. R. Weigle, G. H. Garthorne.

The A. O. U. W. organs published in the United States now number nearly a score, and are, with hardly an exception, a great credit to their Order.

More Legal Nonsense.

Mr. Dods, who despoiled the Oakland treasury in order that he might have material for private speculations, has taken up his residence in the State prison for five years—so the sentence says. But this righteous judgment is, it is reported, to be imperiled because Mr. Dods' lawyer has a grand theory of innocence upon which he can elevate Mr. Dods to a higher court. This lawyer appeals in this strain. Mr. Dods did not intend to steal the money; he expected to replace it; he was infatuated, and desperate in his speculation, and his intention was not to steal. Now, in the intent to commit the crime lies the essence of the guilt, and as Mr. Dods' intention was good, or at least not bad, he cannot be guilty as charged.

This is the lofty logic upon which the case is to be appealed to the Supreme Court. Of course, it is all nonsense. Probably very few of the thousands of embezzlers and defrauders who have abused public and private trusts have intended to steal, but nevertheless, the money has been converted to private uses, the trust has been outraged and the culprits are guilty, and deserve the full legal penalty for their crimes.

Intentions are well enough in their way. Even good intentions serve some purpose—they say that hell is paved with them. But good intentions are not strong enough to lift a poor, miserable thief out of the stocks because he stole to meet his pressing needs; nor should good intentions free from guilt one who fritters away the public funds in private speculations. We hope the Supreme Court will sit down quickly and very heavily upon the counsel of Mr. Dods, and that Mr. Dods himself shall remain in durance until he have time to consider how strange it is that a man with such innocent intentions could be so great a rascal.

THE NEW POSTAGE STAMP.—The new design for the two-cent stamp is the head of Washington in profile, from Houdon's bust, placed on a plain tablet. Above the oval surrounding the head are the words, "United States Postage," and underneath the tablet are the words, "Two Cents." The stamps will be printed in metallic red. The embossed stamps on the two-cent envelopes will also bear the head of Washington. A four-cent denomination of stamps and envelopes, to cover double postage under the new rate, will also be issued. The design embraces the head of Jackson, similar to that on the present two-cent stamps and envelopes. The schedule of prices of stamped envelopes has been revised. Size No. 4½ (commercial size and commonly used by business men) will cost as follows, including if desired the name (excluding business employment) and postoffice address of persons ordering, together with a request to return, printed upon them, when ordered in quantities of 500 or more: 1,000 envelopes $22.20; 500, $11.10; 250, $5.55; 100, $2.22; 50, $1.11; 25, 56 cents; 10, 23 cents; 5, 12 cents; 4, 9 cents; 3, 7 cents; 2, 5 cents; 1, 3 cents. The new two-cent stamps or stamped envelopes will not be put on sale by Postmasters before October 1st. The two and three-cent stamps now in use will continue valid, and must be accepted in payment of postage whenever offered in appropriate amounts.

JUVENILE PUBLICATIONS.—We have received from J. H. Doherty of No. 529 Commercial street, specimen copies of three inviting looking juvenile magazines from the publishing house of D. Lathrop & Co., Boston. Babyland is a monthly, edited by the editors of Wide Awake, and is a perfect treasure house of pretty pictures and easy stories in large print for the wee tots, all for fifty cents a year. Our Little Men and Women is also a monthly, and while several steps higher in childhood's scale, retains all the beauty of typography of Babyland, besides having numerous handsome cuts and descriptions of Natural History topics. Its price is $1 a year. The Pansy is issued either in weekly, semi-monthly or monthly form, according as desired, the respective prices being seventy-five, forty and twenty-five cents. It is edited by Mrs. G. R. Alden and is resplendent with new and beautiful pictures, interesting stories and the other miscellany that boys and girls like so well.

THE individual who edits the beneficiary society column of a Philadelphia Sunday paper, becoming overheated in a vain chase after items, lets his feverish ideas exude in such painful pantings as this:

This Relief Law, in its practice, is beginning to get odious, and will have to be materially amended, or there will have to be a big smash some day. It is not the amount, but the principle—something on the old war cry of "millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute."

Another clear case of rabies. He ought to be muzzled.—The Protector.

DOCTOR INGLEBY, a life trustee of Shakespeare's birthplace museum, in a pamphlet agitates the opening of the poet's grave at Stratford to photograph his face and take a cast of his skull.

"WHAT a wonderful age of invention it is," said Mrs. Peterson. "I see they are now making wire cloth, and I'll have some this very week to put a seat in Johnny's every-day pants."

Through to Denver.

An Interesting Account of Travels—Grand Army Notes.

EDS. PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN.—In accordance with a promise made, I give you herewith an account of my impressions of the country through which I traveled on my way to Denver and return, where I went for the purpose of attending the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Skipping over the road from Oakland to Ogden, the scenery of which is quite familiar to most Californians, I will attempt to describe (in a feeble way) the country along the line of the Denver and Rio Grande Railway.

Starting from Ogden in the morning, we pass along the shores of the celebrated Salt Lake, reaching after an hour and a half ride the famous city of Salt Lake. But little can be said of this locality, other than has been chronicled by other tourists, except that one feels that he now stands upon the soil of that one spot in the United States where a plurality of wives is tolerated, with no disposition to avail himself of the privileges of that community.

Leaving Salt Lake City, we pass up the valley for several miles in full view of the Lake, and penetrate the mountains, to the south following up the river Jordan, the waters of which are said to be bitter. We could well understand the appropriateness of the waters being anything but sweet, were they flowing from the Mormon City instead of to it. In passing up this river the traveler beholds the most Magnificent Scenery

Imaginable. Climbing by rail, in a circuitous route, the Wasatch mountains until you reach the summit, you can look back and down upon a varied scene. Extending north and south with wooden slopes, high snow-capped summits, and inclosing lakes, valleys and forest, girded parks, east of it a vast, treeless, arid, and neglected region, would appear the desert lands; and westward (a bright spot in the view), Salt Lake and Utah valleys would meet the gaze, lying like jewels between vast mountains, watered by lakes and threads of silvery streams, and cultivated until hardly a foot of ground remains without its waving grain and patches of garden produce.

From the summit we pass down the canyon through Castle valley.

The Formations of the Rocks

Here are huge and grotesque, worn by the elements into every conceivable shape, sometimes resembling huge castles, cathedrals and forts, with their belfries, steeples and chimneys. Occasionally we pass between two high perpendicular mountains, with barely space enough to allow the train and the river to pass. After leaving this point, just at the setting of the sun, we go over a vast desert of some two hundred miles, and by sunrise the next morning begin the

Ascent of the Gunnison River,

Through the Black Canyon. Through this canyon it would seem that wonder, fear and admiration, were at their height, as the train winds its way up that river at the base of the high Rocky Mountains, with its ugly crags hanging over our heads apparently ready to fall. Sitting in the observation car, gazing several thousand feet directly upwards to the top of the cliffs, one feels an involuntary disposition to cling tight with his hand to the seat and press hard upon the floor of the car with his feet; and so on, the traveler winds his way through a multitude of similar scenes past Gunnison City until he begins the ascent of Mount Ouray through Marshal Pass, which is on the top of this mountain, and is called the Continental Divide, which requires the train to reach an elevation of 10,728 feet. The ascent is made by tracing and retracing in a terrace-like manner our course up the mountain side, the track being constantly in view below us for miles and miles. The height once reached,

The Descent

To the other side is made in the same manner. Coming down to the valley at Solida, on the headwaters of the Arkansas river, and down the valley of the same name, this river as you go down increases in size and is a very rapid stream, and goes through a very wild canyon, in which is the famous Royal Gorge. Running for miles through the most abrupt and high mountains that has ever been our lot to behold, we come out into a beautiful valley in which is situated the thriving

Canyon City.

Here is located the State Prison; and it is also here that from the several mines surrounding this place the ore is brought to thesmelting works; and it was here that the excursion train containing the delegates to the National Encampments, and the friends, were pleasantly detained for two hours, to attend a grand banquet tendered them by the citizens of Canyon City. They were escorted from the train by a band of music, the Mayor of the city, and as many beautiful young ladies as there are States in the Union, all dressed in white, each having a badge with the name of the State she represented. It was a fine affair and was well appreciated by the excursionists. Leaving this point, we passed through a fertile country, stopping at Pueblo and Colorado Springs, and

Arriving at Denver

In time to participate in the parade, which, by the way, was an immense affair, there being about 15,000 veterans of the war in line, besides the National Guard of Colorado, and many other organizations.

For four days Denver was filled to overflowing with strangers, and it was next to impossible to get a room or bed for love or money, and those who did get one paid dearly for it.

The National Encampment

Convened and transacted all of its business in its accustomed manner, the proceedings of which have been duly published. After the adjournment of the Encampment, the delegates and their families, at the expense of the State of Colorado, visited in the shape of an excursion several of the important mining points and other places of interest in the State by a round trip to Leadville, touching at Colorado Springs, Manitou, Pueblo, Gunnison, Solida, and many other places of note, occupying about three days in making the circuit, and finishing up by coming down the Platte canyon to Denver, which wound up the business, leaving nothing for the delegates to do but to find their way home, and to ponder over the many strange and pleasant sights which they saw, not to be soon forgotten.

Mark Twain's Historical Game.

Mr. Clemens has invented a new game, of which he gives the following account: "Day before yesterday, feeling not in condition for writing, I left the study; but I couldn't hold in; had to do something. So I spent eight hours in the sun with a yard-stick, measuring off the reigns of the English kings on the roads in these grounds, from William the Conqueror to 1883, calculating to invent an open air game which will fill the children's heads with dates without study. I give each king's reign one foot of space to the year, and drive one stake in the ground to mark the beginning of each reign, and I make the children call the stake by the king's name. You can stand in the door and take a bird's-eye view of English monarchy from the Conqueror to Edward IV. Then you can turn and follow the road up the hill to the study and beyond, with an opera-glass, and bird's-eye-view the rest of it to 1883. You can mark the sharp difference in the length of reigns by the varying distances of the stakes apart. You can see Richard II, two feet; Oliver Cromwell, two feet; James II, three feet, and so on, and then big skips; pegs standing 45, 46, 50, 56 and 60 feet apart (Elizabeth, Victoria, Edward III, Henry III and George III—by the way, Third's a lucky number for length of days, isn't it?). By my scheme you get a realizing notion of the time occupied by reigns.

HOOPS AGAIN.—It is evident that skirts are expanding, and that Queen Crinoline is returning to her throne. Fashions usually travel in cycles, and a regular fashion cycle is about twenty years. Crinoline was, therefore, not really due until 1890. There are plausible reasons for its earlier introduction. In the first place, the rage of tightness and skimpiness was carried to extremes that were either absurd or indecent, according to the figure in which the clinging or pulled-back garments clung or were pinned. A reaction from skin-tight was inevitable. The girl of the period must have a change. There was no alternative left for her but to take off her clothes or expand them. After due consideration, she, guided of course by the interested modiste and the anxious dry goods man, decided upon expansion. There is another reason hinted at in the last sentence—the dry goods men are inflationists to a man. Husbands may protest, storm, commit suicide, or go into insolvency; young men may hie them to their clubs and stay there, and the caricaturist may sharpen his pencil and gloat over the harvest that is springing up, or rather out around him, but still the expansion is coming, and it is impossible to foresee to what breadth it will extend.

THE money order department of the post-office will begin to issue the new postal notes on Monday next. They will only be issued for sums under four dollars, and cost only three cents each. They are payable to any one who presents them, either to the person to whom they are originally sent, to those to whom they may be given, or to the sender himself. The person who obtains the money on them has to sign his name, but no identification is required or questions asked.

The State's Exposition.

The State Fair will be opened on the 10th of September and continue for one week. It was originally intended to extend it over the term of two weeks, beginning earlier than the tenth, but this was made dependent upon the completion of the new Agricultural and Industrial Hall, which, while in a very forward state of preparation, being now largely under roof and inclosed, is not so advanced as to render it better suited for the purposes of the exposition than the present Pavilion and its annexes. There is every reason why the fair this year should be made one of especial prominence, and there is reason to believe it will be. There is in the State now an exceedingly large number of visitors from the East. Many of these have announced their intention of remaining until after the season of fairs, in order to see this State and its products at better advantage than is possible in the confusion of conclave week. But besides this fact, which is an important one, it is known that the regular tourist group will this year be much larger than usual, and we shall have with us within the next three weeks an unusually large number of observant visitors from all sections of the country, and many from Europe, and the most of these will make it a point to visit several of the fairs to be held, and especially the State exposition.

The State Fair will this year undoubtedly present the largest and best stock display ever made, and will be of especial interest to stock raisers. There is reason even thus early to believe that the pavilion exhibits will be more than usually varied and extensive, while the promise is that the agricultural exhibits will more largely and truly represent farming interests this year than heretofore, for it is noticeable that the farmers are awakening to the desirability of making such exhibits. There has been much severe criticism in the past at the apparent meagerness of purely agricultural entries at the State Fair. Now, those who are well informed know that whatever of justice there is in the criticism is not because of any neglect on the part of the directory of the society. To our knowledge the Board each year has urged upon the farmers to bring in samples of soil product, and the premiums have offered large inducements in that direction. The press of the country has not been remiss of duty in early urging upon farmers to send in the largest and best exhibits of their skill as soil culturists. But the agriculturists of the State have been very slow to profit by the advice, or to respond to the urgency of the directory. Except in fruits and stock, the exhibits by farmers have been meager, and it has devolved upon a few public-spirited grain growers and soil cultivators to make a showing in the proper department. Within the last three years, however, a greater activity among farmers in this direction has been noticeable, and there is now evidenced a growing disposition to fill up the agricultural department with a complete variety of all the yield of our soil, from wheat to tobacco, and from barley to cotton. The speed exhibits for this year are already assured of success, and will present some of the best examples of fine breeding in this State, and for which California is gaining an enviable reputation.—Record-Union, Sacramento.

THE PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE.—A conflagration a few days ago destroyed the building in which the Pacific Business College was located, and turned the well-known principals and their many pupils out from their accustomed quarters. The principals, Profs. Chamberlain and Robinson, were, however, quite equal to the emergency, and, securing temporary rooms at the Synagogue, Mason street, between Post and Geary, they resumed business and instruction with but the loss of a single day. Viewing the institution to-day, actively at work, no one would think it had suffered a whit from the conflagration. It will continue in its present location, probably, until it can return to its old and delightful quarters opposite Union square. Messrs. Chamberlain and Robinson deserve great credit for the vigor and alacrity with which they righted their institution after the disaster, and they should be encouraged and supported by a generous patronage from those who appreciate the practical and business-like education which they give their pupils.

COMPLIMENTARY SAMPLES OF THIS PAPER are occasionally sent to parties connected with the interests specially represented in its columns. Persons so receiving copies are requested to examine its contents, terms of subscription, and give it their own patronage, and, as far as practicable, aid in circulating the journal, and making its value more widely known to others, and extending its influence in the cause it faithfully serves. Subscription rate, $2 a year. Extra copies mailed for 10 cents, if ordered soon enough. Personal attention will be called to this (as well as other notices, at times,) by turning a leaf.

A Credit to Its Friends.

[From Hawley's Agriculturist.]

There is a newspaper on this coast which is worthy of special credit. We allude to the PACIFIC RURAL PRESS. It entered its field of usefulness in 1870, not as the first farming journal on this coast, but to fill the want of a first-class, reliable and enterprising home and farm newspaper. Its publishers (A. T. Dewey and W. B. Ewer, A. M.), journalists of long and successful experience on this coast and elsewhere, had the means in their hands and the faith in their hearts to issue from the first a handsome, illustrated, ably edited and faithfully conducted advocate of the highest and best interests of agriculturists of all classes on this coast. With all these favorable circumstances, their enterprise was a success from the start. We question if there is a journal in the United States which enters the family circle with both reading and advertising columns freighted with matter more entirely unobjectionable to the purest and tenderest minds of the household. Its circulation extending with remarkable uniformity among the leading, thrifty and intelligent agriculturists of the Pacific coast, has by its aid added "millions" to the material wealth of its many readers, and to the advancement of the community throughout which it has disseminated its practicable information. Its extra issues frequently embrace from 24 to 32 pages, the last number (June 3d) being a "Tourist's Edition," containing a map of the "Springs" and other places of resort in California, and a large amount of original and condensed matter concerning the natural and wonderful health resources of our State. Considering the freshness and extent of the original matter contained in its weekly issues, they may be favorably compared with the best agricultural publications of the world. All considered, it is not too much to say that the PACIFIC RURAL PRESS is really a credit to itself, its patrons and the glorious State it represents.

How Little Aleck Learned to Mind.

Alex's mother died when he was a wee, wee baby, and his papa had to be away from home to earn bread for his boys and money to hire some one to take care of them, but the hired care was not such as mamma would have given, and little Alex soon learned that by lustily crying he could generally get his own way; so, if crossed in any manner, he would set up such a screaming that he was usually given up to for the sake of peace; and now he was six years old and had come to the village school. Alex kept pretty quiet for a day or two, but could see no reason for sitting still or not whispering to Tommy Card in the next seat. One day Miss Thorn became much interested in the geography recitation, and we were all enjoying it hugely, as little Alex climbed upon his desk, and giving the lad in front of him a vigorous punch, called for his slate.

"Get into your seat and lie down until I get through with this class," said the teacher, sternly.

The little rebel looked around and brought Miss Thorn to a recollection of to whom or what she was speaking by saying, in quite an audible tone, "I won't!" The teacher bade Benson go on with his recitation, and, walking slowly and quietly back to Alex's seat, put her hand kindly on his shoulder, and said, in a low tone, "Alex, you must mind me and lie down in your seat, because you were naughty."

But the sturdy little figure braced itself, and the keen eyes looked defiantly in her face. What should she do? She felt, for the child's own sake, she must be obeyed; and, repeating the words, "You must obey me," attempted to push him gently over into the seat, but the little rebel caught hold of the desk in front, and sent forth such a shriek that it seemed as if every one in the village must hear it. The teacher, with a look of despair, glanced around and noticed the water-pail, full of water, on the bench near. In an instant she caught up the long-handled dipper and dashed half a dozen dippersful into the little screamer's face. Poor Alex caught his breath, and, as the cold water filled his open mouth, shut it and his eyes closely, and only opened it when the water ceased coming, to say, very mildly, "I'll tell my papa you have wet my clothes."

"Yes," said Miss Thorn, "go right home and tell papa, and get some dry clothes on, and no one is to go with you," and she took his little hand and led him down the aisle as if nothing had happened.

Before we were done with that recitation Alex was back with dry clothes and shining face, and so perfect was the cure that his screams were never heard again in the old school-house.

THE PEAR JAMES DID NOT TAKE. "James!"

"Yes, pa."

"There were seven California pears in that cupboard. Six of them are gone. Do you know anything about it?"

"I never took one of them."

"Sure?"

"Certain, pa. Wish I may die if—"

"You wicked, bad boy; how often have I told you never to use such an expression? Here comes ma; let me see if she knows anything about it."

Mamma says she saw James take at least five of them.

"You little rascal! How dare you tell me that you never took one, and here is only the little one with the grub-eaten side left?"

"Oh, pa, don't hit me. I said I didn't take one of them—and—and—that's the one I didn't take."

Pa relented. — Ecceville Argus.

Mining and Scientific Press.

THE MINING AND SCIENTIFIC PRESS is the leading mining
journal in America, and enjoys a larger circulation among
the more intelligent operators and workers in the gold fields of the world.

Established in 1860, it has firmly maintained its position as a reliable, progressive journal. The information given in its columns has saved millions of dollars to the practical miners, metallurgists, mill men, mine and shareholders
on the Western side of our continent.

Among its contributors are the ablest and most experienced mining engineers, superintendents and practical
miners in this country.

The Press gives a condensed summary of Mining News
from the most important mining districts of the country.

New processes and methods of mining are described in its weekly issues. New mining machinery and improvements are frequently illustrated and explained in a manner to be of great value to all interested in mining.

As a scientific and mechanical representative of the Pacific coast it is decidedly popular, and a standard journal
with the most thrifty industrial people of the Pacific States and Territories. Its authority is of the highest order, and its usefulness in its special sphere unrivalled.

Every public library, mining engineer, metallurgist
mining operator and intelligent mechanic and manufacturer, will find profit by its reading.

Subscription, $4 a year in advance. Sample copies

Good Land and Sure Crops.

There has been steady and tolerably rapid advancement made in the growth of a majority of the towns in Colusa, Butte, Tehama and Shasta counties. Especially is this so in the agricultural districts where the land produces at least fair crops in all seasons—wet or dry—as does the land on the Reading Ranch. Those looking for homes in California where diversified farming will pay every year; where wood and water are plenty and easy to be obtained, and other desirable advantages are to be had, should examine the Reading Grant.

Some 14,000 out of 26,000 acres of the grant remain for sale at comparatively low rates, in quantities to suit purchasers, on easy terms. Prices range from $5 to $30 per acre. The tract is between two and three miles wide, with the Northern Division of the C. P. R. R. passing centrally through its entire length. Send postage stamp for free circulars containing information about Shasta County and these lands, to the proprietor of Reading Ranch.

Dewey & Co., American and Foreign Patent Agents.

PATENTS obtained promptly; Caveats file expeditiously; Patent Reissues taken on Assignments made and recorded in legal form.
Copies of Patents and Assignments procured.
Examinations of Patents made here and Washington; Examinations made of Assignments recorded in Washington; Examinations ordered and reported by Telegraph; Rejected cases taken up and Patents obtained; Inter-ferences Prosecuted; Opinions rendered regarding the validity of Patents and Assignments; Every legitimate branch of Patent Soliciting promptly and thoroughly conducted.

Our intimate knowledge of the various inventions of this coast, and long practice in patent business, enable us to abundantly satisfy our patrons; and our success and business are constantly increasing.

The shrewdest and most experienced Inventors are found among our most steadfast friends and patrons, who fully appreciate our advantages in bringing valuable inventions to the notice of the public through the columns of our widely circulated, first-class journals—thereby facilitating their introduction, and and popularity.

Foreign Patents.

In addition to American Patents, we secure with the assistance of co-operative agents claims in all foreign countries which grant Patents, including Great Britain, France, Belgium, Prussia, Austria, Baden, Port
Russia, Spain, British India, Saxony, Britian
Columbia, Canada, Norway, Sweden, Mexico,
Victoria, Brazil, Bavaria, Holland, Denmark,
Italy, Portugal, Cuba, Roman States,
Wurtemberg, New Zealand, New South Wales, Queensland, Tasmania, Brazil, Ne-Granada, Chile, Argentine Republic, AND EVERY COUNTRY IN THE WORLD.

where Patents are obtainable.
No models are required in European countries, but the drawings and specifications should be prepared with thoroughness, by able person who are familiar with the requirements and changes of foreign patent laws—agents who are reliable and thoroughly established.

Our schedule price for obtaining foreign patents in all cases, will always be as low, and in some instances lower, than those of any other responsible agency.

We can and do get foreign patents for inventor in the Pacific States from two to six months (according to the location of the country) sooner than other agents.

The principal portion of the patent business on this coast has been done, and is still being done, through our agency. We are familiar with, and have full records, of all former cases, and can more correctly judge of the value and patentability of most inventions discovered here than any other agents.

Situated so remote from the seat of government delays are even more dangerous to the inventors of the Pacific Coast than to applicants in the Eastern States. Valuable patents may be lost by extra time consumed in transmitting specifications from Eastern agencies back to this coast for the signature of the inventor.

Confidential.

We take great pains to preserve secrecy in all confidential matters, and applicants for patents can rest assured that their communications and business transactions will be held strictly confidential by us. Circulars of information to inventors, free.

Home Counsel.

Our long experience in obtaining patents for Inventors on this Coast has familiarized us with the character of most of the inventions already patented; hence we are frequently able to save our patrons the cost of a fruitless application by pointing to them the same thing already covered by a patent. We are always free to advise applicants of any knowledge we have of previous applicants which will interfere with their obtaining a patent.

We invite the acquaintance of all parties connected with inventions and patent right business, believing that the mutual conference of legitimate business and professional men is mutual gain. Parties in doubt in regard to their rights as assignees of patents or purchasers of patented articles, can often receive advice of importance to them from a short call at our office.

Remittances of money, made by individual inventors to the Government, sometimes miscarry, and it has repeatedly happened that applicants have not only lost their money, but their inventions also, from this cause and consequent delay. We hold ourselves responsible for all fees entrusted to our agency.

Engravings.

We have superior artists in our employ, and all facilities for producing fine and satisfactory illustrations of inventions and machinery, for newspaper, book, circular and other printed illustrations, and are always ready to assist patrons in bringing their valuable discoveries into practical and profitable use.

Cypress Point, Monterey County.

Cypress Point is one of the famous points along our extended and interesting coast. It has exceptional charms for the naturalist, whether he go to seek the wonders of marine plant or animal life, or whether he desire to study the famous Monterey cypress in its habitat. It is also possessed of peculiar charm to the tourist who seeks the delights of natural scenery which both sea and shore offer in great variety.

To visit Cypress Point, one starts out from Monterey over a road which is serpentine and undulating, and is pronounced by all who have driven over it as unequaled in the State, and in many respects in the world, especially when its diversified scenery is taken into account. Proceeding along the wooded slope, carpeted with flowers of all colors under the sun, the brown, barren-looking moorlands of the Salinas plain rising and falling like a sea, with here and there bright emerald patches of homestead lands; and, beyond, the Gabilan range, with its serrated ridges and dark clusters of woods, the visitor soon comes upon the smiling waters of Carmel bay, as smooth as a lake and as blue as the heavens above them.

He now enters a well-shaded road, and catches glimpses here and there of the Carmel range, and then suddenly there bursts upon his entranced sight a panorama of sky, ocean and woods. The broad Pacific is only distinguishable from the heavens above it by its glittering sheen as the sunlight plays upon its heaving breast. Here and there little snowflakes of foam dance on the surface, or the white sails of a ship appear. The weird grove is soon after reached, with its gaunt, ghost-like trees, moaning in harmony with the ceaseless roar of the waves as the breezes play through their branches. Enter the forest, and as you pass through the flowery glades the fragrance of the shrubs and the songs of the birds fall pleasantly on the senses. Pass on, and crossing an open space of green turf, startling the rabbits and quail, you enter another grove—the sun-flecks through the moss-hung and bearded trees creating a pleasant, subdued light. It is a mystical collection of trees, and is worth a trip across the continent to see. There are no such trees elsewhere in the world.

An esteemed correspondent who lives in Monterey county, gave us, some time ago, a very interesting account of a ride to Cypress Point and its surroundings. We recall some of his paragraphs, as follows:

Such a collection of cypresses as nowhere else is found. Cypresses in their green old age; cypresses in the fresh verdure of youth; skeleton cypresses, erect, but barkless and bare; some branchless, broken and prone. Fantastic of form, gloomy in greenery, dreary in decay; bent and broken by time and storm, or yet verdantly vigorous, defying their onslaughts. Cypresses of enormous growth, rooted in rich loam, and stunted cypresses, perched on sterile rocks, rooted in their rifts; while at the rocks' bases the blue sea whitens into ineffectual foam, or dashes in driving spray over the dripping root-lets.

Rounding the point, we catch sight of Carmel bay, Point Lobos, and an extended stretch of iron-bound coast, while close at hand the sea breaks on huge piles of granite rocks and boulders. In some places are a few hundred

Workmen Should Improve.

It is related of two travelers who were once lost in the snow-fields of the Alps that both of them had become so benumbed with the cold that they had about given up hope and were fast sinking into that lethargy which in such cases fast leads to a pleasant insensibility or sleep which knows no awakening. They were such fast friends, however, that the stronger one by a desperate effort roused himself and said to the already unheeding weaker one, "Although I may not be able to save my own life, I shall make one more effort to save yours," and suiting the action to the word, he seized the other, and despite his feeble protests, half carried, half dragged him along, until the semi-congealed and sluggish life current began once more to circulate slowly through his veins. By degrees the weaker one began to gain strength until he could once more gain the use of his limbs, and in their struggles having reached an eminence, hope was enkindled in both their breasts by their desecrating help a short distance away, which soon came to their relief. To his surprise the stronger one found that his unusual exertions had overcome the cold in his frame and left him almost in a glow, and he said to the other, "I perceive that in saving your life, I have also saved my own."

The moral is obvious, and it hardly needs to be stated that this illustration is nearly a parallel with the experience of some Lodges, which by the untiring zeal of a few members, have been warmed to new life, and these members in giving life to others have quickened their own zeal and accelerated the beat of their own fraternal pulse.

Workmen then should improve. In helping themselves they help other individual members throughout the whole Lodge. Let a Lodge once become the intellectual and social center of a neighborhood, and its success is assured. All efforts towards making a Lodge meeting entertaining by recitations, essays, readings, music, etc., while they help the Lodge as a whole, help far more the individual members who make those efforts.

yards of rocky shallows, where the sea plays over the olive-green moss, and those darkensome pools abound, dear to the student of marine flora and fauna, where the hermit-crab walks about with his stolen house on his back, and the sea-anemone expands his snaky locks.

Soon appear the steel-gray shores of "Pebble beach," where low cliffs of amber rock are fringed with a continuous head of water-worn granite "shingle." Such an arsenal of round, "smooth stones" as would supply a whole army of Davids.

Our engraving shows a small piece of the charming territory above described. There are a few of the cypresses, a bold point of rocks and the placid waters. Let them serve as a sample of the sights which a visit to the spot would afford.

The Fireside.

August.

Barren and tawny now the hillsides lie,
Like flanks of sleeping lions, huge and lean;
In all the view they hardly can be seen
A living thing to rest the weary eye.
Come to the April showers, the brooks are dry
That chattered them in every small ravine,
And to the slopes that wore a robe of green
But phantom grasses cling. Yet, ere we sigh
That all is mournful, let us well explore
The windings of the canyons. Hiding here
We find a wealth of beauty, fairy dells
Where ferns and flowers grow and brooklet pour.
For, though with summer drought the world is dear,
There yet are nooks where happy spring-time dwells.

The Wayside Well.

He stopped at the wayside well,
Where the water was cool and deep;
There were feathery ferns 'twixt the mossy stones,
And gray was the old well sweep.

He left his carriage alone;
Nor could coachman or footman tell
Why the master stopped in the dusty road
To drink at the wayside well.

He swayed with his gloved hands
The well-sweep creaking slow,
While from seam and scar in the bucket's side,
The water splashed back below.

He lifted it up to the curb,
And bent down to the bucket's brim,
No furrows of time or care had marked
The face that looked back at him.

He saw but a farmer-boy
As he stooped o'er the brink to drink,
And ruddy and tanned was the laughing face
That met him over the brink

The eyes were sunny and clear,
And the brow undimmed by care,
While from under the brim of the old straw hat
Strayed curls of chestnut hair.

He turned away with a sigh;
Nor could coachman or footman tell
Why the master stopped in his ride that day
To drink at the wayside well.—Walter Larned.

The Ideal Knight.

The following sermon, an eloquent exemplification of an ideal Knight and a fitting climax to the magnificent Templar services held at the Mechanics' Pavilion, August 19th, was preached by the Very Eminent Sir Clinton Locke, D. D., of Chicago, Grand Prelate of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar:

"A good soldier of Jesus Christ"—II Tim., ii. 3.

When we say the word "Knight," there troops forth with across the stage of memory a splendid and romantic procession, a mingled gleam of banners, and lances, and plumes and glittering armor, pages out of Froissart, chapters of Ivanhoe and all the wondrous stories of the crusades. A Knight, to us, is a synonym for everything that is noble and generous, and chivalric, and tender and gallant. We cannot imagine a Knight in his glittering steel, mounted on his charger, or kneeling at the feet of the queen of beauty, stooping to anything base, or lending his aid to anything unworthy of a Christian or a gentleman. A bright ideal, and yet only an ideal, for when we come to look into the lives of these Knights, we find them very much like the lives of other men. The standard then was, of course, nothing like as high as it is in our time. It takes a great deal more to make a saint now than it did four hundred years ago. We certainly are not willing to think that in all that time the mercury has not risen in the thermometer of public and private life. But even according to the standard of that day we will find many knightly names stained with cruelty, criminality, dishonor and pride; Knights betrayed each other, Knights trifled with the honor of woman, tyrannized over the weak, drank deep and long, and it was the evil and vice of Knighthood that made the campaigns of the crusaders so fruitless. It was not enough to watch one's armor before the altar of the dim cathedral, through all the hours of the night; it was not enough to receive on bended knees the accolade of the venerable chevalier, chosen to preside over the ceremony; nor enough to wear on the shoulders of the surcoat, the emblems of the cross of Christ; there was needed then, as there has been needed ever, self-restraint, self-sacrifice, the practice of

The Christian Virtues.

And where these were wanting, there were flecks upon the polished armor and stains upon the shining sword. Centuries have passed since then. The gallant Knights of the days of Cœur de Lion and the siege of Acre have long ago moldered into dust and been blown about the streets. In venerable churches we pause before their crumbling tombs and muse over their romantic history. A vast gulf stretches between the procession of steel-clad warriors issuing from the gates of the temple in Paris, man and horse cased in chain armor, with the crimson cross glowing on the white surcoat, every man under the most solemn vows of utter separation from every family tie, half monk, half soldier, and the procession which shall sweep through the streets of your fair city this week, gay with cross and banner, and fluttering plume and flashing sword, composed of Knights who sell sugar and run railroads, stand in counting-rooms, plead in courts, practice in offices, herd sheep and oxen, many of whom never saw a castle, or touched a suit of armor. And yet, vast as the gulf is, it is a gulf only of customs and manners and points of view. The passions of the heart

Have Never Changed.

We love, we hate, we joy and sorrow, as men did in the days of Abraham. The warm tears course down our cheeks just as they did adown the cheek of Roman senator or English cavalier, when we stand over the dead body of one whom we have loved. The old, old story of youthful affection changes not. The sweet intimacies of happy homes change not, and above all, the service of God changes not, whether it be the twelfth century or the nineteenth; to it there is "neither circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond, nor free, but Christ is all and in all." Just as there was a terrible contrast then between the ideal Knight, as described in the code of Knighthood, and the real Knight, living in court and camp, so is there now a like difference between the ideal Knight as portrayed in our standards, and the living, breathing representatives who crowd these streets. Just as the external, then the cross, the vow, the public profession, brought not of necessity the internal piety, righteousness, unsullied honor and unswerving truth, so is it now. It is not enough to have uttered the most tremendous vows of upright living and holy service within the walls of the asylum nor to profess by every sign that men can use before their fellows, to be soldiers of the cross. There is needed in the Knight of to-day as in the Knight of old, self-restraint and self-sacrifice, faith and humility, courage and courtesy, patience and perseverance, to make his calling and election sure. Do not think I accuse you of not knowing and not feeling this, of not often lamenting your deficiencies, and wishing and praying that you were better. A man would be a poor vain fool indeed who never was lashed by the whip of conscience. But I do accuse you and myself of often forgetting our obligations, and in the wear and tear of life, in the glamour and glitter of parade, forgetting what it really is to have taken up the sword, and assumed the vows of a brother of the temple. That we may remember them better is the object of this sacred service. Here, on this holy day, with all the reverence and devotion kindled by the noble ritual, with the authority attached to the high office which the courtesy of our Grand Master and your own approval has conferred upon me, let me ask you to follow me as I paint

The Picture of an Ideal Knight.

Do you ask why I say "ideal Knight?" Because, if I should say a "real one," some might fold their hands and say, "I have attained unto it. I need strive no more." An "ideal" is something ever before us, above us, beyond us, not unattainable always, and yet, as men are, never likely to be thoroughly attained. Ever to be striven for, ever to be imitated, and the closer the copy the more perfect the realization. We do not put before our painters some village sign-post for their imitation, and the matchless sculptors do not choose for their model some ordinary figure taken haphazard from the street, but they study the faultless limbs of the Apollo of the Belvidere or the Venus of the Pitti. So, now, it would not be wise for me to depict some ordinary character, drawn to a hair from some one who walks among us. There would be nothing then to learn. All might say, "I am as good as he," or if not, "I can be without much trouble." It must be mine to draw

A Likeness not so Easily Imitated.

Perhaps, in its perfection, never to be reached, and yet evidently possible to be far nearer matched than we are willing to think—a real Knight moving in a real atmosphere, and yet an ideal Knight, as we compare him with ourselves and our fellows.

To make a statue, you must have a block of stone out of which to make it, and there is the greatest difference, you know, in stone. You could not hew the pure and stainless figure of the Chevalier Bayard which stands in the Versailles gallery out of an ugly, discolored, cross-grained piece of marble. Not all the genius in the world could make it look well. Neither can you make Knights Templar out of every man you find. God in His mysterious Providence has not made us all alike. Some of us are but little better than fools, and some exceedingly wise; some beautiful as Antinous; some repulsive as Pan; some gracious and some ungracious; some to hew the wood and bring the water; some to build the temple; some to drive the oxen, and some to offer them in sacrifice on the altar. God did not mean every man to be equal to everything, although the average American seems to think He did. Knights of the Temple ought to be picked men, tried men—men known and read by other men to be worthy of honor and confidence; men of warm feeling and generous heart; men of a certain culture and a certain education; men of a reverent spirit and high aspiration. How ignoble it is to select them for their dollars and cents. When a Commandery sinks to that; when its doors are open simply to the rich; when its object in taking in recruits is to pay its debts, or furnish money for its display, then, as far as any real good is concerned, its "race is run, its errand done." The hand, the awful hand, writes on the walls of its asylum: "Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting." Alas, that such Commanderies exist and are not merely phantoms which I conjure up, to alarm you into greater carefulness! Let us suppose that we have picked men, that our material is good, our chisels sharp, our workmen skilled, and let us proceed to build up the ideal Templar. The text I have chosen well expresses him in one single phrase,

"A Good Soldier of Jesus Christ."

Soldier expresses his courage, his manliness, his discipline, his esprit du corps. Good expresses his honor, his virtue, his reliability, his unselfishness, and Jesus Christ expresses the end and aim of his service—the obedience to Jesus Christ, king of kings, and lord of lords, the captain of the temple, the general of the whole army of the Knights, the flower of chivalry, the rose of all beauty, the lily of all purity, the Templar's master, the Templar's ideal, the Templar's Savior, here and hereafter. But while the text compresses in a few priceless words all that a Templar possibly can be, bear with me while I draw out in detail the features of this ideal Knight. Diamonds, you know, are cut in facets, and as we turn the beautiful jewels, new sparkles flash out at every varying angle. Let us put this Knight in various circumstances and consider him from each standpoint. And first let us take him in his home. One of the first words to express the knightly character is courtesy, a gentle, winning manner, self-sacrificing in all little acts, bearing calmly all the little annoyances of society, watching an opportunity to do some one a kindness, and careful ever to avoid the doing or the saying of things which wound the feelings or bring up unpleasant recollections. Now this courtesy expends itself most naturally on women and children. I thank God that there is no land under the sun where that courtesy is so marked as in this free land of ours. You read of French gallantry, of Italian refinement, of English breeding—it will not for a moment compare as far as true sacrifice of one's comfort for the sake of others is concerned, with the unvarying respect American men even those who know but little of the thousand conventionalities of polished society) ever show a woman or a child. To be a woman, unprotected and of good character, is passport sufficient, even in the wildest West, to insure you the devotion and the loyal service of every man you meet. Now that which is common to all Americans ought to be intensified by a Knight Templar. He ought to be

A Mirror of Courtesy.

Chivalrous, marked, distinguished for his protection of the weak, the defenseless, or the injured. The ideal Knight is known far and wide among all his society as a man who will never tamely stand by and see the weak under the heel of the strong, who would sooner die than insult a woman or impose upon a child—nay, who feels it his sworn place to draw his sword, if need be, in their defense. And his courtesy does not die upon the threshold of his own home, as is the case with some we all know. He is not suave and polite to all except those who are so unfortunate as to be linked to him by the most sacred ties. He does not think that, because a woman is his wife, she needs no courtesy, and is entitled to no consideration. No, it is within the precincts of his own home that he is most a Knight. It is there he is the best known to be forbearing, forgiving, supporting, encouraging. It is there he is the most esteemed, because it is there the considerateness of his life is best known. His home is such a home as only can be made by a true man, the pillar of the house, governing it not with any absurd assumption of an authority he knows not how to enforce, but governing it by love and justice, feeling it a headship which springs from a conscientious and broad determination to be above all things faithful to that holiest of trusts, the family which God has given him.

But let us look at

The Knight Templar in Business.

For these soldiers of the cross are only symbolic soldiers; the uniform, the sword, the banner, the word of command, the whole knightly discipline, is one vast emblem, setting forth before men the warfare with sin and evil which a man must continually wage, if he would keep the fortress of his heart from being overrun with a foul crowd of ignoble passions. Knight Templarism is simply a splendid unending drama, played on the stage of the world, partly behind and partly before the curtain; the drama of the contest between Christ and all the powers of darkness; the battle between good and evil. Apart, then, from the soldier, the Knight is taking his part in that wonderful business life which, coursing through every vein and artery of this wide empire, keeps it fresh and saves it from corrupting. There is no division of work where you will not find the members of our Order. They fill the Judge's chair. They are professors in colleges, lawyers of distinction, mechanics of undoubted skill, farmers happy in their fertile fields; some drive the engines which brought us hither; some sail the ships which carry the wheat from these busy shores. Wherever his ideal Knight finds himself in his business life, be ye sure truth and honor are to be found with him. Alas, there has been so much servility, so much corruption, so much business dishonor, but not tainting this ideal Knight! To be true is his first and last thought. He never forgets that Truth is the corner-stone on which the Order rests.

Whatever record leaps to light,

He never shall be shamed.

What he says is just what he says. What he sells is just what he represents it to be. His hands are clean from picking and stealing, for dishonesty in trade is nothing less than that. His business motto is the motto of old King David, in the bygone centuries: "Lord, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle? Even he that leadeth an uncorrupt life, and doeth the thing which is right, and speaketh the truth in his heart; he that hath no deceit in his tongue, nor done evil to his neighbors, and hath not slandered his neighbor. He that sweareth unto his neighbor and disappointeth him not, though it were to his own hindrance." Whoso doeth these things shall never fall; no, not even when all this world doth fall.

The Knight as a Patriot.

Let us view this Knight as a patriot. Of these our Order has furnished bright examples. They led on our armies in that great war which cemented our union. They poured forth their eloquence in Senate houses, and gave counsel in cabinets. The noble President, who so lately fell under the shot of the assassin, participated in our ceremonies, and had knelt at our altar. There is no legislative assembly in our land where Knights Templar are not among the brightest ornaments. But immediately I am met by a calumny. Men say: "Yes, what you say is true, and they are where they are, not because they merited to be there, but because they are Templars. The power of their Order put them there. It is a vast combination which uses all the powers of secrecy to advance the interests of its adherents." How often has this accusation been circulated far and wide by the fanatics who see in our society a phantom terrifying into silence all who oppose it. We who are within the sacred inclosure know how wild and empty any such charges are. We are taken from all political parties. We are as fierce Democrats or Republicans, free traders or protectionists, as any other men, and we do not lay down our cherished political opinions when we lay down our pilgrim's staff and take up our warrior's sword. I do not hesitate to say that any sensible Knight Templar would never for a moment think of voting for a man whose political creed was opposed to his own, were he ten thousand times a Templar. Such questions never weigh for a moment with a man's standing in his Commandery. He votes as he pleases, and so do all his brethren. I cannot conceive any political issue which would join in one solid mass the Templars of America, unless it should be an attempt to put down the Christian religion. Then every Knight would draw his sword, and shoulder to shoulder, as one solid phalanx, we would try our strength. Again, turn the jewel and behold

The Knight in his Commandery.

Is he one of those who once a year lounge in to pay their dues and cast a vote for a friend who has appealed to them to come? Is he one who uses his position merely as an entering wedge to business or to acquaintance, without a thought as to the good this noble and religious Order can be to himself, and through him to others? Is he a weak, disloyal, lukewarm Templar, a very millstone on the neck of those who would make the asylum one of the dearest spots to which a man can turn? Far be any such thought from him. To be sure he does not make his Commandery a miserable substitute for the Christian church, with its ministry, its worship, its sacraments. Alas! that so many should do that and Templarism has to take the blame of it, whereas there is not a word or a phrase in our ritual or in our teaching which countenances such a course. Twice a year, on Easter and on Ascension, it is our pride to show by a public attendance on religious worship, our devotion to the Church of Christ. It is to demonstrate that we are gathered here to-day, and hundreds on hundreds of the most distinguished clergymen of our land are among us. Think you they would be there if we taught that Templarism was enough for a man to profess, and that a Knight could safely ignore the Church of the Living God? No, our ideal Knight makes no such false decision as that, but he does prize as a refreshment for his soul, as a noble and beautiful way of enforcing the lessons of the life of the immaculate Jesus, as a touching exemplification of the whole Gospel teaching, the ceremonial of our Order. He takes care to be regular in attendance, earnest in his demeanor, prepared for the part to which he shall be assigned. The spot on which he stands is holy ground, and when the solemn services call for his attention he gives it as a tribute of his heart, and not as some mere lip service. Formality without heart was the vice of our ancient brethren. Outwardly so religious, so moved to faith and humility, really so proud, so sensual, so faithless, they fell and we, too, if we follow in their footsteps, shall fall as low. But there is yet

One More Point of View.

It happened once that there were brought together in a museum, portions, it seemed of wondrous statues—a foot, a hand, a leg. Gradually it was discovered that they were parts of one beautiful whole, and with joy they were put together. Lovely and perfect rose the glorious figure, but, alas! there was no head. That had not been found, and men wept to think that the matchless likeness should be incomplete, when one day a stranger appeared, drew from beneath his cloak the head, set it upon the rounded neck, and then all burst into a cry of admiration, for the statue was perfect. So I have brought together noble portions of the statue of the ideal Knight. I have built up the grand figure, but alas! it wants the head. Is it lost? Can I not supply it? Yes.

thank God, it is the mission of my life so to do. The one missing part I now produce; it is the Christian profession of the ideal Knight. We have Templars who are models of courtesy, beloved at home, beloved abroad; Templars who are as pure, unsullied patriots as ever breathed; Templars whose word in business is enough—no man would dream of questioning it—Templars devoted to the welfare of the Order; but unless they have added to that the humble profession of the service of Christ, the statue is without a head, the ideal is far from realization. Can you forget, Sir Knights, the moment when a cross was hung about your neck, and into your hand was given

The Sacred Scriptures.

With the assurance that nothing but a firm faith in the doctrines therein revealed could afford you comfort in life or death. Was that a form, or did it mean something? Oh, did it not mean that the Christian faith was to be the faith of every true and earnest Templar; and when I say the Christian faith, I mean no weak dilution of it. I mean the faith of the Apostles' Creed, which teaches me to believe three things: In God the Father, who made me and all the world; in God, the Son who redeemed me and all mankind; in God the Holy Ghost, who sanctifieth me and all the people of God. Whatever is said here and there, it cannot be denied that so long as our ritual is what it is, and unless our Order is torn from top to bottom, this is what we profess to believe. This is what the ideal Knight believes, and he adds to it the profession of the Christian virtues, the fruits of the Spirit, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Would to God all Knights Templar were as this ideal one; then what an enormous power for good we would be in this land. My brethren, I have done. Piece by piece have I framed the figure of the true Templar. I pray God that I may myself come nearer to it in the future than in the past, and I offer the same prayers for you. Let us before we leave this home pledge ourselves once more to it, as we have often pledged ourselves before the altar in the asylums where we congregate. Soon we are to take part in a splendid pageant. With embroidered banner and gleaming cross, and waving plume and brilliant uniform we are to march through these streets, and the standard under which we are to march is the Cross of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the motto of our march is, "By this shalt thou conquer." Is the world to smile as it sees us pass, and whispers, "A vast sham, a huge whited sepulchre?" or is it to say, "God bless the Templar Order, for it works for truth and righteousness." It rests with you as to which it shall be, and may God give you grace to withstand the temptations which will make it the one, and to practice the graces which will bring about the other.

Society Journalism.

THE great Conclave has given the "society editors" of the daily papers opportunities to use their most exorbitant adjectives and to announce the most intimate details of delicate doings. This fact shows how most people delight in the publication of the so-called society news. Of this peculiar taste for publicity, George William Curtis in his Easy Chair in the August Harper's writes quite knowingly in his description of the "Modern Jenkins." Mr. Curtis suggests that, instead of wondering who it is that likes to read of other people's clothes, and to know that one rich man dined with another yesterday, we should look upon the indefatigable Jenkins as a public benefactor, who reminds us that in a free and fortunate country butchers and bakers and candle-stick makers of every degree may amass huge fortunes, and rival in ostentatious expenditure the most barbaric of Asiatic rulers, and imitate the customs of a hereditary society. The Jenkins about whom Mr. Curtis's philosophy plays so pleasantly is not so great a mystery, as to his existence or development, as some people appear to fancy him. He understands his business quite as well as many a man who is engaged in a more useful calling. He knows what his market is and what its demands are, and if he fills space that ought to be valuable, and uses up good ink and paper with trivial details about the dress and movements of people who are or are supposed to be "in society," it is because he knows that he has a large constituency of readers who prefer that sort of thing to anything else that he could give them. The young lady who leaves town for the summer with the freely-expressed hope that "that horrid editor" will not hear of it searches the next copy of his paper for a mention of her name, and is disappointed if she does not find it. If she does find it, and is properly shocked accordingly, the chances are more than even that she herself found some way to transmit the news. We were not long since told by one of these "society editors" whom we chance to know, that he had trouble at first to get gossip enough to fill his columns, but now it is altogether too easy. He gets so many delicate compliments etc., which people write about themselves that he cannot find room for them all.

Catching a Wildcat.

The boat was anchored out a little from the land, and all was ready for the night, when a voice rang out through the still air:

"I've got 'im! I've got 'im!"

"What's that? Listen?" said Tom.

"I've got 'im?" repeated the voice, now recognized as belonging to Chitta, the Indian boy.

Without more ado the three boys jumped into the skiff, and in a few moments were ashore, stumbling over roots and splashing through water like mad, running pell-mell towards the spot where they had heard the voice.

"He is on the highland," cried Dick. "This way!" and leaping over a fallen tree, he disappeared in the jungle.

"Wonder what he's got?" queried Harry, as with perspiring face and torn garments he rested against a palmetto tree.

"The cat, of course," replied Tom, as he bound his handkerchief around his wrist where a sharp thorn had lacerated it.

"Well," quoth Harry, "if the wildcat is anything like those that I have seen in cages, the boy is welcome to keep it, and I don't see why I hurried so."

"Dick must be there by this time," said Tom, "and possibly may need our help."

There was a sudden crackling of branches, and Dick ran by, laughing and mutely pointing back. Tom and Harry ran in the direction indicated, and soon discovered the young Indian in a half-kneeling posture, holding tightly to something under an old root.

The something proved to be a short, scrubby tail, the owner of which was struggling frantically to crawl down the hole; and Harry said it was only a question of how long the tail would last.

Tom was thunderstruck. The bare idea of catching a wildcat by the tail made the well-read young naturalist shiver; but the ignorant Indian lad knew more of the nature and habits of such creatures than books could teach, and, therefore, when he saw the animal dive into the hole, he knew that, if caught by the tail, it would pull one way as long as he pulled the other. And as the hole was too narrow for the beast to turn, he was safe from claws and teeth until help arrived.

In a little while, the required help came in the shape of Dick, who, all out of breath, bore in his hand a pair of canvas overalls. Thrusting one arm through the lower end of one leg of the trousers, he caught the cat's tail with a firm grasp.

The negro now let go, and while Tom and Harry were gone to the camp for some twine, he pulled the top of the trousers leg over the hole and held it there securely. Dick then slowly pulled the frightened but ferocious animal backward out of the hole into the trousers leg, not letting go his hold on the tail until the Indian had gathered the top of the trousers together over the animal's head, and tied them securely.

When Tom and Harry returned, the cat was a prisoner, and Dick was scolding and laughing, by turns, at the poor, enraged brute's futile efforts to escape from the improvised bag, which danced and tumbled about in a most comical manner.—St. Nicholas.

Health Column.

Sea Bathing.

At the present time, says the British Medical Journal, it may be useful to recall the chief general indications and contra-indications which respectively sanction and forbid bathing in the sea. "Shall I bathe?" This is a question which thousands of health seekers will be asking of their doctors during the next few weeks.

While the stimulus of a fresher air, of change of scene, and of new occupations, together with rest from accustomed work, are the elements from which the weakly, the worn, the worried reap physical and mental restoration in a sojourn on the sea coast, it is unquestionable that bathing in the open sea is, in itself, a powerful restorative agency, which many persons may employ with very great advantage.

The universal experience of our race, through unnumbered ages, has shown the value of sea bathing in both preventive and curative medicine. A good rule, laid down by an experienced physician, is this: In all cases showing impaired functional powers, without any manifestation of inflammatory symptoms, in short, in those cases in which the exhibition of alteratives and tonics is indicated, sea bathing may, with proper precautions, be resorted to; it is contra-indicated in persons of plethoric habit of body, in cerebral congestion, in organic disease of the heart, in aneurism, and in all persons who have the inability safely to encounter a comparatively severe shock; while it is also to be forbidden at certain periods in which the female constitution is not prepared for the application of powerful remedies. Because it tends, in certain conditions of impaired health, to cause determination of blood to the viscera. Bathing in the open sea is generally unsuitable for persons disposed to congestive disorders of the lungs, kidneys, liver, and brain.

It is hurtful to bathe babies in the sea; children under two years of age are too young to bear with advantage the comparatively severe shock of a cold sea bath. In old age, when the bodily powers are unequal to a vigorous reaction, sea bathing may do much harm, especially in the subjects of extreme arterial degeneration. In suitable cases, and under proper precautions as to time of bathing and duration of exposure, a daily bath in the open sea is a valuable restorative. In individuals who are fairly robust, it is a stimulant, alterative, and tonic, promoting appetite, tissue change, and excretions, and bracing up the nervous, vascular, and muscular systems. Sea bathing is especially useful as a powerful and unsurpassed tonic in delayed convalescence from acute diseases, in many chronic affections, and in persons whose strength has become enfeebled by injurious excesses, by mental strain, or by unhealthy occupations.

Take Care of the Children.

Much may be done to prevent the croup by the exercise of good judgment in the care of children. Some parents make their children very sensitive and delicate by excessive prudence. A child kept in the house and treated like a house-plant can hardly be prevented from encountering a rude blast of wintry weather by the oversight of some one having the care of it.

It is better to toughen the child by clothing it warmly and giving it a good airing every day, either in walking or riding. The mistake should not be made of putting fur or woolen about the throat. Toughen the throat as you do the face. Be sure that the extremities are as warmly clad as the trunk of the body. See to it that the shoes are made to exclude snow water, and still avoid the use of rubbers, unless, if necessary, a pair of low sandals be used to protect the soles of the feet. One more hint to over-prudent mothers: Do not cover the child too warmly when put to bed. Nothing is more liable to give a child a cold than to be muffled in too many blankets or spreads of some kind, for as soon as it gets into an uncomfortable perspiration it will free itself from the cumbersome covering, and then by a sudden checking of the perspiration, contract a cold. There is absolutely more danger from excessive than too little covering.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

For poison ivy, bathe the parts in a decoction of hemlock boughs, or of oak leaves, or with a teaspoonful of copolas (sulphate of iron) in a small tea-cupful of boiling water; or rub wet salt on the affected parts. If the blisters are broken, one application of niter will be sufficient.

A man breathes about eighteen times a minute, and uses 3,000 cubic feet of air per hour.

Household Hints.

Man as Housekeeper.

Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, writing to the Christian Union of his camp life in the woods, seems so applicable to the many instances experienced by the writer, and perhaps some of our readers and campers, either in the mountains or by the sea, will appreciate the following advice of the eminent divine:

All men ought to go to the woods, and religiously do their own washing and general work—such as sewing, cooking, housekeeping and dish washing. The work of women is not spoken of sensibly by men till they have done it themselves. Gentlemen readers, it is easy to talk! But just try it on a very moderate scale once, and you'll honor working women more than ever. Do as I have done—do a wash of six pieces, and then 'remember that a woman turns off 200 pieces in a day. Look at your watch and see how long it takes you. Look at your soap and see how much you have used. Look at your white clothes, handkerchief or towel, and see what you have done, or not done, and never again speak harshly of or to a woman on wash day, nor of laundry work as if it were unskilled labor. Try it. Don't talk. Don't sneer. Try it. A sympathetic gentleman, having washed two dozen pieces, will never change his shirt again without a glow of reverence and gratitude. She did this. A similar and salutary consciousness will come to him who darns his own socks, patches his own trousers, splices his suspenders and washes dishes. Look not every man upon his own things, but every man also upon the work of a woman. Such an experience in the woods will go far toward settling the woman question, by teaching us that we are all members one of another, and there must be no schism.

MACARONI IN ITALIAN FASHION.—Cut into small, thin pieces two pounds of fresh lean beef, slice a moderate-sized onion, chop and then pound in a mortar one-quarter of a pound of fat bacon; fry the bacon and onion a golden color, add the beef, turn all frequently. When the meat is slightly colored, turn the contents of the fryingpan into a hot saucepan, add one pint of boiling water, boil one minute, skim thoroughly and sprinkle in a salt spoonful of salt and a little pepper, skim occasionally and simmer gently for two hours; strain through a hair sieve, and when cold take off the fat; make the gravy hot, and mix with a fourth part half a teaspoonful of tomato paste or a tablespoonful of tomato sauce, then add by degrees the rest of the gravy, stir over a slow, clear fire and boil three minutes; have in a saucepan a tablespoonful of salt and one gallon of fast boiling water, throw in half a pound of Naples macaroni, make sure that both ends of the macaroni are covered with water; boil quickly twenty to twenty-five minutes, drain in a colander, shake it before the fire a minute or two, to insure the macaroni being perfectly dry, then place it on a hot dish, with two or three tablespoonfuls of grated Parmesan cheese. Pour the hot beef gravy over and mix well; send to table grated Parmesan. Macaroni dressed thus should commence the dinner.

APPLE CUSTARD.—Peel and core eight or ten medium-sized apples; lay them in cold water until the syrup is prepared in which to boil them; make a syrup with a teacupful of water, the grated yellow rind and juice of one lemon, and a few pieces of stick cinnamon. When the syrup becomes clear put in the apples and simmer until soft. Take up the apples in a draining spoon, and put them in the dish in which they are to be served; boil up the syrup and pour over them; make a soft custard with the yolks of four eggs, three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, and a scant quart of milk. When cold spread it over the apples. Whip the whites of the eggs, flavor with lemon, and place on the custard. Color in the oven.

MUSHROOM SAUCE.—Take two quarts of mushrooms and stew them until tender in half a pint of water; pour off the water, and let them get cold, then put in one pint of cream and a little of the water in which they were boiled, with three ounces of butter rolled in flour, and a dash of cayenne pepper; add salt to taste. Stew very gently until the mushrooms are hot and thoroughly cooked.

BAKED BERRY ROLLS.—Roll biscuit dough thin in the form of a large square or into small squares. Spread over with berries. Roll the crust, and put into a dripping pan close together until full; then put into the pan water, sugar and pieces of butter. Bake them. Serve with any of the pudding sauces.

POTATO PUFF.—Dress three cupfuls of well-boiled and mashed potatoes with salt, butter and cream, making them moist. Beat well with an egg whisk, and when light and smooth, add three eggs well beaten separately. Beat again thoroughly, pile high in a dish, and color in a quick oven.

SALAD.—A very good salad may be made of cucumbers and tomatoes. Line the salad-bowl with lettuce and fill it with sliced tomatoes and cucumbers in alternate layers, with salt, sugar and pepper on each layer, and dress with salad dressing.

Lodge Locals.

Readers are invited to send their names to the Watchman, and find suitable reading here for "Good of the Order."

OUR CITY LODGES.

Magnolia, No. 41.

This thrifty and progressive Lodge is steadily gaining in membership. On Monday evening, September 3d, one candidate received the J. W. degree and one the M. W. degree. The work was admirably done and Deputy Danforth took occasion to pay the officers a high compliment, his criticisms being very few. After the installation of two officers who were elected to fill vacancies, a general good time was had in short speeches and instructive lessons. Deputy Danforth in the course of his remarks informed the Lodge that an arrangement had been made by the Fraternal Institute to form a team of the several deputies to visit our city Lodges in succession to perfect the "work." At the conclusion of his interesting remarks, in the course of which he said that the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN was growing more interesting as a social and family paper, the Lodge unanimously passed a vote of thanks to Deputy Danforth for his efficient services. Bro. Geo. Jager, at request, gave some fine selections on the harmonica that were so pleasing that he had several calls.

Franklin, No. 44.

As will be seen by reference to the resolutions published elsewhere, this Lodge has met with a sad bereavement, having lost two of its members by death in one week. Bro. Reid was killed by a runaway team, and Bro. Page died suddenly of erysipelas. Franklin has the deepest sympathy of all fellow Workmen in its deep affliction, as have also the sorrowing families of the deceased brothers.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

Hearts of Oak, No. 61.

Down towards the water's edge of the San Francisco bay is the scattering village of West Berkeley. Located in its center is the cosy little Lodge room of the Workmen of the place—and here Wednesday evening the 12th inst., we were welcomed by a band of brethren whose hearts are by no means as hard as the euphonious title of their Lodge would indicate. Hearts of Oak is—notwithstanding its comparatively limited membership of about 50—quite a mature Lodge. To prove this we have only to refer to the fact that it is the father of University Lodge, No. 88, and now another swarm is about to leave the parent hive and start a new Lodge, at what is called the Stock Yards, near Shell Mound Park. The S. W. Degree was conferred upon one brother on the evening in question.

Vesper, No. 62

Tuesday evening the 11th inst., the WATCHMAN representative found himself among the hospitable brethren of the pleasant town of Livermore. Vesper Lodge stands well among the Lodges of this county, having a membership of over 100. Bro. Geo. B. Shearer the M. W. is associate editor of that live local paper, the Livermore Valley Review. A pleasant meeting was held in which was discussed the project of celebrating by an entertainment, their coming anniversary early in October. Vesper is also considering the advisability of establishing a Degree of Honor Lodge. Success to it.

CONTRA COSTA COUNTY.

Antioch, No. 37.

Past Grand Master Jordan and Brother E. M. Reading, Secretary of the Guarantee Fund Association, paid a visit to this Lodge last Friday evening, the 7th inst., in the interest of the Order, and were heartily received. After dispatching the regular business, the hall filled with ladies and gentleman, and the meeting was called to order by P. M. W. Baker, who introduced Brother Reading, who made an address, and was followed by Brother Jordan, after which the company were invited down stairs to a banquet room, where the wives and daughters of the members of the Lodge had prepared a most elaborate supper, the tables being decorated profusely with flower evergreens. After enjoying the good things spread before them, Brother Jordan proposed as the first toast "Cold Water," and called upon Brother Reading to respond. Brother Baker, P. M. W., proposed "The Ladies," which was responded to by Brother Quigley, of Myrtle Lodge, No. 42, San Francisco. Many volunteer toasts were then offered and responded to, after which Auld Lang Syne was sung by the entire company, and the good humored assemblage dispersed. This visitation and the manner which this entertainment was carried out will undoubtedly secure to this Lodge, now numbering about 50 of the most prominent citizens of the town, a greatly increased membership.

COLUSA COUNTY.

Grand Island, No. 116.

C. C. Hicok, Recorder of this Lodge, writes: "I think we will prosper yet. We have lots of good material to work on, and we will work 'em all up if possible."

LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

San Fernando, No. 214.

DEAR WATCAMAN:—Your welcome publication is at hand as usual. Interest in our beloved Order is well kept up here. Our Lodge is increasing with desirable material. We recently had a friendly visit from Past Master Workman Judge B. T. Williams, of San Buena Ventura Lodge. He gave us some good and wholesome advice. Judge Williams agrees with Past Grand Master Workman Barnes as to beer drinking, etc., and practices what he preaches. Our Worthy Recorder, Judge El. Hammond, delivered the inclosed lecture last Saturday night, which we send for publication.—Yours, VETO, Sept. 5, 1883.—[The address referred to is published elsewhere.—EDS. WATCHMAN.]

Newhall, No. 218.

The Degree of Honor Lodges are springing up apace. In addition to the application for dispensation from Eureka, Humboldt county, noted in our last issue, we have the following in the same connection from Bro. Al. Cobler, the efficient District Deputy for Los Angeles District, No. 1: "I have received a notice from Newhall Lodge, No. 218, that they want me to institute a D. of H. Lodge at that place on the 15th of this month. They tell me that they have 24 or 25 names to start with."

SONOMA COUNTY.

Santa Rosa, No. 28.

Brother C. H. Holmes, Recorder of this prosperous Lodge, writes as follows: "Our Lodge has 92 members and is gaining slowly with good material, mentally, morally and physically, which speaks volumes for a town like this, with ten other Lodges to compete with. Our officers are well up in their work. They could do no less under the watchful eye of our zealous D. D., Brother Geo. Hall, who is ever ready to step out of his way for the good of the Order."

STANISLAUS COUNTY.

Oak Grove, No. 198.

Bro. O. H. Wiard, Recorder of this Lodge, writes as follows: "We as a Lodge are doing well. We do not gain ground very fast, but have a first class membership. Our members are business men and farmers. We have a fair attendance for this time of the year. The best of feeling exists in the Lodge. We mean to try to make Oak Grove, No. 198, all that our Order requires of its members."

ATTENTION is called to the well written history of Excelsior Lodge, No. 126, by P. M. W. Sam. Booth and published elsewhere in this paper.

Circular from the Grand Master Workman.

OFFICE OF GRAND MASTER WORKMAN, A. O. U. W., OF CALIFORNIA,
UKIAH, August 25, 1883.

To all Subordinate Lodges, A. O. U. W., in California—Fraternal Greeting:

To further promote the aims of the Order, it has been considered necessary to call to your notice the amendments of the late Supreme Lodge, and also of our own Grand Lodge at its last session, and to most respectfully request that the "Order of Business" of every Lodge be at once made to conform with the requirements of the law. [See Amendment No. 14, page 69, Journal 1883.]

This will not require any submission of these amendments to the Grand Lodge Committee on Laws and Supervision.

A speedy compliance will save the Grand Recorder much trouble and make the workings more harmonious.

The Degree of Honor constitution is silent as to the compensation of the officer instituting a new Lodge. Hence, in order that there may be some guide and uniformity, it is hereby ordered that until the Grand Lodge shall otherwise determine, the fee for instituting a Lodge shall be not exceeding fifteen dollars.

And it is most earnestly hoped that every member in the jurisdiction will aid in the development of this sister branch of our organization, designed, as it is, to elicit the active sympathy of an honest womanhood.

For every effort, worthy of success, and looking to the overthrow of vice, and tending to moral elevation, must have the virtue and pious influence of woman to support it.

And as it is impossible for me to officially visit every Lodge, I hope this admonition may be fraternally received.

Let every Workman feel that his obligation is not fully performed unless he earnestly tries to bring to our altars one or more good, honest and healthy citizens.

No man can be a conscientious Workman unless he recognizes that our Order has a two-fold destiny—protection to our loved, and fraternity to our living membership.

Gold and Love, as supporting pillars, stand under our temple.

Money is the ship, but brotherhood is the pilot. Money is the material, but Love is the triumphant cement. The one is the flower, but the other is the perfume that floats out unto humanity like a benediction, and streams into the heart like a sunbeam.

Make your Lodges social and attractive. Read, sing, debate and cultivate the moral and mental faculties. The world is not now governed by physical force, but by the electrical powers of the mind. Hence, make your Lodges schools of cultured instruction, and they will be the Order's best protection against vice and intemperance.

Appended hereto will be found the matters above referred to.

Fraternally in C. H. & P.

Beneficiary Law.

Amend Sec. 2, Art. XIII, Grand Lodge Constitution, to read as follows:

SEC. 2. Each member, upon receiving the J. W. degree and applying for the M. W. degree, shall make an application for the rights, privileges and benefits of the Order, in substance as follows, which shall be attested by the Recorder of the Subordinate Lodge, with the seal attached:

Form of Application.

I, —, having made application for the M. W. degree in — Lodge No. —, Ancient Order of United Workmen, State of —, do hereby agree that compliance on my part with all the laws, regulations and requirements which are or may be enacted by said Order, is the express condition upon which I am to be entitled to participate in the Beneficiary Fund, and have and enjoy all the other benefits and privileges of said Order.

I certify that the answers made by me to the questions propounded by the Medical Examiner of this Lodge, which are attached to this application, and form a part thereof, are true.

I further agree that the certificate to be issued hereon shall have no binding force whatever until I shall have taken the M. W. degree of said Order, and until my medical examination has been approved by the Grand Medical Examiner.

I hereby authorize and direct that the amount to which I may be entitled of said Beneficiary Fund, shall at my death be paid to — [Seal].

Attest: —, Recorder. Applicant. Amend Sec. 5, Article XIII, to read as follows:

SEC. 5. Upon application for certificate, duly approved by the Grand Medical Examiner, as provided for in Section 2 of this article, the Grand Recorder shall immediately issue and forward the certificate to the Subordinate Lodge, where it shall be countersigned by the Master Workman, with the seal of the Subordinate Lodge attached, attested by the Recorder, and when the applicant has received the M. W. degree, the certificate shall be delivered to him, a record be made of the same in the books of the Lodge, and he shall from the date of receiving the M. W. degree be entitled to all the rights and privileges of the order in accordance with the laws, rules and regulations of the Supreme Lodge; provided that in case the beneficiary certificate is not present at the time the applicant receives the M. W.'s degree, he shall be entitled to participate in the Beneficiary Fund until such time as said certificate shall be received by the Lodge, the same as though said certificate had been delivered at the time said degree was received.

Amend Sec. 8, Article XIII, to read as follows:

SEC. 8. Upon the death of any brother lawfully entitled to participate in the Beneficiary Fund, as hereinbefore provided, it shall be the duty of the Subordinate Lodge of which he was a member to notify officially by prescribed form of death notice the Grand Recorder, who shall, on the first day of the following month, notify each Subordinate Lodge in his jurisdiction, when the Beneficiary Fund on hand in each Subordinate Lodge (the same being one dollar for each valid certificate, and such sums as may have been received for certificates renewed), shall immediately be forwarded to the Grand Recorder, and a record thereof entered upon the minutes. Each Subordinate Lodge shall then make an assessment of one dollar upon each member holding a certificate, or having received the Master Workman degree (provided such member has received his certificate or Master Workman degree prior to the date of the death on which the assessment is made). Written or printed notices of assessments shall be made and sent by the Financier, not later than the eighth day of the month in which the notice was issued by the Grand Recorder, and not later than the twenty-eighth day of said month in which said notice of assessment was given. Any member holding a certificate of the Beneficiary Fund, having failed or neglected to pay said assessment into the Beneficiary Fund in his Subordinate Lodge, shall forfeit all his rights under said certificate. Should two or more notices of assessments be received at the same time, the Subordinate Lodge shall immediately forward the Beneficiary Fund on hand, as hereinbefore provided, which amount shall pay one notice. On or before the first day of the following month it shall forward to the Grand Recorder one dollar for each valid certificate so held at that time under its jurisdiction, for each remaining notice. Any Subordinate Lodge failing or declining to make returns as above, so as to insure their receipt by the Grand Recorder during the first week of each month, shall again be notified by the Grand Recorder; and said second notice shall be mailed to the Master Workman, the Foreman, the Recorder, and, if there be one, the District Deputy of such Lodge in arrears; and should such returns fail to be made within one week from the date of said second notice, all certificates under the jurisdiction of said Lodge shall stand suspended until said returns are made.

Amend Sec. 9, Article XIII, to read as follows:

SEC. 9. The Financier of each Subordinate Lodge shall keep a book, wherein all assessments of the Beneficiary Fund shall be entered against each member holding a valid certificate; such entry shall be made bearing date of the first meeting night, and not later than the eighth day of the month in which said notice was received. On the day succeeding the 28th day of said month, he shall furnish the Recorder of the Lodge with the names of the members who are in arrears on such assessment, and the Recorder shall place the same on the minutes of the Lodge, and mark such certificates as suspended on the certificate register-book, affixing the date thereto. The certificate of each member who has not paid such assessment on or before the 28th of said month, shall by the fact of such non-payment, stand suspended, and no action upon the part of the Lodge or any officer thereof shall be required as essential to such suspension. The Financier shall upon the receipt of any arrearages from beneficiary assessments, as provided for in Sections 10, 11, 12 and 13 of this Article, pay the same into the Beneficiary Fund (said amount from arrearages to be forwarded to the Grand Recorder upon the first order on said fund thereafter), and notify the Lodge of the same, and the Recorder shall so place it on the minutes of the Lodge, and mark the certificate so paid as renewed on the register-book, affixing the date thereto.

Amend Sec. 13, Article XIII, to read as follows:

SEC. 13. Any member holding a final card, desiring readmission to the Order, shall make application in the same manner and form as that prescribed for admission to membership, and shall comply with all the conditions necessary thereto, except that he shall be exempt from the payment of initiation and degree fees, but shall pay the usual fee required of members admitted by card.

Any member suspended from the Order by reason of the non-payment of dues for the period of six months, desiring to be reinstated, shall make application in the same manner and form as that prescribed for admission by membership, and shall comply with all the conditions necessary thereto except that he shall be exempt from the payment of initiation or degree fees. He shall pay the amount of dues for non-payment of which he was suspended from the Order, and shall pay in addition a sum not less than one dollar, which amount shall be placed in the General Fund.

Any member suspended from all the rights and benefits of the Order by reason of the non-payment of assessments for the period of six months, desiring to be reinstated, shall make application in the same manner and form as that prescribed for admission to membership, and shall comply with all the conditions necessary thereto, except that he shall be exempt from the payment of the initiation or degree fees. He shall pay a sum not less than seven dollars, which amount shall be placed in the Beneficiary Fund. Upon the completion of such readmission or reinstatement, the Recorder shall immediately notify the Grand Recorder thereof. In case of rejection the amounts above specified shall be returned to the applicant.

Amend Sec. 16, Article XIII, to read as follows:

SEC. 16. Any member holding a beneficiary certificate, desiring at any time to make a new direction as to its payment, may do so by authorizing such change in writing on the back of his certificate in the form prescribed, attested by the Recorder, with the seal of the Lodge attached, and by the payment to the Grand Lodge of fifty cents, but no change of direction shall be valid or have any binding force or effect, until said change shall have been reported to the Grand Recorder, the old certificate, if practicable, filed with him, and a new beneficiary certificate issued thereon, and said new certificate shall be numbered the same as the old certificate; provided however, should it be impracticable for the Recorder to witness the change desired by the brother, attestation may be made by a Notary Public or an officer of a Court of Record, seal to be attached in attest.

Laws Applicable to Grand Lodges.

Amend Law No. 19 to read as follows:

P. M. W. Degree.

19. Each Grand Lodge must confer the Past Master Workman degree, without pecuniary consideration, upon a brother in good standing, who has legally performed the duties of Master Workman for one term, or the remainder of a term, in a subordinate Lodge, and upon a brother in good standing who has been elected Past Master Workman at the institution of a new Lodge, or in case of his death, resignation or removal from office, his successor who shall have served the remainder of the term, and may confer said degree upon Grand Medical Examiners who are Master Workmen degree members in good standing of some Subordinate Lodge, and may also confer said degree upon Recorders, Receivers and Financiers of Subordinate Lodges who have served as such for three consecutive years, when their respective Lodges shall by resolution so request, and upon no other person; provided, that in either case the degree shall not be conferred unless he shall have served a majority of the meetings of the term, or remainder of the term for which he had been elected.

Laws on General Application.

Amend Law No. 41 to read as follows:

41. No member of the Order shall be put on trial for any offense unless charges be preferred in writing and a copy served on him, and he have the opportunity of defending himself before a committee appointed to hear the case, who shall report to the Lodge having jurisdiction in the case. He shall have the privilege of defending himself by counsel, provided the counsel shall be a member of the Order in good standing. If the trial be in the Supreme Lodge, its action upon the report of the committee shall be final; if in a Grand or Subordinate Lodge, an appeal may be taken as provided by the laws of the Order.

When a brother has been expelled from the Order under a misapprehension of facts, and such error becomes known to the Subordinate Lodge by whose decision he was expelled, such Lodge may, with the consent of the Supreme or Grand Lodge, as the case may be, or the Supreme or Grand Master Workman, during vacation, reinstate such brother, or order a rehearing in the case; provided, that before such brother can be reinstated he must comply with the provisions of the beneficiary article.

Amendment to Laws of Grand Lodge of California.

Add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 20. In the "Order of Business" in all Subordinate Lodges in this jurisdiction the Master Workman shall, on the night of the first stated meeting in each month, inquire, under the head of "Unfinished Business," of the Recorder, "Has the monthly report of the previous month been sent to the Grand Lodge?"

On the night of the second stated meeting of the Lodge he shall inquire, under the head of "Unfinished Business," of the Recorder, "Have all assessments due the Grand Lodge been transmitted, accompanied by the official remittance report?"

Should the officers named have failed to forward the reports or to transmit the money, the Master Workman shall at that time order the reports to be made and the money to be forwarded at once, and shall cause their delinquency to be entered upon the minutes of the Lodge.

$4,000 Saved.

The intimate relations existing between Grand Master Workman Kinsley, of our jurisdiction, and Supreme Master Workman Fish, have probably saved the Order in this jurisdiction at least $4,000. It happens in this wise: Bro. Kinsley was formerly a member of the Order in California, and had always been an admirer and earnest supporter of Bro. Fish. When California secured her separate beneficiary, the date was fixed by telegrams passing between Grand Master Workman Jordan and the Supreme Master Workman. Bro. Kinsley, knowing that to have been the case, met Supreme Master Workman Fish at Elko, on his return from the Supreme Lodge, last June, and made an arrangement with him that the Nevada jurisdiction should have the same courtesy extended to it that California enjoyed in 1878. The result is that while our papers have to be prepared and forwarded to Meadville, Pa.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Boston, Mass., and San Francisco, Cal., our date has been fixed subject to the laws and provisions being complied with. On the other hand, if our date of separation had to be delayed until our papers traversed the Union, we would be in luck if it was set before September 15th. The difference of a month to us means two assessments, which at this time would cost us over $4,000.—Utah Workman.

Experience and Opinion of a "Jiner."

Bro. Sol. Lewy, M. W. of Patapsco Lodge, No. 28, is a "jiner" in a by-no-means restricted sense. He is Past Chancellor of K. of P.; Past Master of I. O. M.; Past President of F. S. of I., and ex-President of I. O. B. B., besides holding a membership in the A. L. of H., K. G. E., K. of H. and R. A. To visit his various Lodges will require the use of twenty-nine passwords and twenty-four different kinds of raps, and in his greeting he has the use of sixteen grips. Strangest of all, Bro. Lewy is well up in all the work, of which he can convince any who desire to test him. We do not know the exact amount which will accrue to his beneficiaries in the event of his death, but it is evident that they will be pretty well "fixed" if they outlive him. And Bro. Lewy affirms it as his honest belief that the A. O. U. W. is the best organization of any to which he belongs. His opinion is entitled to great weight.—Baltimore Protector.

THERE continues to be serious complaints of the injurious effect of both drought and frost in New York and New England, and in many places not a single shower has fallen for nearly a month. The pastures are completely bare and brown, and there will be a great falling off in the corn crop.

A. O. U. W. Chitchat.

District Deputy Gridley of Napa county, is about to organize a new Lodge in Calistoga.

Bro. S. L. Hogue, of Valley View, No. 208, Selma, Fresno county, paid this office a pleasant call recently.

WE go to press too early to report the fifth anniversary party of Silver Spray Lodge, No. 3, Degree of Honor, of last evening. Particulars in our next.

We recently met Bro. R. C. Hunter, of Butte Lodge, No. 114, in the rooms of the Grand Recorder. He was on his way to make a short visit to Oregon.

We regret to learn that in consequence of ill health the physicians have required Grand Lecturer Vrooman, of Oakland, to relinquish business for the present.

California Lodge, No. 1, of West Oakland, gave an entertainment on the evening of the 13th inst. for the benefit of a paralyzed member. We will give a report in our next issue.

Triumph Lodge, No. 180, has changed its place of meeting to Parker Hall, Odd Fellows' building, Montgomery street, where visiting Workmen are welcomed each Tuesday evening. Its card in the Lodge Directory will be changed to that effect in our next issue.

Past Grand Master Child and Grand Recorder Newcomb of Oregon, both in attendance on the Masonic Conclave, have returned to their homes. As they were engaged in Masonic business during their visit, the members of the Order did not see as much of them as was desirable.

The new jurisdiction of Nevada and adjacent Territories already has an exponent of the Order in the shape of a little monthly called The Workman, published in Ogden City, Utah, by the Workman Publishing Company.

The Nevada Grand Lodge will hold its next session in Salt Lake City, Utah. The Workmen of that city are anxious to secure a large membership before that time, and are already preparing to organize one or more new Lodges.

ONE of our Sir Knights, Brother Wm Curry, visited Yerba Buena, No. 14, on August 31st. He is a brother of C. H. N. Curry, P. M. W., and is also a P. M. W. of Protector Lodge, No. 7, Wisconsin. Brother Curry was much pleased with his reception in California.

It is claimed that six years represents the average age of the old regular life insurance companies. Granted to be a fact, the A. O. U. W. can be called aged, as we are over twice that number of years old.—Fraternal Censor.

A. O. U. W. Lodge Elections—Continued.

SANTA ROSA, No. 28.—A. D. Laughin, P. M. W.; A. P. Moore, Fin.; John Dunbar, M. W.; J. F. Fick, Rvr.; L. W. Eby, F.; Geo. L. Simpson, Guide; John Muller, O.; John Peterson, I. W.; C. H. Holmes, Rdr.; W. H. Hassett, O. W.

GALT, No. 113.—R. M. Haight, M. W.; John Dobson, F.; W. T. Baltimore, O.; D. Vanderhoof, Rdr.; James Ferguson, Fin.; J. H. Sawyer, Rvr.; C. I. Randal, G.; John Brewster, I. W.; J. W. Beckwith, O. W.; A. Randolph, Trustee; A. Montague, Med. Ex. Reported by D. Vanderhoof.

Why?

The Pacific Overseer propounds the following problem which is in course of successful solution here:

Why should women be debarred from the benefits of life insurance? True, husbands do not financially lose by the death of their wives as wives do by the loss of their husbands; but there are multitudes of widows and unmarried women who would be glad to carry a membership in a mutual aid society whereby their children or dependent relatives could be aided in case of their death. The Degree of Honor, as provided for in the laws of our Order, ought to have a beneficiary feature and become popular. If in every town where there is an A. O. U. W. Lodge there were also one of the Degree of Honor which ladies could join, our members and their families would be mutually benefited.

In Memoriam.

Hall of Franklin Lodge, No. 44, A. O. U. W.

WHEREAS, Death has entered our fraternal home and bereft us of our brother JOHN REID, who met an untimely and sudden death under very painful circumstances, we, as a Lodge, will greatly feel his loss, and shall ever regret the cause of his untimely death, stricken down in the vigor of manhood, yet we shall have in grateful remembrance his many noble qualities. Therefore be it Resolved, by Franklin Lodge, No. 44, A. O. U. W., that while we bow in humble submission to the will of the Most High, we do not the less mourn the loss of our brother, who, by his life, while associated with us as a member of our beloved Order, had endeared himself to us as a true Workman.

Resolved, That the heartfelt sympathy and sincere condolence of this Lodge be extended to the bereaved family of our late Brother, and we commend them for consolation to him who in his holy habitation is a Father of the fatherless and the widow's Judge.

Resolved, That the Charter of this Lodge be draped in mourning for the term of thirty days.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of this Lodge, a copy thereof sent to the bereaved wife of our deceased brother, and a copy sent to the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN for publication.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with his bereaved wife and niece, who were so untiring in their ministrations of love during the brief illness of our deceased brother. May they obtain consolation from him, our Maker, who alone can comfort those bowed down in grief and sorrow.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to our deceased brother, the Charter of this Lodge be draped in mourning for thirty days, that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the family of deceased; also be spread upon the records of this Lodge, and that a copy be furnished the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN for publication.

THE Bishop of Veszprim has issued a pastoral letter, declaring Jew baiting most unchristian-like, and exhorting the clergy to use all their endeavors to divert their flocks from following such a dangerous path.

THE spread of the cattle disease in every portion of England causes the greatest uneasiness. In some sections only American beef is now obtainable.

The Window Garden.

Our illustration may serve as suggestive to those who desire to beautify their living-rooms with growing plants. The old idea that plants are injurious to health in living-rooms has been zealously combatted by those who ought to be judges thereof, so we may assure plant lovers that their indulgence is not dangerous. Hundreds there are who have no outdoor space for plants, and to them the window garden becomes a constant joy. An enthusiastic writer says: The kitchen is often the best place to be found, especially if it is large and has sunny windows. It is more likely than other rooms to have an atmosphere charged with moisture, and frequently changed by the temporary opening of an outside door, besides being left in darkness after the work of the day is finished. And does not the kitchen need to be made more like an Eden than it ordinarily is? Would not its very necessary and really honorable work be rendered more attractive by the company of verdure and bloom? If the kitchen is not available for our purpose, perhaps there is a well-lighted chamber, which may be warmed from the hall or an adjacent room. If it is generally unoccupied at night, or during the evening, it is so much the better, and

Great Salt Lake.

A Voyage of Discovery on the Big Inland Sea

With several members of the Agassiz Association an excursion trip was taken last week on Great Salt lake. Going out to Lake Shore on the swift little Rio Grande train, we landed in about half an hour and found our boat waiting for us. After stowing away our collecting bottles and cans, insect nets, egg baskets, hammers and other paraphernalia, we breathed easier, knowing that as long as they were out of sight no old toper would ask for a drink of our alcohol and corrosive sublimate, that no one would take us for perfumery and comb peddlers, nor wink with Western shrewdness at the idea of catching fish in the lake. At the pier we found the water only a foot deep, where two years ago it was three or four. Even the mud was furrowed up by boats which had come up to the landing. Hoisting our sail we passed out toward the middle of the lake. For six or eight miles we sailed over water that was nowhere more than two or three feet deep. Some five or six miles out we struck broad patches where the bottom was covered with the dead shells of fresh water molluscs, washed in from Hot Springs lake, caught by the roots and stems of the salt grass and some bulbous plants, which forty years ago

The next morning most of us studied the ancient beach of the island, and gathered splendid specimens of specular iron ore and slate. Our geological books informed us that the island was a mere pile of rocks, barren, and without water; what was our surprise, therefore, to find it smooth and rounded, with but few cliffs and dotted with sheep, which of course meant at least one good spring upon it. Descending to the shore, we found the sand to be angular, like that of the ocean and most fresh water lakes, this being almost the only place where the peculiar oolitic (egg-shaped) sand of the lake is absent. Soon we were on our way toward the hazy western shore. As we passed along, the sea-gulls circled around us or floated on the water, their white plumage shining in the sunlight. Every now and then a hawkmoth would flit by or alight on the boat, dragon flies would stop long enough to gaze at us curiously and then spin off toward the distant islands. Occasionally a 17-year locust would hum past as if to mock at us for ever daring to believe that this is the

"Dead Sea of America."

As the bow plowed through the water millions of small diptera (flies) would rise from the water, where they were resting, and cover the bow of the boat till quarts of them could be collected. Wherever we went we observed the same thing. The water of the lake is their home, and they are as much at ease sitting on the water as a skipper is on an eastern pond. In some places when it is calm these flies darken the water for miles. Here (not on the beach) they lay their eggs; here they hatch, and here the larvæ live by the million till ready for the pupa state, when they attach themselves to the seaweed (floating everywhere in the water) and remain till they emerge as perfect flies. The larvæ doubtless prey upon the strange little shrimps that live in the water. There are infinite numbers of these, as there is scarcely a place in the lake where a bucket of water can be dipped without taking up from 20 to 500 of them. It is strange that people should call this a "dead sea," for though the number of species does not exceed 10 or 15, there is no lake, fresh or salt, in the world that contains half as many living things as Great Salt Lake.

Small Islands.

In the course of the forenoon we reached and explored several small islands near the western shore, then passed around the northern shore of Stansbury Island.

This is the most interesting of all the islands of the lake. We had previously explored it, finding some very rare plants, insects and fossils. The eastern side is indented by numerous open bays, which sweep from point to point in arcs of circles like so many banded bows. The beach is composed of fine white sand, free from boulders, and slopes quickly to the water, where it forms a beautiful bottom. A few rods from shore the water is deep enough to satisfy the most fastidious, thus making the most delightful bathing places on the lake. The view obtainable from the island's lofty peaks is unexcelled.

Leaving Stansbury behind, we sailed for the north shore of

Antelope Island,

Passing over the deepest water in the lake. When we reached the shore the breakers were rolling so high that we could not land. Passing around the point we soon reached some springs of water where we quenched our thirst and refilled our empty cask. Here we saw considerable stock upon the hills.

The remainder of our trip to Lake Shore was without incident till we had almost reached the landing, when a terrific squall dropped upon us from the mountains near by, and almost lifted us out of the water. The waves hissed by and almost laid bare the bottom; when they struck us it seemed like so many Titan sledge hammers trying to shatter the boat. There is probably but one sea in the world where the shock of the waves is so terrific, not from the force of the wind, but from the extreme heaviness of the water. Though the lake has the reputation of being treacherous, we soon learned that it has some very good points. From 5 A. M. to 4 P. M. the wind usually blows steadily from the north or north-west; then there is a calm of an hour or two, when it blows from the south nearly all night.

Our three days' sail of 110 miles was voted a success by all. The breezes were comparatively gentle, not frightening anybody (as they did on a former trip, when the waves were seven feet high); the heat was not intense, the sea seemed so like a fresh water lake, and animal life was so abundant in and around it that we shall never again call this the "Dead Sea of America."

ANCIENT CIRCULAR SAWS.—That the hard basalt and granite used in Egyptian buildings of some 4,000 years ago, were cut by circular saws of some sort, is proved by recently examined specimens with the tool marks fresh upon them. The circular marks are as distinct on these imperishable stones as on a fresh pine plank. This proof of the existence of ancient circulars is curious, for that form of saw has been believed to be of modern invention.

THE Navy Department is in receipt of a letter stating that the body of a man supposed to be that of Master Putnam, of the Rogers, was found at Cape Prince of Wales, Alaska, by natives, when the ice broke up in August, 1882.

A WINDOW GARDEN.

may be made to furnish the most important conditions required for the cool green-house plants. Next in advantages for such plants is the moderately and evenly heated parlor, and last of all, the commonly overheated sitting-room. But the last for some purposes may be the first for others; and if this room must resemble a hot-house, it is the best for hot-house plants.

Whatever "living-room" may be selected, it is doubtless not quite so well adapted to our plants as to ourselves. It is not their natural home within doors, and they have no power of helping themselves by going out for a change. But were not plants and people made to live together, more or less? And in these artificial conditions, can we not make some compromise which shall be favorable to both?

It is an important fact, and one often overlooked, that for the most part what is good or bad for the plants is equally so for us. Do they need pure air and abundant light? So do we. Do they suffer from the parching dryness of our rooms? It is bad for us. Are they choked with the dust from our carpets? How we sympathize with them. Some tropical plants require a tropical heat, but our most familiar friends are temperate in their demands—perhaps more temperate than we. On the whole, we thrive best in just such a condition of our living-room as is best for our plants; that is, in as near an approach as is possible to outdoor summer. And isn't that something like Eden?

So the artificial arrangements of our garden are to have in view the health and comfort of all its occupants alike, and must follow very closely the larger pattern furnished by nature.

flourished there and were overwhelmed by the rising brine, and perfectly preserved for a generation. The water has so nearly reached its level of 1840 that the high waves wash up the roots and cast them upon the beach, where they are now to be found. The storm line of that year is now at the water's edge, and the ancient sagebrush that grew immediately behind it now stands like ghostly sentinels over their graves. For over forty years this same sagebrush has stood deep beneath the water, like the submerged forests of the Columbia river.

A stiff breeze soon sprang up from the south, and we went booming along in full view of Antelope (Church) Island, toward a dim, low island (Fremont's) to the north of it. Night dozed around us; midnight came and went, and just as Fremont Island loomed up in the darkness, a great red finger rose rapidly behind the distant Wasatch, and towering up, seemed to bend toward us as if to warn us not to disturb the island's solitude. The new moon never seemed so awe-inspiring nor more unlike itself as it rose half out behind the hills.

Fremont Island.

Ere long the gravelly shore of Fremont Island was reached, and soon all the party were fast asleep on the beach. One of them had taken the precaution to tie the halliard rope around his body, and in about two hours he found himself traveling toward the water, the strong waves having loosened the boat. About dawn he was again doubled up by the rope. Had it not been for this precaution, all the party would have graced the solitude with their presence, and the boat would have sailed alone.

A Look Ahead.

The territory for the spread of the Order is becoming circumscribed. Nearly all the States and Territories have been apportioned out to the various Grand Lodge jurisdictions, so that little remains. As under the law in its present shape a separate beneficiary jurisdiction cannot be created unless there shall remain 3,000 members under control of the Supreme Lodge, the time of calling a halt must soon arrive. Then what shall be done? Must a few detached fragments be forever debarred from combining in a way to manage their own concerns, or one fragment of 2,000 or more be debarred from the privilege of becoming separated because the other fragments do not aggregate 3,000 members?

Many of our most earnest Workmen are anxiously looking forward to the day when the Supreme Lodge shall cease to have any beneficial jurisdiction, and its functions be confined to operating the Relief Law, the making of general laws and regulations and controlling the recent work of the Order. But to reach this end will require many changes in the fundamental laws of the Order, and in doing this various and important questions will have to be disposed of, and it is not too soon to begin their careful consideration. Now back of every certificate issued by any of our Grand Lodges stands the Supreme Lodge as the body of ultimate responsibility. If a Grand Lodge fail, the Supreme Lodge takes upon itself the task of making good the promises to the beneficiaries of our deceased brethren. Can a way be devised by which this responsibility can be maintained if the Supreme Lodge shall no longer have any beneficiary jurisdiction? If a separate beneficiary jurisdiction should fall below 2,000 members, what would become of it, and how would the guaranty to pay $2,000 to the beneficiary of each deceased member be maintained? All these questions and more will have to be met sooner or later, and we all know how difficult it is to frame new laws involving new principles that will work well in practice. Through the Relief Law now seems the only practical road out of the difficulties under consideration, but even in that, grave difficulties present themselves, inasmuch that important changes would have to be made. A jurisdiction with less than 2,000 members could never raise $2,000 on a single assessment, and only one assessment could be levied on a single death. Relief funds would have to be provided for each particular death occurring in such jurisdiction. As these difficulties promise soon to be upon us, we ask our wise men and profound thinkers to give the Order the benefit of their best efforts in solving the difficult problem.

Supreme Lodge Statistics.

We are in receipt from Supreme Recorder Sackett of the bound volume of the proceedings of the eleventh annual session of the Supreme Lodge held in Buffalo, New York, last June. A full report of the Supreme Lodge proceedings was published in the WATCHMAN shortly subsequent to that time, but there are various matters of statistical interest in this valuable and interesting document of 190 pages that were not available then, but which are given to the public now with the issuance of this volume.

From the table containing the average membership and death rate of the various States for the past four years, it is found that in the latter, Kentucky has obtained the unenviable highest per cent, the average annual death rate there being 16.08 to the 1,000 members. Ohio stands next with 15.61. Nevada jurisdiction has the lowest average for the time recorded, its annual loss hitherto averaging 4.62 per 1,000. California stands well also, having an average annual death rate of but 7.89 per 1,000.

From the summary of Lodges and membership for the year 1882-3, it is found that the total number of members at the beginning of the fiscal year was 97,355; suspensions and withdrawals, 8,578; deaths, 862; total loss for year from these causes, 9,440; or over 9 1/2 per cent of original membership; members admitted during the year 23,429. These with reinstatements cover the loss and give a net gain of 14,377. Among the States, Massachusetts makes the highest gain for the year, viz: 2,004 members. Illinois comes next with 1,832, and California next with 1,488. New York is seventh in rank in gain of membership with a record of 1,130.

The total number of certificates that have been issued to June 30, 1883, has been 150,695; total in force at said date, 111,378. These figures do not include Iowa and Oregon and Washington Grand Lodges, whose Grand Recorders failed to make returns in time to be included in this report.

The total number of Lodges at the close of the year was 2,315, making a net gain of 246 for the year.

The average age of the entire membership is about 38 years.

The total number of deaths is 3,588; amount paid to heirs, $7,103,000. The average assessments for the year have been 16 4-5, or $16.80 to each member to carry the $2,000 guarantee for the twelve months.

A Good Prospect for Oakland Lodges.

The efforts to maintain the congregation and organization of the Independent Church in Oakland having been unsuccessful, the opportunity is offered to the A. O. U. W. Lodges to purchase the property for their own use, and negotiations looking forward to that end are now pending.

This fine property, which is located on the corner of Thirteenth and Jefferson streets, is offered by the widow of the late Dr. Hamilton on favorable terms. With slight alterations, the upper story could be fitted up into two large Lodge-rooms, and the lower one, with its handsome and spacious auditorium and magnificent organ, could be reserved to let for lectures, concerts, etc.

The Lodges most interested in this project are Oakland, No. 2; Occidental, No. 6; Pacific, No. 7; Oak Leaf, No. 35, and Keystone, No. 64. The benefits to be derived from having such a fine piece of property under the exclusive ownership and control of these Lodges of our Order are obvious. Aside from the added dignity incident to such an ownership, and the convenience of having their own Lodge-rooms and a fine lecture hall, is the saving caused by the change of relation from that of tenant to landlord, receiving rent money from other Orders instead of paying it away to them. We trust that we shall be able to record a successful outcome to these negotiations.

The Reason.

Where a Lodge is not prosperous the reason is generally not far to seek, and in nine cases out of ten may be found in one of two facts or in both. These are the matters of regarding the A. O. U. W. simply as a business organization, ignoring fraternity and laxity in observing and enforcing the laws. Any Lodge that does either will not prosper; and if guilty of both offenses its demise is only a question of time. A member who is not willing to meet the calls and do the work demanded by a true fraternity is not a good Workman, and is a positive source of weakness to the Order. If our membership were solely of such material, we should go to pieces in a day. To disregard law is not only to violate a solemn obligation, but to substitute anarchy for good government. Societies cannot exist without law any more than nations, States, or municipalities, and law held in contempt is far worse than no law at all. These facts are so patent and important that they become axioms.

Some of our Lodges are not prosperous. They simply exist. Let the members consider the foregoing maxims and see if they have not a ready solution of the cause, and if so, the remedy is easy and suggests itself. It is only to remove the cause and the effect will cease. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, Lodges that cherish fraternity and adhere closely to the law, are a grand success. The end is worthy of the means.

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that bills of the Grand Medical Examiner have a notice at their head clearly explaining where and how moneys should be sent that are due him, we are informed by Deputy Grand Recorder Watson, that Lodge officers persist in putting these accounts into the remittance report sent to the Grand Recorder's office, causing needless confusion and annoyance; and that sometimes even remittances for the WATCHMAN sent in care of the Grand Recorder are treated in the same way. The language at the top of said Medical Examiner's bills is so clear that there is no excuse for the gross carelessness that causes so much annoyance to the Grand Recording officers. It says: "This amount must not be included in the Remittance Report of the Grand Recorder as it has no connection with the funds of his office. Let the money be covered by a separate advice or letter. It can however be sent in care of the Grand Recorder."

THERE are fifteen papers in the interests of the A. O. U. W. Among the leading ones are the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN, of San Francisco, Cal.; Protector, of Baltimore, Md.; Fraternal Censor, of Buffalo, N. Y., and New England Workman, of Boston, Mass.—Pittsburg Sunday Traveler.

WE call attention to the recent circular issued by Grand Master Workman Rogers, published elsewhere.

The Benefits of Public Meetings.

Apropos of the proposed mammoth public meeting in November, to celebrate the sixth anniversary of the institution of the Grand Lodge in this State, we commend to the consideration of those interested the following from the Baltimore Protector:

Experience has demonstrated that the most fruitful means which have been adopted for the purpose of securing an increase of membership for the Order, are the public meetings which have from time to time been held in various sections of our jurisdiction. We have yet to learn of a single instance in which a Lodge has given a public entertainment that immediate and gratifying results have not followed. A private letter from Grand Master Reynolds strongly advocates the adoption of such means, and cites for proof of their efficacy the happy results from the entertainments given recently by Tangier Lodge, No. 18, at Crisfield, Md., and Industry, No. 2, at Wilmington, Del. The former has made a large accession in membership directly attributable to the cause named, while Industry Lodge has gained no less than thirty new members since the entertainment held December 26th last. The Lodges in Camden, N. J., have also been active in this way, and correspondingly prosperous.

In the face of these facts, the Lodges of the jurisdiction will be unmindful of their interests if they neglect this simple and agreeable means of bringing the Order to the attention of their friends and the public and thus recruiting their membership. We learn that several of the largest and most prosperous Lodges in this city are discussing the matter of a grand entertainment to be given at an early day, while one which has been the reverse of prosperous is about to use the same heroic means for recruiting.

Young Men's Duty to Their Dependents.

Some practical words were recently spoken in the course of a sermon to young men by Rev. Dr. Davidson, of Islington, England. If they were appropriate as treating of life insurance in the abstract in the Old World, how much more applicable are they in this country, abounding in beneficiary societies, where life insurance and fraternity go hand in hand, at a much less cost than the former alone comes to in the regular insurance companies? And by dependents, as used in the caption, we do not exclude the relatives of unmarried young men. It is often a graver duty to provide for a contingency that may leave a father, or mother, or sister helpless, than it is to hunt up a life partner upon whom to bestow such bounty. Dr. Davidson said:

If some of you will act upon the advice I am now going to give you, you will thank me for it some day. Whilst you are to hope and prepare for a long life, you are to contemplate the possibility of being suddenly called away, and you are to make provision, even in this world, against such contingency. It is meanly selfish for a man dying in the prime of life, and professing a Christian hope, to be perfectly happy whilst he knows that as he steps into heaven his wife and children will step into the workhouse. I say it is abominable! If you have the faintest prospect of having any dependent upon you, you have no business to spend on gratification all your weekly wages or your yearly salary. It is not yours to spend. The first few shillings or first few pounds belong to them, and should go to pay the premium on a policy that at least will keep them from beggary. Excuse me for mentioning this, but I am really provoked to see men, through sheer thoughtlessness, laying up for their families trouble that might have easily been spared had they only insured their lives in some sound and respectable office. That grand old man, Dr. Guthrie, of Edinburgh, a few years before his death, rose up at a public meeting and said: "When I came to Edinburgh, the people sometimes laughed at my blue stockings and cotton umbrella, and said I looked like a plowman, and they derided me because I lived in a house at £35 of rent, and often walked when I would have been glad to have a cab; but, gentlemen, I did it all because I wanted to pay the premium on a life assurance that would keep my family comfortable if I should die." Many a man talks of his "small means" as the difficulty, while he is spending as much on alcohol and tobacco as, paid into an assurance office, would make his household secure against want.

REMITTANCES for the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN can be forwarded to the Grand Recorder. Always enclose statement, separate from the Grand Recorder's, of the amount sent for different purposes. Don't forget this.

ANOTHER new Lodge is being talked of in Napa county. It really seems as if plenty of room exists there for several more.

A CONSIDERABLE number of Lodges have not yet paid the Supreme Lodge Relief Assessment No. 3. We want to close up the business at the earliest possible moment.

THE bound proceedings of the Supreme Lodge have been issued, and a supply shipped us. We hope to get them in time to send out to all our Lodges next month.

THE probability now is, that we shall have but one assessment for October, but in November we may reasonably expect two. Our death-rate for many months has been very low.

SEVERAL of our Lodges are having a sort of revival season. Thus far, Mt. Hamilton, No. 43, of San Jose, holds the banner. Enterprise, No. 17, will have to look to her laurels.

LODGE RECORDERS are sometimes a little careless about reading official notices to their Lodges. As a consequence, many errors are made, the laws misunderstood, and much correspondence required to set matters right that ought not to have gone wrong.

It may not be amiss to say that in many cases the settlement of losses could be facilitated where there are minors in the case by prompt action being taken in the appointment of a guardian. Of course, we cannot pay moneys to any one who cannot give a valid receipt. This a minor cannot do.

The Subordinate Lodges under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Lodge are taxed for four assessments this month. In explanation of this heavy draft, the Supreme Recorder appends the following special note to his assessment notice: "Owing to the excessive death-rate for the past few months, two assessments each month have not realized sufficient amount to liquidate the death claims. It has become necessary, therefore, to levy four assessments this month, in order to make up this deficiency, and to provide for the prompt payment of accumulated losses. This need not, however, alarm the membership of the Supreme Lodge jurisdiction, as they will not be called upon for more than twenty-four assessments (the maximum fixed by the Relief Law) during the fiscal year. Should the amount required to meet death losses for the fiscal year be in excess of the amount realized on the twenty-four assessments, the balance will be provided for by assessments on the whole Order under the provisions of the Relief Law."

Charity, Hope, and Protection.

The following is an address delivered by Judge El. Hammond before the San Fernando Lodge, No. 214, of Los Angeles county.

Master Workman and Brothers: I am so fully impressed with the idea that this organization known as the A. O. U. W., was conceived in brotherly love and fraternal feeling, that in my own peculiar way I am going to try and imbue you each and all with the same idea. I begin with the word "Charity." This word is taken from the Latin caritas, from carus, dear, costly, loved; as defined by Webster, disposition to think favorably of others, and to do them good, liberality to the poor, alms, any act of kindness or benevolence. We will not, however, discuss the Latin meanings at length, but will take Webster's definition of the word.

First, disposition to think favorably of others, and to do them good. Does this smack of anything that can be construed to mean that this is merely a mutual insurance company run on a cheap scale to catch the multitudes? I believe not; but on the other hand it speak directly to the heart in brotherly feelings and fraternal love. It is the corner-stone upon which is built our well loved Order.

Secondly, any act of kindness or benevolence. This without any other construction placed upon the word, would be proof that it is a fraternal organization, an organization that reaches out and by its teachings tries to make the angels' words a truth and a reality, when they sang "Peace on earth, good will to men." By being consistent, faithful Workmen, we can assist, more than any other Order, in giving strength to these words.

"Hope" is taken from the Anglo-Saxon word hopa, meaning, desire of some good, with at least a slight expectation of obtaining it; that which furnishes grounds of expectation; that which is hoped for. Here again, we see by the most liberal definition of the word "hope," there is nothing that can be construed to mean insurance. My brothers, think of the solemn obligation you have taken as Master Workmen, ponder over it, and then compare it with the definition of the word "hope." You will then readily understand why this is purely a fraternal society. The desire of doing some good. What a noble watchword to follow. Can any one conceive of anything more grand, sublime or noble than this?

"Protection," the mystic word of our Order, as defined by Webster, is an act of preserving from loss, injury or annoyance; that which protects.

This needs no enlarging or expatiating on. It is because we believe in the meaning literally of the words "Charity," "Hope," and "Protection;" that we pay cheerfully dues and assessments for the maintenance of the Order and the protection from want and distress of those we love and cherish when we are called to the Supreme Master Workman. Knowing that the fraternal feeling which rules this Order, which breathes in all its laws and teachings will see our wishes faithfully executed in "Charity," "Hope" and "Protection."

OUR GIRLS. Ben Perly Poole writes for the American Cultivator as follows: If I dared, I would have something more to say about the farmers' daughters, and to suggest that agricultural prosperity depends upon the proper encouragement and increase of the dairy. We need some healthful employment for our sons and daughters at home, upon the farm; something that will teach them care, regularity and the importance of systematic and useful labor. No branch of farming furnishes all these requisites so fully as does the dairy. Why, it's our fault that our girls are decked out in the absurd costumes of a French milliner; we do not furnish them with employment, and we must not be surprised that their better natures thus run to waste. If we neglect to teach them how to hoop cheese, ought we to wonder that they turn to hooping themselves? Nor ought we to wonder that our sons are growing up the walking advertisement of some fashionable tailor, as empty and less useful than the decorated block that adorns his show window? If we would reform the vices of the country, or the city, we must begin at our own firesides with that system of education which will send forth our children, men and women, with educated hearts and hands, as well as educated heads. And it is our duty to so educate our children that the milkmaid and her companion will be fitted to adorn the mansion of a governor or the Presidential White House.

FATHER AND MOTHER HUBBARD. The other day, when old Major Solomon announced his readiness to proceed in the direction of the church, his wife appeared, wearing a "Mother Hubbard" dress. The old man intently regarded her for a few moments, then asked: "Mary, what sort of a coat do you call that?" "It's a Mother Hubbard, Jeems." "Air you going to wear it to church?" "Why, certainly, Jeems. The Mother Hubbard is all the fashion now." "Well, I'm glad to hear it," the old man replied; "just wait until I get ready, and we'll go." The old man went out into the kitchen, took a couple of meal sacks, cut the bottoms out, sewed the tops together and put them on in imitation of pantaloons. When he returned his wife uttered a loud cry of astonishment, and exclaimed: "Great goodness, Jeems, what's that?" "Father Hubbard," the old man replied. "You're not a goin' to wear them sacks, are you?" "I've got to be fashionable to keep up with you. I've got as much right to wear these meal bags as you have to go in that bran sack." "I'll take it off." "All right; off goes Father Hubbard," and turning away he added to himself: "Only one way to beat a woman, and that's by agreeing with her. If it hadn't been for the Daddy Hubbard I'd been in a mighty bad fix."—Arkansas Traveler.

Grand Encampment Proceedings.

We give herewith a report of the legislative proceedings of the Grand Encampment. Other affairs of a general nature pertaining to the Conclave will be reported in full in the Historical Souvenir, of the FRATERNAL RECORD.

Tuesday, Aug. 21.

The Grand Encampment convened in the Asylum of California Commandery, No. 1, at the Masonic Temple, at noon.

Grand Master Dean announced that he had appointed Sir Knight Clinton Locke, D. D., of Chicago, Grand Prelate, continuing his commission from the temporary appointment at the last Conclave. The Grand Prelate then led the Knights in their devotions.

The Grand Encampment was opened by the Grand Master, assisted by his Grand officers, with due form. The Grand Recorder called the roll of Grand officers of the Grand Commanderies and Commanderies holding charters direct from the Grand Encampment. All of the Grand officers answered to their names, and each State Grand Commandery and the several Charter Commanderies were ascertained to be represented.

Sir Knight Gobin, P. C. G., moved that all Sir Knights in the city and affiliated be admitted as visitors at the present Conclave, on condition that they appear in uniform. Carried.

It was then decided, on motion of Sir Knight Graves, that the Grand Prelate be admitted without uniform and that the wearing of uniforms be dispensed with at subsequent sessions of the Conclave.

The appointment of the following standing Grand committees was made:

Credentials—Henry W. Rothert, Iowa; George W. Walgrove, New York; Peyton S. Cates, Virginia; R. H. Loyde, California; Robert M. Wallace, South Carolina.

Templar Jurisprudence—J. H. Hopkins, Pennsylvania; Nicholas Van Slyke, Massachusetts; W. L. Bragg, Alabama; R. N. Johnson, Arkansas.

Deans of Grand Officers—J. Q. A. Fellows, Louisiana; James H. Hopkins, Pennsylvania; E. T. Carson, Ohio; J. L. English, California.

Dispensations and New Commanderies—George H. Bensenberg, Wisconsin; Daniel Smith, Alabama; M. H. Fitch, Colorado; H. T. Graves, California.

Unfinished Business—Hugh McCurdy, Michigan; J. C. McCoy, Texas; J. H. Welch, Connecticut; J. R. Parsons, Missouri; W. R. Robertson, Tennessee.

Bangs, Maine.

Foreign Relations—Past Grand Master J. Q. A. Fellows, Louisiana; Past Grand Master J. H. Hopkins, Pennsylvania; J. W. Simons, New York; Nicholas Van Slyke, Massachusetts and Rhode Island; Robert E. Withers, Virginia; Henry Turner, Illinois.

E. T. Carson, of Ohio, J. Q. A. Fellows, of Louisiana, and Charles F. Lott, were also appointed as a special committee on the Ritual of the Order of Malta, with instructions to report to-day, and J. S. Bangs, of Maine, W. D. Cornish, of Minnesota, F. G. Taggard, of Missouri, and George E. Carson, District of Columbia, were named as a committee to consider and recommend the city most desirable as the location of the next Triennial Conclave.

A voluminous address, devoid of any suggestions of public interest, was submitted in manuscript by the Grand Master and filed.

Wednesday, Aug. 22.

Most of the forenoon was occupied in discussing the ritual of the Knights of Malta. The issue as to whether the ritual to be used throughout the United States should be of the long or short form, was finally referred to the Grand Commanderies of the several States.

An invitation from the Garfield Monument Committee to the Encampment to attend the ceremonies of the laying of the corner-stone to-morrow, was accepted. W. D. Gould, of California, H. H. Taber, of Ohio, R. E. Withers, of Virginia, Charles Roome, of New York, and J. P. S. Gobin, of Pennsylvania, were appointed a committee to prepare a programme of the part to be taken in the ceremonies by the Grand Encampment.

The Grand Master appointed the following committee on Tactics: Jesse Saxton, of Michigan, J. P. Horner, of Louisiana, F. G. Gourgas, of Indiana, W. O. Gould, of California, and J. L. Stevenson, of Massachusetts.

Thursday, Aug. 23.

The whole of the morning was consumed in the election and installation of officers. Three distributing and three counting tellers having been appointed by Grand Master Dean, a ballot was taken for his successor.

One hundred and sixty-three votes were cast, 146 of which were found to be for Robert Enoch Withers of Alexandria, Va., the Right Eminent Deputy Commander of the organization for 1880-83. On motion, the election of Withers as Grand Master was made unanimous.

Proceeding next to ballot for the election of Deputy Grand Master the same number of votes were cast. Charles Roome of New York, the Past Grand Generalissimo, was found to have received ninety-three votes, and was, therefore, unanimously moved up one step higher.

The same promotion occurred in the case of John P. S. Gobin of Lebanon, Va., late Grand Captain-General, who, by a vote of 106 out of 156, was made Grand Generalissimo, and Hugh McCurdy of Cornua, Mich., late Grand Senior Warden, who, by a vote of 89 out of 146, was made Grand Captain-General, and William Larue Thomas of Danville, Ky., late Grand Junior Warden, who was made Grand Senior Warden.

Then the regular line of promotion ceased, and George Clement Perkins, Eminent Commander of the Grand Commandery of California, was made Junior Warden.

Next came the re-elections—those of John W. Simons, Grand Treasurer, and Theodore S. Parvin, Grand Recorder, the first resuming his office for the seventh time and the Recorder now entering on the fifth triennial term of office.

The organization for 1883-86, so far as yesterday's elections stand, is as follows:

Grand Master, Sir Robert E. Withers of Virginia.

Deputy Grand Master, Sir Charles Roome of New York.

Grand Generalissimo, Sir John P. Gobin of Pennsylvania.

Grand Captain-General, Sir Hugh McCurdy of Michigan.

Grand Senior Warden, Sir J. Larue Thomas of Kentucky.

Grand Junior Warden, Sir George C. Perkins of California.

Grand Treasurer, Sir John W. Simons of New York.

Grand Recorder, Sir Theodore S. Parvin of Iowa.

These are all the elective officers, but to complete the organization, Grand Commander Withers has since appointed the following subordinate officers:

Grand Prelate, Rev. George C. Buck of Missouri.

Grand Standard Bearer, Henry Stoddard of Texas.

Grand Sword Bearer, George R. Parsons of Missouri.

Grand Warden, Nicholas Van Slyke of Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Grand Captain of the Guard, Daniel Smith of Alabama.

Considerations of all proposed amendments to the Code and Constitution were laid over until the next Triennial Conclave.

The report on grievances was of no interest to the public; that on new Commanderies showed that there had been ten new Commanderies chartered during the past three years, their charters being issued to them at the close of the session.

The report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, referring to the interchange of representatives of Grand Commanderies outside of the United States, recommended that the old practice should be retained. This report was made with particular reference to the Grand Commandery of Canada, which the Grand Encampment has so far and still continues to refuse to admit to equal representation.

The reports of the committees on the doings of Grand Officers and on Jurisprudence were received.

The Committee on Tactics reported in favor of delegating to Grand Commanderies the right to select their own tactics.

Friday, Aug. 24.

The last session of the Grand Encampment was held Friday evening at the Masonic Temple and all business brought to a conclusion. The Committee on Place of Meeting handed in their report in favor of St. Louis. A motion was made to substitute Washington, D. C., for St. Louis, which was carried. Another motion was made to substitute Boston instead of Washington; this too was carried. To this many of the Knights raised objection, desiring a more central point of meeting. The matter was reconsidered and the place of the next meeting was decided to be St. Louis. The last motion was carried by a vote of 63 to 36, and on the third Tuesday of September, 1886, the Conclave will be held at the above mentioned city. The Knights throughout the Mississippi valley and West were the principal ones to oppose both Washington and Boston as suitable places and, in fact, the State of Missouri was the only one that invited the holding of the Encampment.

Grand Commander Perkins, who was not present at the installation of officers on Wednesday, was installed Junior Warden by the Grand Master.

The Grand Master appointed on the Committee of Templar Jurisprudence the following Knights: J. H. Hopkins of Pennsylvania, J. Q. A. Fellows of Louisiana, Benjamin Dean of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, E. F. Carson, of Ohio and Henry W. Rothert of Iowa.

The Conclave financial report shows the estimated receipts for the next three years to be $1,700. The surplus on hand when the Encampment came here amounted to $700. The estimated expenditures for the trip out here, consisting of railroad fares, hotel and other expenses, amounts to $8,000. The expenses of the Grand officers amounted in the aggregate to $2,900. The business being finished the Conclave Encampment adjourned to the time and place above mentioned.

Work for the Advancement of the Order.

Let the family of each Workman to which comes the FRATERNAL RECORD, show to their neighbors who are not members of that Order, but who would manage good and efficient Workmen, the advantages of this oldest of beneficiary organizations, and the one which they believe to be the best, as superiority is shown in each issue of this journal. If you are possessed with this paper, assist in doing the best possible work for the advancement of the Order, by circulating it where it will do the most good in creating favorable opinions of the Order in the minds of those who may be induced to join and become good members.

Valuable In and Out of Doors.

I have found the RURAL PRESS of great value to me during the past year; there is so much in it that one can learn both in great and small things, and we all take great pleasure in reading it. My wife can find much that interests her in the house, and I can find much that is valuable out of doors.—J. W. COTLER, Sonoma county.

Notices of Recent Patents.

Among the patents recently obtained through Dewey & Co.'s SCIENTIFIC PRESS American and Foreign Patent Agency, the following are worthy of special mention:

WATCH HOLDER.—Walter H. Blow, Oakland, Alameda Co. No. 283,855. Dated August 28th, 1883. This is a device by which an open watch may be conveniently supported with its face in an upright position so as to be easily read whenever desired, and which device may also support a suitably sized watch-safe, photograph holder or jewel case. The back piece is made of wood, metal or any suitable material, slightly curved to receive the watch. A curved bent wire has its ends bent to one side so that they may be received in the face of the back piece. The watch slips in behind the curved wire which arches around in front of its upper periphery. The device may be hung or fixed permanently in any convenient position on a wall or on the head of a bed, or it may be shaped so as to rest on a table or stand with a supporting brace behind.

ROOF SCAFFOLDING.—Aaron R. Manley, San Jose. No. 283,908. Dated Aug. 28, 1883. This invention is a device which Mr. Manley calls roof scaffolding, and it consists of plates to which boards for a scaffolding may be fixed, and to one end of which is hinged an adjustable brace, while to the other end is hinged a bar or plate, which lies along the inclined roof, and has a gorge-bar fixed to it, this inclined bar and the brace serving to level the one which supports the staging and adjust it to a roof of any pitch. The staging can be easily placed or moved from point to point with but little delay or loss of time, and no damage to the roof. It is firm and secure when in place.

BLACKBOARD RUBBER.—John Dooner, S. F. No. 283,870. Dated Aug. 28th, 1883. This is an improved rubber or eraser for blackboards. There is a main frame or body, and a secondary frame fitted within the main portion, and adapted to receive the erasing material around its periphery and below the main portion, which is combined with hooking devices by which the two frames may be secured together.

Mansfield, Ohio, Nov. 26, 1881.
Gentlemen:—I have suffered with pain in my side and back, and great soreness on my breast, with shooting pains all through my body, attended with great weakness, depression of spirits, and loss of appetite. I have taken several different medicines, and was treated by prominent physicians for my liver, kidneys, and spleen, but I got no relief. I thought I would try Brown's Iron Bitters; I have now taken one bottle and a half and am about well—pain in side and back all gone—soreness all out of my breast, and I have a good appetite, and am gaining in strength and flesh. ## A Short History of Excelsior Lodge, No. 126, A. O. U. W.

(J. SAM. BOOTH, P. M. W.)

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—A few months ago your paper contained what, I presume, was meant to be a standing invitation to any of the brethren of the Order who felt so disposed, and had access to the necessary data, to write up the history of the various Lodges to which they belonged. In this belief I have for some time been thinking of writing up a brief history of Excelsior, No. 126, when time and opportunity were favorable. I presume there is no Lodge in existence whose history is so barren of incident and whose experience is so uneventful; but its narration may afford a useful lesson to new Lodges and those in course of formation, showing them what they may with profit emulate and what they would do well to avoid.

Previous to the fall of 1879 the subject of forming a Lodge of Workmen in the southern part of the city, embracing all that vast portion south of Sixteenth street, had been agitated, and as it contained a great many heads of families, and gentlemen in every respect desirable as members of the Order, not as yet connected with any Lodge and desirous of joining themselves in the formation of a home Lodge, the time and opportunity seemed auspicious for organizing.

Accordingly about this time Mr. Frank M. Stone and Doctor A. L. Sobey, members of Bernal Lodge, No. 19, whose meetings were held in Masonic Hall, corner Sixteenth and Valencia streets, set about the

Preliminary Work

Of formation. It is said "the course of true love never does run smooth," and neither does the formation of new Lodges, as the brethren found in this instance at least, for considerable opposition was manifested against the proposed new organization by some of the Lodges in the district. But the men who had the matter in hand were not to be deterred by unreasonable opposition, and the formidable array of goodly names presented in the memorial for a charter received the unhesitating consent of Grand Master W. H. Jordan.

"There is nothing succeeds like success," and when it was found that the new Lodge was bound to go ahead, those who had been most determinedly opposed to it, acquiesced in its formation, or came quietly over to its assistance.

We are informed by the first official records of the Lodge that a meeting of such as desired to form a new Lodge was held in Blair's Lower Hall, Mission street, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth, September 5th, 1879, when the names of nineteen gentlemen, all men of character and respectable social standing in the neighborhood, were signed to

The New Charter.

The meeting was called to order by D. D. G. M. W., C. Flint, who instituted the Lodge under the name of Excelsior, 126, A. O. U. W., and installed the following as its officers for the current term: P. M. W., Rev. A. S. Fisk; M. W., L. B. Mastick; F., J. W. Mayberry; O. H. H. Mayhew; Recorder, F. A. Boole; Financier, A. L. Sobey; Receiver, W. S. Jobson; G., Sam. Booth; I. W., F. S. Poland; O., W., Jas. Booth. For Trustees, Bros. E. Knowlton, L. A. Boynton and F. M. Stone, and for Physician, Dr. A. L. Sobey, were elected and installed, and Thursday evening appointed as the night of meeting.

Leave having been obtained from the Grand Lodge to keep the charter open for one month, at the end of that time the new Lodge started upon its career with the names of seventy-two good men upon its rolls. Objection being urged against the room occupied by the Lodge, a hall in Mayberry's building was rented and taken possession of by them October 1st, 1879. On October 9th the Lodge gave its first entertainment in Mayberry's larger hall, the event of the evening being the presentation to D. G. M. Flint, of an elegant time piece, as a testimonial of esteem by the Lodge and a token of its appreciation of its installing officer. As "all work and no play" is said "to make Jack a dull boy," and as the Lodge has abundant material for getting up a little

Impromptu Entertainment

At any time, a place was early created in the "Order of Business" for this purpose so that the drier details of the Lodge business might be interspersed by a little pleasant recreation. The first committee appointed to provide this being Bros. W. S. Pierce, Sam. Booth and H. D. Mitchell. During all the history of the Lodge this feature has had an important effect in drawing the members together and making its meetings interesting. It may not be inappropriate to mention in this connection that a few months after the Lodge purchased a fine piano for its service and entertainments.

The intellectual status and general intelligence of its members has always been a matter of pride with Excelsior, and when the project of

Establishing a Library

For the use of its members and their families came up for consideration, November, 6th, 1879, it was received with instant approval. A committee of whom Bro. S. A. White, the prime mover in the project, was Chairman, was appointed and it was carried into effect immediately. An excellent collection of books to the number of several hundred were donated by the members of the Lodge, Bro. White elected Librarian, book-cases purchased and subsequently ten per cent of the general fund of the Lodge appropriated to its maintenance and support. And so this most admirable feature of Excelsior Lodge became an established institution. The first term of the new Lodge was now drawing to a close. It was already building up an enviable reputation among its sister subordinates, and 109 members in good standing were on its register entitling it to two representatives in the Grand Lodge about to convene at Sacramento, and as Bro. L. B. Mastick, the retiring M. W., found it inconvenient to become a delegate, Bro. F. M. Stone, who had been the prime mover in the formation of the Lodge, was technically put through the chairs and so became eligible. Bro. S. A. Fiske and himself were duly elected and so became the first representatives of Excelsior to the Grand Lodge of California. The officers of the Lodge were all re-elected to their old positions with the exception of O. W., to which position Bro. F. B. McStocker was elected; Bro. O. F. Von Rhien being also elected Trustee.

The Second Term

Of the Lodge passed without any particularly notable event. New members were continually added to its roll, one or two fraternal visits were paid to sister Lodges down town and the hospitalities of the Lodge were in turn extended to them. Open meetings were also held, to which the families and friends of the brethren were invited and pleasantly entertained. Several visits were also received from the Grand Officers of the jurisdiction who complimented the Lodge on its work, its personal and its brilliant prospects. Its entertainments were generally of a high order, and its meetings well attended, and if at any time a lack of interest threatened to manifest itself, a reference to the by-laws or a report on hall or ventilation introduced perennial subjects for lively discussion.

For the term ending December 31st, 1880, the following officers were elected and duly installed: P. M. W., L. B. Mastick; M. W., H. H. Mayhew; F., Sam. Booth; O., F. S. Poland; Recorder, A. T. Ruthrauf; Financier, Jas. Mason; Receiver, L. A. Boynton; G., Chas. J. Maurer; I. W., J. F. Jenness; O. W., C. E. Gifford; Librarian, L. A. White, re-elected; Physicians, Drs. A. L. Sobey, re-elected, and C. H. Steele; Trustee, Bro. W. G. Johnson. On August 2d, the by-laws, having been in the hands of committees for nearly a year, came up for final action and were approved by the necessary majority.

Monday evening, September, 6th, the Lodge celebrated its

First Anniversary

By a collation and literary and musical entertainment, which was well attended and much enjoyed.

On November 4th, the death of Bro. J. W. Mayberry, foreman of the Lodge during the first and second terms, was announced; the

First and Only Death

Among its members the Lodge has been called on to mourn, and various committees were appointed to make suitable arrangements for the funeral and to give proper expression to the sorrow of the Lodge in relation to the sad event. A donation of one hundred dollars was voted out of the general fund for the immediate use of the widow.

For the term ending June 30th, 1881, the following officers were elected and duly installed by Bro. W. W. Hanscom, acting G. M.: P. M. W., H. H. Mayhew; M. W., Sam. Booth; F., F. S. Poland; O., Chas. J. Maurer; Recorder, A. T. Ruthrauf, re-elected; Financier, J. S. Rolls; Receiver, C. R. Dempster; G., J. F. Jenness; I. W., Geo. A. Bordwell; O. W., O. B. Woolhouse; Librarian, S. A. White, re-elected; Organist, W. S. Pierce; Physicians, Drs. A. L. Sobey and C. H. Steele; Trustee, Edwin Goodall.

The Lodge being now entitled to three delegates to the Grand Lodge about to convene in San Francisco, Bros. P. M. W. Fiske, Mastick and Mayhew were duly elected as the Lodge representatives, P. M. W. and Grand Lodge representative, H. H. Mayhew, receiving the appointment of D. D. G. M. for his district. Another of

The Delightful Open Meetings

Of the Lodge was held January 13th, 1881, an excellent programme rendered and a good time enjoyed. The little impromptu entertainments at the Lodge meetings were kept up, being occasionally interspersed with short lectures by some of the brethren on subjects with which they were most familiar. The Library, under the fostering care of its careful custodian, continually grew in numbers, interest and usefulness to the Lodge.

The ill-ventilated, ill-smelling and altogether inadequate premises occupied by the Lodge were a continual cause of complaint and vexation, and various plans and propositions for obtaining better accommodations were brought before the Lodge and endlessly discussed, but apparently with no immediate resulting advantage to the long suffering Lodge. Doubtless, every Lodge has among its members some who are careless or indifferent about the regular payment of their dues and assessments, who would be very sorry to become delinquent, and so forfeit all claims on the Order in the event of their death. Excelsior is no exception to the rule, and many of its members have been

Kept in Good Standing

By a friendly fraternal feeling of their brethren in the Lodge. But to secure the matter beyond the peradventure of personal friendship, the Lodge voted to place twenty dollars in the hands of the Librarian for the purpose of paying the assessments of those whose beneficiary certificates would be jeopardized by their forgetfulness or temporary neglect, and authorized him to collect the same with a commission of twenty-five cents on every asset for the Library fund. The plan was not responded to with the same spirit of good will and fraternity with which it was conceived. Some of those whose good standing had been thus preserved, repaid the money very grudgingly, making the duty of collecting it very onerous and extremely disagreeable. Others, who were already careless or indifferent became still more so, feeling sure that their interests were secure, and so they were entirely unconcerned whether they ever came to the Lodge meetings or not. All these things were eventually brought for consideration before the Lodge, and the order for the payment of delinquent assessments by the Librarian was rescinded and the twenty dollars returned to the general fund.

For the term ending December 31, 1881, the following officers were duly elected and installed: P. M. W., Sam. Booth; M. W., F. S. Poland; F., C. J. Maurer; O., J. F. Jenness; Recorder, A. T. Ruthrauf, re-elected; Financier, J. S. Rolls, re-elected; Receiver, C. R. Dempster; G., Geo. A. Bordwell; I. W., O. B. Woolhouse; O. W., J. L. Beck; Bros. L. A. White and W. S. Pierce were also elected to the positions of Librarian and Organist, Geo. S. Owen for Trustee, and Drs. A. L. Sobey and C. H. Steele for Physicians, D. D. M. G. M. Mayhew acting as installing officer. The financial standing of the Lodge at this time, July 7, 1881, according to the Receiver's statement, was, cash in the Beneficiary Fund, $274.00, in the General Fund, $303.55; total, $577.55. In addition to this the Lodge owned $600.00 in U. S. Bonds. That the idea of

Fraternity and Philanthropy

With Excelsior should have a practical significance, and the obligation taken by its members should be something more than a mere formal declaration, the Lodge about this time donated to an absent brother who was sick and in sore distress the sum of fifty dollars.

The second annual entertainment commemorative of the founding of the Lodge took place in Blair's Hall, Mission street, September 6th. An excellent programme was presented, consisting of music interspersed with short speeches by members of the Lodge, and concluded with an address and humorous delineations by G. M. W., W. H. Barnes.

At the regular meeting, held September 22d, resolutions of respect to the memory of President Garfield were introduced by P. M. W., Sam. Booth and eloquently responded to by Bros. J. C. Stubbs, E. F. Adams and S. A. White. The Lodge, also, in the regalia of the Order joined in the parade in honor of the dead President on the 26th ult. A movement for the formation of a Lodge of the

Degree of Honor

To be composed of members of Excelsior, their families and friends, was carried into effect about this time, and the Lodge was formally organized and its officers installed Saturday evening, October 29, 1881, Excelsior granting them the use of their piano for Lodge service, and the privilege of taking books from the Library. January 5, 1882, the following officers, who had been regularly elected for the term ending June 30, 1882, were duly installed, D. D. G. M. Mayhew officiating as Grand Master: P. M. W., Frank S. Poland; M. W., C. J. Maurer; F., J. F. Jenness; O., Geo. A. Bordwell; Recorder, A. T. Ruthrauf, re-elected; Financier, J. F. Rolls, re-elected; Receiver, Joseph Jacobs; G., E. F. Adams; O. W., John L. Beck (Bro. F. L. Southack being installed inside Watchman at a subsequent meeting); Drs. Sobey and Steele were re-elected Physicians for the Lodge, and Past Masters, L. B. Mastick, S. Booth and F. S. Poland as representatives to the Grand Lodge.

Various "Hall Committees"

Had been continually appointed, and were ever on the alert to find a more suitable place for the Lodge meetings, and about this time it was thought a solution of the vexed question had been found. The proprietor of the hall, corner Twenty-first and Howard streets, proposed to build another story for large meetings on that building. Plans and specifications of the proposed additions were submitted to and approved by the Lodge. The committee for the time being were instructed to negotiate a lease for the new hall, if satisfactory arrangements could be made, and in anticipation the Lodge reveled in the luxury of convenient and commodious accommodations. Alas! vain hope! At the next meeting the committee reported that they had been unable to make such arrangements as they considered advantageous to the Lodge.

One of the by-laws in force at this time provided that whenever there was enough money in the General Fund, over and above the sum of one dollar for each member, to pay an assessment, that such assessment should be ordered paid out of such fund, and the Lodge being in this happy condition, assessment No. 3 was ordered to be so paid by the Master Workman February 2, 1882.

[TO BE CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.]

MARRYING.—It is mighty sad to see a girl come back to her father's house to live, after she has been married for a year or two. Poor thing, she never knew what a good home she had until she left it, and by and by she comes back, pale and sad, and the man she trusted goes another way. That is the wreck of a life. No more happiness for her. No wonder that parents feel anxious about their daughters, and daughters ought to think and ponder a long time before they marry. A father's house and mother's love are mighty hard to beat. But, then, a happy marriage is the highest state of happiness, and every girl ought to look forward to it. There are lots of clever young men of good principles, and who have been raised by good parents. The girls ought to mate with 'em, money or no money. Money is a good thing, but principle is better; and if a young feller has got both, and don't drink nor gamble, and is industrious and healthy, why he is all right, and if I was a girl I would put him on probation, and say, I think you are a very good man, but you know I am an angel, and if — Well, if he seemed to doubt my being an angel, I would just tell him to go hence. If a young man don't look upon his girl as an angel before he marries, he never will afterward; and if I was a girl, I would be an angel as long as I could.—Sunny South.

Another Overland Road.

On Saturday, Sept. 8th, the last spike on the Northern Pacific railroad was driven, and another overland line was completed. It is an event of much importance to the Pacific coast, as it promises that an era of competition in the overland traffic is to begin, and that another agency for the development of our grand coast regions is to be put in active operation. The ceremonies of the completion of the road were of a very interesting character, and were witnessed by a distinguished throng of people from all parts of the United States, and from several countries of Europe. The scene where the last spike was driven is one of great beauty. It is in Montana, on the north side of Deer Lodge river, bordered with beautiful trees. On the south is a small plain, the whole surrounded with a perfect amphitheater of wooded hills. The site of the junction of the east and west lines is 1,198 miles from Lake Superior, and 2,847 miles from Puget Sound. An address was made by President Villard, who has carried the enterprise to its completion. William M. Evarts, the distinguished statesman and orator, also delivered a speech, eloquently reviewing the history of the great undertaking, and closing as follows:

This last achievement of the intelligence and energy of our people climbs over the lofty range of mountains which divides the waters of a continent between the two great oceans of the world. It binds together by one more indissoluble bond the destinies of a great people who look from the windows of their habitation upon the horses of the sun as they rise from the stormy waves of the Atlantic, and again when they quench their fire in the smooth waters of the Pacific. It forms one more portage for the water-borne commerce which plies between Europe and Asia. It brings new fields to tillage adequate to feed tens of millions, under whose healthy and happy toil their seed-time and harvest shall never fail, and tens of millions more, less fortunate, who crowd the workshops and the factories, the cities and the mines of Europe and America in this age of industry. It will help to assuage inequalities of nature and disparities of fortune among our own people, and to spread peace, plenty and prosperity to other nations. Nor does it lessen our gratitude and gratulations that this is not the first, and that it will not be the last, that this wide land of ours witnesses on the same great scale of effort and beneficence.

It is fourteen years since the first great continental road was completed through the united efforts of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific Companies. It was the great event of the times. Since that date the Southern Pacific Railroad has been practically completed from this city to New Orleans; and a second great line, known under various names, but better as the Atlantic and Pacific, has been constructed as far as the Colorado river, there to connect with the now almost completed continental route. The Northern Pacific takes its place this day as the third great continental railroad. The fourth, when completed, will be the Atlantic and Pacific, either under that name or some other.

Don't Fail to Write.

Should this paper be received by any subscriber who does not want it, or beyond the time they intend to pay for it, let them not fail to write us direct to stop it. A postal card (costing one cent only) will suffice. We will not knowingly send the paper to anyone who does not wish it, but if it is continued, through the failure of the subscriber to notify us to discontinue it, or some responsible party requested to stop it, we shall positively demand payment for the time it is sent.

Dairy Value of the "Rural Press."

EDITORS PRESS.—I would not willingly be without a single number of the RURAL PRESS, as one single number has proved to be worth to me during last spring fifteen times the yearly subscription, because of the advice given for treatment of milk fever. Send it right along.—ROWLAND MACHIN, Santa Barbara county.

GOOD TEAMS IN OAKLAND can be had at the City Hall Stables, No. 514 Fourteenth street, west of the City Hall.

To All "Workmen."

Ever onward and upward is the motto of the A. O. U. W., and with the success of the Order is the PACIFIC STATES WATCHMAN's progress. There are, however, some Workmen who are not subscribers, and we wish to draw their attention to the merits of our journal. Those of our readers who have been with us from the start, and also those who have come later, can do much to not only aid our enterprise, but also that of our organization. They have been with us, seen our work, and can best tell whether the WATCHMAN has been an earnest advocate of the Order's interests or not.

Members of the A. O. U. W. have a pecuniary interest, which renders an able exponent of their rights and privileges of paramount importance. Therefore, every member of the Order should take the paper, read it, and if he has some friend who is morally and physically qualified, lend him the paper for the purpose of hastening action.

Members of the WATCHMAN family who have felt strength and received encouragement from a perusal of the Order's doings in its columns, would do well, also, to pass it occasionally around to the lukewarm, that they may be partakers in the faith which moves them.

The privileges we now enjoy by reason of our membership will last while life is in us, and when we are gone, others will be ready to fill our places. If the Order should ever perish, lukewarmness will be the rock upon which we shall split, and one of the greatest provocations of this will be the enthusiasm that is kept alive by a careful reading of the WATCHMAN.

Our subscription rates are two dollars a year. We will send copies free for samples to those who are willing to assist in the circulation of our paper.

Dewey & Co., American and Foreign Patent Agents.

PATENTS obtained promptly; Caveats filed expeditiously; Patent Reissues taken out; Assignments made and recorded in legal form; Copies of Patents and Assignments procured; Examinations of Patents made here and at Washington; Examinations made of Assignments recorded in Washington; Examinations ordered and reported by Telegraph; Rejected cases taken up and Patents obtained; Interferences Prosecuted; Opinions rendered regarding the validity of Patents and Assignments; Every legitimate branch of Patent Soliciting promptly and thoroughly conducted.

Our intimate knowledge of the various inventions of this coast, and long practice in patent business, enable us to abundantly satisfy our patrons; and our success and business are constantly increasing.

The shrewdest and most experienced Inventors are found among our most steadfast friends and patrons, who fully appreciate our advantages in bringing valuable inventions to the notice of the public through the columns of our widely circulated, first-class journals—thereby facilitating their introduction, sale and popularity.

Foreign Patents.

In addition to American Patents, we secure, with the assistance of co-operative agents, claims in all foreign countries which grant Patents, including Great Britain, France, Belgium, Prussia, Austria, Baden, Peru, Russia, Spain, British India, Saxony, British Columbia, Canada, Norway, Sweden, Mexico, Victoria, Brazil, Bavaria, Holland, Denmark, Italy, Portugal, Cuba, Roman States, Wurtemberg, New Zealand, New South Wales, Queensland, Tasmania, Brazil, New Granada, Chile, Argentine Republic, AND EVERY COUNTRY IN THE WORLD where Patents are obtainable.

No models are required in European countries, but the drawings and specifications should be prepared with thoroughness, by able persons who are familiar with the requirements and changes of foreign patent laws—agents who are reliable and thoroughly established.

Our schedule price for obtaining foreign patents, in all cases, will always be as low, and in some instances lower, than those of any other responsible agency.

We can and do get foreign patents for inventors in the Pacific States from two to six months (according to the location of the country) SOONER than other agents.

The principal portion of the patent business of this coast has been done, and is still being done, through our agency. We are familiar with, and have full records, of all former cases, and can more correctly judge of the value and patentability of most inventions discovered here than any other agents.

Situated so remote from the seat of Government, delays are even more dangerous to the inventors of the Pacific Coast than to applicants in the Eastern States. Valuable patents may be lost by extra time consumed in transmitting specifications from Eastern agencies back to this coast for the signature of the inventor.

Confidential.

We take great pains to preserve secrecy in all confidential matters, and applicants for patents can rest assured that their communications and business transactions will be held strictly confidential by us. Circulars of information to inventors, free.

Home Counsel.

Our long experience in obtaining patents for inventors on this Coast has familiarized us with the character of most of the inventions already patented; hence we are frequently able to save our patrons the cost of a fruitless application by pointing to them the same thing already covered by a patent. We are always free to advise applicants of any knowledge we have of previous applicant's which will interfere with their obtaining a patent.

We invite the acquaintance of all parties connected with inventions and patent right business, believing that the mutual conference of legitimate business and professional men is mutual gain. Parties in doubt in regard to their rights as assignees of patents or purchasers of patented articles, can often receive advice of importance to them from a short call at our office.

Remittances of money, made by individual inventors to the Government, sometimes mis-carry, and it has repeatedly happened that applicants have not only lost their money, but their inventions also, from this cause and consequent delay. We hold ourselves responsible for all fees entrusted to our agency.

Engravings.

We have superior artists in our employ, and all facilities for producing fine and satisfactory illustrations of inventions and machinery, for newspaper, book, circular and other printed illustrations, and are always ready to assist patrons in bringing their valuable discoveries into practical and profitable use.

What One Sees at the Fair.

The noble horse, "his neck with thunder cloth'd," Man's faithful friend, from early morn till eve;
Without his aid, man's greatest effort to Support himself were frail indeed.
The stately bull, with broad, expansive chest,
That would have stood conspicuous 'mong the folks
Of Og, and graced the landscapes on the slopes
Of Bashan. The timid cow, housewife's Frustrated friend, wondering look, seems half Alarm'd, so many stand to praise. The works Of art, here, too, conspicuous shine.
The massy wagon, for the farm, with strength
And elegance combin'd. The carriage,
Of varied form, like chariots of the sun,
Which might have graced a Roman conqueror's Triumph. The plows well fitted for the soil,
With mouldboard, share and bar of polished steel,
Show vast improvement on the days gone by,
And 'neath that canopy the household arts,
In order grand, are seen. There woman rules Supreme. The most fastidious taste may Find enjoyment here. From winter's cosy Garb to summer's light attire, of many
A form, and many a varied hue,
The "odds and ends" of life attract the gaze,
Come hither, ye who boast of single bliss,
And learn to prize God's noblest, temporal gift
To helpless man. The roots and fruits of earth,
In order rang'd, man's "daily bread," of size Enormous, fitted for display, of boasted Flavor and of beautiful hue. The dairy's
Yellow store, in golden wreaths, to catch the eye,
But more the palate please, awaits the judges'
Scrutinizing skill. Who would not linger here
And taste the sweets of nature, and her handmaid
Art? While woman's smile plays like a sunbeam,
And enlivens all.

The Boys We Need.

Here's to the boy who's not afraid
To do his share of work;
Who never is by toil dismayed,
And never tries to shirk.

The boy whose heart is brave to meet
The lions in the way;
Who's not discouraged by defeat,
But tries another day.

The boy who always means to do
The very best he can;
Who always keeps the right in view,
And aims to be a man.

Such boys as these will grow to be
The men whose hands will guide
The future of our land; and we Shall speak their names with pride.

All honor to the boy who is
A man at heart, I say;
Whose legend on his shield is this,
"Right always wins the day."

CATCHING COLD.—How can a man "catch cold" in a Pullman in July? Simplest thing in the world. Sit still most of the time for a week, and eat "as much as you want" every five or six hours. Don't restrict yourself to simple food, as fruits, with a little coarse bread, for example. When the feeding stations are reached don't devote the half hour to walking up and down the platform, swinging the arms well so as to exercise the body all over, encouraging the excretory system to keep the body clean, but join the crowd in their rush for an excessive quantity of hot fried stuff, wheat starch bread, "pie," and hot slops. Eat till the bell rings for "all aboard," then rush back into the unventilated car and sink down in a corner, doubled up in a heap, and sleep off your surfeit. You are pretty certain to "catch" something by the time you land in New York. Why not call it "a cold?" Sure enough!

Mining and Scientific Press.

THE MINING AND SCIENTIFIC PRESS is the leading mining journal in America, and enjoys a larger circulation among the more intelligent operators and workers in the gold fields of the world.

Established in 1860, it has firmly maintained its position as a reliable, progressive journal. The information given in its columns has saved millions of dollars to the practical miners, metallurgists, mill men, mine and shareholders on the Western side of our continent.

Among its contributors are the ablest and most experienced mining engineers, superintendents and practical miners in this country.

The Press gives a condensed summary of Mining News from the most important mining districts of the country.

New processes and methods of mining are described in its weekly issues. New mining machinery and improvements are frequently illustrated and explained in a manner to be of great value to all interested in mining.

As a scientific and mechanical representative of the Pacific coast it is decidedly popular, and a standard journal with the most thrifty industrial people of the Pacific States and Territories. Its authority is of the highest order, and its usefulness in its special sphere unrivalled.

Every public library, mining engineer, metallurgist, mining operator and intelligent mechanic and manufacturer, will find profit by its reading.

Subscription, $3 a year in advance. Sample copies prepaid, 10 cents.

In The Redwoods.

The San Lorenzo river is the principal stream of Santa Cruz county, so that it is dignified by the name of "river" instead of "creek," though it is not navigable. It rises in the mountain near the summit, only six or eight miles from Congress Springs, Santa Clara county. The head waters, however, are over the ridge on the Santa Cruz side of the mountains. It is here a fine clear stream, flowing steeply until down about Buckskin Lawrence's, where the stream begins to run more level and get larger. From there down it receives constant additions of water from numerous tributaries. First comes King's Creek, flowing down from the summit and about doubling the quantity of water. Several smaller streams come in before the main stream reaches the Boulder Creek, some seven miles above Felton. At this point Bear Creek joins the Lorenzo, Bear having previously been amplified by its own tributary, Deer Creek; right opposite enters Boulder Creek, a good large stream. Further down the Cyant'e comes in, as well as several smaller streams.

Near Felton it becomes deeper and widens, and so continues to Santa Cruz itself. Not only the main stream but its tributaries also contain an abundance of trout, and for those who love angling there are no finer places. The scenery along the Lorenzo is very fine. The mountain ridges and canyons are covered with timber. The climate is warm and mild, and in the summer is far preferable to the interior of the State, where it is apt to be too warm.

Above Felton the prettiest scenery is met with. At Boulder Creek, particularly, there is much in the surroundings that is enjoyable. There are numerous lumber mills at various points, and a large V flume conveys lumber from a long distance up the San Lorenzo down to Felton. The redwood forests of the region are very valuable, and there are immense tracts still available. As is mentioned in another column, the redwood of this State is now highly appreciated abroad and in the East as an ornamental wood, and the California redwood industry is attracting much foreign capital.

During the past few summers, that part of the Santa Cruz Mountains through which the San Lorenzo passes has been greatly sought after by campers. Being comparatively near to San Francisco, it is readily accessible by teams, and it is an abundantly watered region. The narrow-gauge railroad strikes the San Lorenzo at Felton, and hundreds of people camp thereabouts every year.

The water of this creek is very pure and clear. There are many very picturesque spots along its course, which to a lover of nature are highly enjoyable. As the creek enters the Pacific ocean at the bathing beach, Santa Cruz, it broadens and deepens, and row boats may be used there. At this point, too, are numerous bath houses, and many prefer to bathe in the smooth waters of the creek, or "river," rather than in the rollers of the ocean.

THE Canadian Workman states that a

A Response to "The Bachelor."

In a recent issue we printed a communication from "A Bachelor" suggesting "the formation of a Bachelor Division of the A. O. U. W., the object of which would be to form an association for mutual benefit, each member of which shall contribute one dollar on the marriage of another member." At the same time we invited the contribution of opinions on the same subject. The Baltimore Protector comes up smiling with the following, which we fear will knock out "Bachelor" on the first round:

Before accepting this invitation to give our opinion, there are some inquiries we would like to make. How is it that this particular bachelor has been so long coming association or when he joins in the holy bonds of matrimony?

These are some of our inquiries. Now, our opinion, which is called for, is that that bachelor has his heart set upon some lovely female member of the D. of H., and they are both anxious that the "Bachelor Division" be formed very soon. When that association is formed, we have the names of two good and worthy P. G. M. W.'s of Pennsylvania to propose for membership.

A Poor Plan.

It is a poor plan to start a Degree of Honor Lodge, and then expect it to live without care or attention. The following from the Recorder of one of our interior Degree of Honor Lodges, addressed to the Grand Recorder, illustrates this:

"We have not had a quorum one-fifth of the time since our organization. The Workmen seemed remarkably anxious for this Degree until they succeeded in getting it, then they deserted the ladies. The D. of H. had to meet the same night as the regular Lodge, consequently we had to sit out in the ante-room, or anywhere we could, until their Lodge session closed, when the most of the Workmen went home and left us without a quorum. This discouraged the faithful few. Some of the Workmen seem to think it unnecessary to have separate meetings, as the work is so nearly alike. If the Grand Master would permit of our meeting together I think it might be better. Unless something is done we shall have to close sine die."

Of course it would be impossible under our present law to do as the Recorder suggests in regard to consolidating the meetings, but there are various ways of reviving interest which we have already published in previous numbers. We trust they will not give up yet.

ATTENTION is called to the interesting article concerning the new Lodge hall of Excelsior, No. 126, appended to the conclusion of Mr. Booth's historical sketch of said Lodge.

THE Princess of Wales is becoming deaf, and the best aurists are unable to suggest a remedy.

SCENE ON SAN LORENZO RIVER, SANTA CRUZ CO., CAL.

prominent gentleman, recently addressing an audience, stated that he could say from personal observation that the A. O. U. W. contained the "cream of the country." There is little question but that this is the fact everywhere. In Missouri, where we are better acquainted than elsewhere, we know it to be so, and in California the best citizens of every locality are enrolled in our ranks.—St. Louis Overseer.

If Indiana has twenty-eight or more deaths this year among its members we will have to pay up to twenty-eight before relief can be granted under the present Relief Law. On the other hand, if there are less than twenty deaths, twenty assessments will still have to be paid, and whatever surplus remains will be returned to the Supreme Lodge Relief Fund. The indications are that there will be about twenty-three assessments to pay this year, all for deaths among our own members.—Indiana Recorder.

Wisconsin, with a membership of 5,000, has had but five assessments in five months.

to the conclusion that the true state of every bachelor is to get married? Is he a new convert to this theory? Would he be willing to enter into bonds with approved sureties on double the amount he might draw out, conditioned that he would not call upon the association for one year from date of joining it? Do the assessments cease as soon as the bachelorhood is ended? Will widowers under this be considered bachelors? Inasmuch as he proposes to "limit to unmarried members of the A. O. U. W. and D. of H., male and female," will the female bachelor contribute the same as male bachelors? If a male bachelor should consider he could best promote civilization by marrying a female bachelor, will there be a double assessment? In case all of the association should be suddenly impressed with the idea that they should promote civilization and make themselves what they ought to be, will there be a relief call? Will the members of this proposed association hold open meetings? Will there be any signs or winks, warning signs or distress calls? When will the degree be conferred, when he joins the

The King's Daughters.

The king's three little daughters, 'neath the palace
Had fallen into earnest talk that put an end to play—
And the weary king smiled once again to hear what "It is I who love our father best!" the eldest daughter
"I am the oldest princess!" and her pretty face grew red;
"What is there none can do without? I love him more than bread!"
Then said the second princess, with her bright blue
"Than bread? A common thing like bread! Thou hast not any shame!
Glad am I it is I, not thou, called by our mother's name.
"I love him with a better love than one so tame as More than—oh, what then shall I say that is both bright and fine.
And is not common? Yes, I know—I love him more than wine!"
Then the little youngest daughter, whose speech would sometimes halt
For her dreamy way of thinking, said, "You are both in fault,
'Tis I who love our father best—I love him more than salt!"
Shrill little shrieks of laughter greeted her latest word,
As the two jointed hands, exclaiming, "But this is most absurd."
And the king, no longer smiling, was grieved at what he heard.
For the little youngest daughter, with her eyes of
"I could always move his tenderness, and charm his

"But she is very little, and I will find no fault
That, while her sisters strive to see who most shall

She holds me nothing dearer than a common thing

The portly cook was standing in the courtyard by the spring;
He winked and nodded to himself, "That little quiet

That afternoon at dinner there was nothing fit to eat;
The king turned, frowning angrily, from soup and fish and meat,
And he found a glowing sweetness in the dishes that were sweet.
"And yet," he muttered, musing, "I cannot find the fault,
Not a thing has tasted like itself but this honest cup of malt."
Said the young princess, shyly, "Dear father, they

A sudden look of tenderness shone on the king's

—ONE LITERARY.

Trying on a Dress.

"There," said Miss Piping, the dressmaker,
"let me ketch it up a little on this side." Then fishing a pin out of her mouth and sticking it into the cloth, which she patted gently, as though she were fashioning a biscuit, she continued:
"There, now, that's jest right—wait a minute"—pulling out a basting thread—"there!
now look in the glass, Mrs. Homespun, and see how you like it. I want you to tell me just what you think. I think it fits you splendid."
"Don't you think," suggested Mrs. Homespun, after going through a series of twists and turns which would cause a circus contortionist to grow green with envy; "don't you think the sleeves are a little too tight?"
"Not a particle," replied the dressmaker, with emphasis; "you'd oughter seen Mrs. Show-body's sleeves, if you think them tight."
"Mrs. Showbody and I are different persons," said Mrs. Homespun, still looking at her sleeves. "I suppose she doesn't care how tight her sleeves are 'long as they are in fashion. I want to be comfortable; and with my little arms, I'd look nice, wouldn't I, with tight sleeves?"
"Oh, I can let them out, if you insist upon it," said Miss Piping; "but I don't think they are a bit too tight. What do you think, Mary?"
appealing to Mrs. Homespun's niece.
"If anything," replied Mary, "I don't think they are tight enough."
"It will do very well for you to talk, Mary," said Mrs. Homespun, raising her forefinger and dropping it into the palm of the other hand to add force to her remarks. "It will do very well for you to talk; you're young; but for an old woman like me to try to make myself look like a girl, it's perfectly ridiculous. I ain't a-going to make a ninny of myself at my time of life. Anybody that wants to jest because it's fashionable can do so for all me; but I hope I've got some sense left. What do you think of them, Mrs. Brown?"

"I think they're just lovely," replied Mrs.
Brown; "not a bit too tight. They look so to you, Nancy, because you've been wearing that bombazine you've had so long; but you'll get used to them. Why, look at mine!"

"I know, Hannah; you always was a stylish body. But I believe I'd fly in sleeves that I couldn't move my arms in. Do you really think I look like a fool in them? Come, tell me. I don't want to be a laughing stock."

The trio assured her that they couldn't see anything out of the way; that they were just right, and they never saw her look so well in anything she ever had on.

Mrs. Homespun looked at the sleeves with scowled brows, and finally said, "Well," which, being interpreted, meant that she wasn't convinced, but would let the sleeves pass for the present.

"Don't you think it sticks out too much behind?" was her next criticism, after nearly twisting her head off trying to look at her back.

"Why, aunt!" exclaimed her niece.

"There!" interrupted Mrs. Homespun, "I know what you're going to say. But you don't get any bustle on to me. I don't want to look deformed. When I see folks sticking out behind so I wonder how they'd feel if they were made so."

"Oh, but that isn't too much," said Miss Piping, passing her hand down the back breadth. I should have made it different, only you said you didn't want it too full in the back. But it would set so much better, now, if you'd let me sew in a piece of wigan. Let me show you." And Miss Piping took a newspaper, and tumbling it up in her hands, inserted it beneath Mrs. Homespun's overskirt.
"There! how much better that looks!" turning to Mrs. Brown and Mary for their acquiescence.

"Oh! ever so much better," said Mrs. Brown.
"Why, auntie, you don't know how nice you look!" was Mary's verdict.

"Take it out!" commanded Mrs. Homespun.
It's horrid."

Miss Piping removed the offending literature.

"But you must have something in it," she persisted; when the stiffness gets out of the goods, it will be as flat as a pancake. Let me tack a piece of wigan in it. If you don't like it, I'll take it right out."

"Not so much as that," exclaimed Mrs. Homespun. "Not more'n half of that."

"Oh, dear, the whole of it won't be too much."

"I tell you I won't have so much; I should never be happy in it."

"Well, then," said Miss Piping, smiling; "I'll tear it in halves."

After tacking and pinning and pulling and patting the thing is again ready for inspection.
"That's better," says the dressmaker.

"Much better," says Mrs. Brown.

Mary again thinks her aunt never looked so well in her life.

"I don't know," says Mrs. Homespun, hesitatingly. "Don't you think it's too much?"

"Not a bit," is the woman's reply.

"Well, I don't know," replied Mrs. Homespun, adding, after a pause, "I'll keep the rest so if it gets too flat, you know—Then she takes another look at her background. "Mary," she says, "I wonder how one of them long bustles would look—not one of those like yours, all in a bunch. If I didn't think it might git one."

"Let me hitch it up a little here," said the dressmaker. "There, that's it; now you want to have a bow there—"

"No, I won't have a bow. I hate bows."

"It would make it look so much prettier," coaxed the dressmaker; "or you might have a jet ornament."

"I'd rather have that than a bow," says Mrs.
Homespun.

"Then you want another on this side behind."

"Oh, I don't want to pile so much stuff on to it." Mrs. Homespun looks at her reflection in the mirror again. "Well, I suppose I shall have to have one there."

"Bows would look ever so much better," the dressmaker suggests.

"No, I won't have bows. I suppose I shall feel like a fool as it is; but I guess it will look better with the ornaments."

And so it goes on for a half hour or more.

The dressmaker goes away, and then comes another investigation before the mirror. Mrs.

Homespun asks half a dozen times, "Now, don't you think these sleeves are too small? Doesn't it stick out too much behind? Doesn't it look as though I was trying to make a girl of myself?" etc. And she is as often assured that they are just right; that she looks real nice in it;
that they never saw her in anything that became her so, and much more to the same effect.

Next day, Mrs. Homespun calls on the dressmaker and tells her that "I have a good mind to try them bows—jest to please Mary, you know, though I don't believe I'll ever feel contented in it. And while you're about it, you may take the sleeves in jest a little. I don't want to be way out of the fashion, and I guess they are a little too loose. And I don't know but you'd better put in the whole of that wigan;

perhaps it will set a little better.

When Mrs. Homespun appears in her new dress the sleeves are skin-tight; a big bow with long ends is on front and another on behind, and any one can see with half an eye that Mrs.
Homespun has got on that bustle she bought in the city yesterday, as an auxiliary to all that wigan.

The dressmaker has carried her point; she always does.—Boston Transcript.

The Reason Why.

[WRITTEN BY EMILY L. BROWN.]

Few people ever think of the hardship the law imposes on women. If you will spare a little time to the subject, you may not wonder at the discontent of women with their lot. By reference to the civil code of California, you will find that while a woman is single she can hold and transfer real property as readily as a man. She is also allowed to pay taxes on her property, taxes which she had no voice in levying. A similar grievance led our forefathers into war, at the close of which they declared that never in the United States of America should there be any taxation without representation, except where women were the persons taxed. When a woman marries, she may hold her separate property as she did when single;
may sue alone concerning it; may will it away without her husband's consent; but she can not convey it by an attorney-in-fact, because her acknowledgment of the deed must be personal. This all seems fair enough, but it is regarding the community property, the property that even the law regards as the joint earnings of the husband and wife during marriage, that injustice appears. During the life of the husband, he has absolute control over this property. He may sell it, mortgage it, drink it up, or give it away, and the wife cannot interfere.
On her death, it becomes his absolutely, regardless of any children of the marriage; but on the death of the husband, the wife can lay claim to only one-half of it; and if the husband dies intestate and leaves minor heirs, his widow cannot get even her half until the youngest child is of age. There is no sufficient reason for the continuance of this state of facts. To be sure, if the property were to pass to the wife on the husband's death, she might waste it, or might marry some worthless fellow who would squander it; but is it true, that all folly is confined to widows, and that widowers never squander their property nor allow it to be wasted by a second matrimonial partner? The law presents an anomaly here, inasmuch as it holds a widow incapable of managing property, while admitting the existence of such capacity in a single woman, while the probability is that the single woman is young and inexperienced, and the widow, on the contrary, is mature in years and experienced in business affairs.

Inadequate as are the reasons given for the existence of these laws now, inadequate as far as modern experience and customs are considered, still there was a reason for such laws in the beginning. That reason was based on a state of society long since swept away; and therefore it is but just to woman that the laws themselves should likewise be set aside.

Our law is founded on the common law, and the common law, in so far as it concerns woman, is based on the feudal system. This feudal system regarded all the land in the kingdom as the property of the king, and all the men in the kingdom as soldiers of the king. In the eyes of that system, the population of the country was a standing army, and all the land in the country was the reward of service to the warriors.
In such a system women counted for no more than children. They could not fight for the king, and therefore were not entitled to any of the king's land. As to the children that a warrior might in dying leave behind, these were the wards of the king; he would provide for them.

Modern legislators have erased from the statute books many of the laws of feudal times which were inconsistent with the circumstances of the new times; but in the laws concerning women, many traces of the law of feuds are still to be seen.

For many years women have endeavored to have the severity of the law relaxed, and have succeeded but indifferently. We find two difficulties in the way; first, in convincing a majority of the members of the Legislature of the wisdom of a particular measure, and then in inducing them to disregard party cries and vote for it. So now you find us asking that we may vote ourselves, in order that we may ourselves choose the members of the Legislature, and thus insure the passage of measures for our own protection.

It was argued so ably by John Stuart Mill, and the force of his arguments has been so universally admitted, that women have in justice a right to vote, that it seems unnecessary to say anything more on the subject.

It was further argued by Mr. Mill—and it is on this point that we chiefly dwell—that the State cannot afford to do without the votes of one-half the population, especially as that half consists of the very individuals most deeply concerned in the maintenance of good government. In other words, we say that women not only have a natural right to vote, but also that they ought to exercise that right. On questions of war and peace, taxation, education, temperance, municipal and State government,
who is more deeply concerned than the mothers, wives and daughters of the State? All that has been said by men, since the world began, of woman's superior moral nature is but the lightest flattery if you will not allow us to exercise that superiority when it can accomplish its greatest possible results for the good of the community. Where can the moral force of women be employed so effectively as at the ballot-box, in defense of home and children?

It is frequently urged that women can do more good by their influence indirectly exerted;
that is, by their influence on husbands and sons,
in inducing them to vote on the right side, than by voting themselves. If ever there was an argument plausible but fallacious, this is one. Some women undoubtedly have such influence; but is that any reason for depriving all women of effective expression of opinion? In a State where there are twenty-five women to every man, granting one woman to every man the privilege of voting by proxy, this argument of indirect voting deprives twenty-four women to every voter of any voice whatever in subjects in which the women may themselves be most deeply interested parties. Even where the number of women in a State exactly equals the number of men, how many women will ever succeed in getting some man always to vote on their side? And if such success were possible, what a deplorable state of subjection would be that of the voting sex! How much more just and noble to let each woman express her own opinion, for herself, by the silent dropping of a piece of folded paper into the ballot-box.

No race ever attained its highest development while in subjection. It is idle to expect women to reverse the rule, or ever to unfold all the good in her nature until she, too, enjoys perfect freedom.

An Untidy Girl.

[WRITTEN BY EMILY L. BROWN.]

"O dear, Aunt Patty, I am perfectly discouraged in trying to make Mary a neat, orderly, girl. A month ago, I told her that she must take care of her own room, and wished her to keep it in nice order. 'Yes, mamma, I will do so,' said she, and now, I just went into her room, and such a looking place! Her bed, just as she crept out of it this morning; every chair loaded with shawls, wraps, dresses, and skirts, all wrinkled and tumbled together; her toilet table, strewn with dirty combs filled with hair; also hairpins, nail brushes, carmel papers, cologne, face powder, partly eaten pears and peaches; and on the stand was her best bonnet, gloves and parasol, with her inkstand and paint brushes; and everything was in confusion and covered with dust. In her shoe-bag, mixed with slippers and dirty stockings, were linen, cambric handkerchiefs, point lace collars, and this elegant embroidered sacque, that I believe she has worn while working at her painting lessons, and has wiped her brushes on it. It is entirely ruined. She begins a dozen pieces of work and never finishes anything. Just so with her studies. She has a little smattering of everything, and is a proficient in nothing. To think that a daughter of mine should be such a careless, wasteful, inefficient slattern. And I have talked and talked to Net, and it does no good;
and I am utterly discouraged."

This was all addressed by Mrs. Smith, a notably energetic wife and excellent housekeeper, to her old aunt Patty, who sat quietly knitting, arrayed in a high, starched cap and spotless white neck-handkerchief and apron, and when she had adjusted her spectacles and carefully taken up a dropped stitch she looked up and remarked: "Do you think it is all Mary's fault? Have you always done your whole duty by the child?" "Have I done my whole duty by her; what an idea! Was there ever a mother who slaved herself for a child as I have done for her? And I have never denied her anything in the world that she wanted." "There lies your fault," said aunt Patty; "you always waited upon her when she was a child, and did everything for her, when she should have done it for herself. You let her go to your bureau drawers and put everything in disorder, and to your work-basket and scatter its contents about the room, throw nutshells on the floor, and leave partly munched fruit and apple-cores on the window-sills; and instead of making her replace the articles that she had disordered, though she was quite old enough to have done so, and to have cleaned the room that she had littered, which would have been the best reproof you could have given her, you merely said, 'Mary, you shouldn't have done so,
and let her then go off to her play, while you went to work and put things to rights again. When she came in from school you permitted her to throw her books, bonnet and cloak on a chair, or anywhere, and never made her put them in the proper place, but did it yourself. You have never made her repair a rent in her clothes, darn a stocking, or take a stitch for herself, though she is now sixteen. When she complained, as children will, that the teachers in the public school were 'cross and hateful,' you withdrew her and sent her to Miss Brown's school, and from that to another, and so you let her change according to her own fancy or caprice; and how could she become proficient in any study? When she went into the kitchen to try her hand at some kind of cookery, instead of encouraging her to persevere, you said, 'Mary, you are so awkward, let me finish it.' And why should she be saving and careful of her clothes, so long as she is not made to realize their cost, and has nothing to do but to express her wish, and it is granted? In short, you, yourself, are responsible for Mary's careless and untidy habits." Mrs. Smith winced under Aunt Patty's severe lecture, but her lips and her face flushed, but she held her peace to the end, for she feared a revision of Aunt Patty's "last will and testament," and only remarked, though a little sarcastically, as she left the room, "It is very singular that folks who never had any children are the only people that could train them exactly right."

Children's Nightgowns.

(Written by L. U. McCANN.)

Having the health and comfort of the little folks deeply at heart, and a willingness to adopt any suggestion that seemed to be for their benefit, we welcomed awhile ago the then new-fashioned nightdrawers, which promised to insure such continued comfort to the children, as, no matter how much they might toss and tumble throughout the night, these "new-fangled" garments, with their stocking-like extensions, prevented the possibility of their becoming wholly uncovered during their sleep.

We discarded at once the long, soft cotton-flannel gowns, with which our children were plentifully provided, so as to allow of frequent changes, as nightclothes require this even more than the day's apparel. Being used under cover, the excretions escaping from the body are more closely confined to them; nor have they the same opportunities of purification as the clothes worn in the day, from the constant change of air about the latter, which carries off much that would be deleterious to the health of the wearer under other circumstances. Believing the new gowns to be an improvement in every respect over the old ones, we made up a full supply of them according to the latest patterns, which combined in one garment a high-necked and long-sleeved waist, drawers and stockings, making them large and full, so as to allow for both the shrinkage of the cloth and the growth of the children.

The verdict of all parties concerned in the experiment was at first unanimously in favor of the new night dresses. All agreed that they were just the things to keep the children covered all night; prevent colds, croup, etc., which usually resulted from such exposure whilst the children on their part were equally delighted, and regardless of sex, tumbled about like young acrobats in their long "tights," turning somersaults to their hearts content upon their spring beds every night before they were willing to say their prayers and go to sleep.

As before stated, we were at first delighted with the new garment. Experience, however, has taught us the error of our then too hasty conclusion. We nurse our little ones ourselves, nor dare to delegate the training of their earlier years (wherein the "twig is bent" for good or ill), to less responsible parties. As we gave the children their morning bath, day after day; the question arose in one form or another, "What made these red streaks on your little leg, my dear?" "Oh!" the child answers, "my drawers got twisted in the night and cut me there. They cramp me all up sometimes when they get twisted that way. Then I dream bad dreams, and think that somebody is cutting me, or holding me tight, so that I cannot get away. I try to run, and can't do it, and at last, I wake up and find it was only my drawers screwed around me so tight that were hurting me so. They often do that way."

How better could she explain, dear little innocent, what our greater experience enables us to interpret from her prattling. How could she know that her bad dreams and all were caused by the fact that the free circulation of the blood through the little limbs had been cut off by the tight twist of the patent drawers around the form of the unconscious sleeper. And yet it was not until some time after our adaptation of the new garments that this fact fully dawned upon our minds in its full significance. The frequent recurrence of "red streaks" upon the tender bodies at last set us to thinking and watching. The result was, very soon, a conviction that the new night-drawers were neither comfortable nor healthful, as they were apt to become "twisted" around the child's form as it tossed about during the night, causing, by this tightness, an irritation and pressure upon the delicate parts of the body which was injurious, both morally and physically, and impeding more or less the circulation of the blood to all parts of the system, which is so necessary to perfect health.

When this conviction became established in our minds, the drawers were at once discarded, and the long, full gowns (which had been packed away in the trunks of out-grown clothing as a gift for some poor body), were brought out again. The little ones were robed in flowing garments once more; the "red streaks" and bad dreams disappeared together, and with their little limbs untrammelled by anything they once again slept in blissful healthful unconsciousness from early dark to early dawn.

CAPTAIN DELANEY, a French infantry officer, predicted four years ago that there would be an earthquake in Java, giving the date two days within that of its actual occurrence. He now predicts a worse one in 1886. The Academy of Sciences in Paris, after discussing the prediction, decided that it was merely an extraordinary coincidence.

My Pet Squirrel.

(Written by J. H.)

Come, little bright eyes, and I will tell you a story; a true story, of the time when I was a little girl, not much older than you.

Where I lived then, we had none of the squirrels that we see here in California, that do so much mischief to the farmers, and that people try to kill with traps, and guns and poison. The squirrels there are graceful, pretty little creatures, with soft, fine fur, gray on their bodies and white underneath, long, bushy tails which they curl up over their backs when they sit up on their hind legs, and the brightest little black eyes you ever saw.

They do not live in holes in the ground, but make their homes in the trees, where they scamper about among the branches, and are as merry and playful as kittens.

One day, a girl who was in the same class at school, told me that a colored man on her father's farm had cut down a tree, and found in a hollow limb a nest of young squirrels; he had taken care of them, and now he would like to sell them for twenty-five cents apiece. Off I rushed to my mother to beg that I might have one of them for a pet, and the dear, kind mother who never said "No," when it was possible to say "Yes," gave me the money to send for the little squirrel. Was there ever a happier child than I when he was brought to me? I was never tired of playing with him; he was so tame that he would run all over me, sit on my shoulder, take a nut from my hand; and he was so pretty and so full of fun that soon every one in the house learned to love him.

At first I never let him out of his cage unless the door was shut, but soon I began to feel sorry for the little fellow kept always in the house. A little collar was made for him, and fastening a strong string to it, I ventured to take him out of doors and let him run about on the grass, and even on the low trunk and branches of the trees. This went very well for a short time, but at last Master Bunny gave a sudden jerk when I was not thinking, and pulled the string out of my hand. Away he went as fast as he could, up, up, up, to the very top of a great ash tree higher than the house. I called to him, offered him nuts, tried in every way to coax him to come down, but he was too happy, racing about wherever he chose to go, to look at me or listen to my voice.

Would he ever come back? I was ready to cry, but my mother comforted me by saying she thought he would come down when he was ready to go to bed, for he liked a warm, soft nest to sleep in, and one day had hidden himself in the rag bag for hours, while I was looking for him everywhere and wondering what had become of him. While I stood watching him, the string which was tied to his collar in some way got caught on a branch of the tree, and there he was fastened tight, where no one could get to him to set him free. He struggled and pulled, but all in vain, and I was in terrible distress, thinking he would have to stay there and starve to death before my eyes, but the string was not so strong as I fancied, and presently it broke. The poor little fellow had not time to save himself; he had been pulling so hard that he had lost his balance, and down he came, head foremost, falling just at my feet. Of course, I was quite sure that he was dead, as you or I would have been if we had had such a fall, and I picked him up as he lay motionless and still, and carried him into the house almost heart-broken for the loss of my pretty pet. How do you think I felt when presently his bright eyes opened, he raised his head, looked around, and then ran up to my shoulder and sat there as well and as happy as ever? He had only been stunned by his fall, and was not hurt in the least.

After that I never took him out with a string fastened to his neck again, but as he was so tame and so fond of me I thought I would trust him to run about by himself. I let him go up a tree and after he had played about for some time I called him and held out a handful of nuts, and was greatly pleased when he came down and let me catch him. Every afternoon he had a run, coming to me quite willingly when it grew late, though sometimes he would be in a mischievous mood and would run around and around on the trunk of the tree, keeping just out of my reach, and peeping at me with his eyes sparkling with fun. Once when I caught hold of him too suddenly he turned and fastened his sharp little teeth in my thumb, and I could show you even now the small scar left by his bite. I did not let him go, you may be sure, when he'd made me pay in that way for catching him.

But I lost him at last. All through the summer I let him out among the trees when I went to school in the morning and called him in the afternoon when I came home; and for a long time he never failed to answer. But one day he was gone. I think he must have made friends with some other squirrels in the woods and decided to go and live with them altogether. I looked for him for many days, but though I caught a glimpse of a bushy-tail disappearing among the branches now and then, I could never be quite sure that it was my Bunny; and I tried to be contented to have him go, because all wild creatures are happier in freedom than it is possible for us to make them while we keep them in a cage.

Rheumatism.

The joints, the hinges of the body, are affected by rheumatism in such a way that the slightest motion gives pain. A creaking hinge is dry, and turns hard. A single drop of oil to moisten it makes a wonderful change, and it instantly moves on itself with the utmost facility. Rheumatism is an inflammation of the surface of the joints. Inflammation is heat; this heat dries the surface; hence the very slightest effort at motion gives piercing pain. In a healthy condition of the parts nature is constantly throwing out a lubricating oil, which keeps the joints in a perfectly smooth and easy working condition. Rheumatism is almost always caused by a cold dampness. A dry cold or a warm dampness does not induce rheumatism. A garment wetted by perspiration or rain, or water in any other form, about a joint, and allowed to dry while the person is in a state of rest, is the most common way of causing rheumatism. A partial wetting of a garment is more apt to induce an attack than if the entire clothing were wetted; because, in the latter case, it would be certainly and speedily exchanged for dry garments. The very moment a garment is wetted, in whole or in part, change it, or keep in motion sufficient to maintain a very slight perspiration, until the clothing is perfectly dried.

The failure to wear woolen flannel next the skin is the most frequent cause of rheumatism, for a common muslin or linen, or silk shirt, of a person in perspiration becomes damp and cold the instant a puff of air strikes it, even in mid-summer. This is not the case when woolen flannel is worn next the skin.

This troublesome affection is cured by keeping the joint affected wound around with several folds of woolen flannel; second, live entirely on the lightest kind of food, such as coarse bread, ripe fruits, berries, boiled turnips, stewed apples, and the like. If such things were eaten to the extent of keeping the system freely open, and exercise were taken, so that a slight moisture should be on the surface of the skin all the time, or if in bed, the same thing were accomplished by hot teas and plentiful bed clothing, a grateful relief and an ultimate cure will very certainly result in a reasonably short time. Without these, the disease will continue to torture for weeks, months and years.

Inflammatory rheumatism may, for all practical purposes, be regarded as an aggravated form of the common kind, extended to all the joints of the body, instead of implicating only one or two. For all kinds, time, flannel, warmth, with a light and cooling diet, are the great remedies.—Sanitarium.

Hydrophobia.

For some time M. Pasteur, the French investigator, has been experimenting with a view of discovering whether the fatal infection of rabies can be disarmed of its power by inoculation. It is said that he now possesses four dogs which are proof against the infection, whatever may be the method of inoculation used or the virulence of the matter, while other dogs inoculated with the same virus invariably perish. The experimenter raises the question whether these four animals owe their impunity to spontaneous recovery from a mild attack, which may have escaped observation, or whether they are naturally refractory to the disease. One of the three dogs which he inoculated in 1881 survived, and though twice inoculated in 1882 he did not become rabid. The importance of finding a remedy for all forms of hydrophobia is magnified by two facts brought to light by the researches of M. Bert. One of these is that even if the saliva of a mad dog does not communicate rabies, it may prove fatal by producing serious local injuries; in other words, the secretions of rabid animals have poisonous properties over and above the special rabic virus. The second fact is that it does not follow because a dog which has bitten any person does not die, that the animal is free from rabies. These conclusions will add to the terrors of the disease; but there is some consolation in learning from M. Bert that the mere salivas of rabid dogs do not always communicate the deadly virus, and apparently never communicate it unless they contain the mucus from the respiratory organs, which seems to be the fatal portion of the saliva.

Household Hints.

ORANGE CAKE.—One-half cupful of sugar, one-fourth cupful of butter, one-fourth cupful of sweet milk, one egg, one cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder. Stir the butter and sugar to a cream, then add the yolk of the egg, and when well mixed pour in the milk, stirring thoroughly; then add the flour, in which the baking powder has been thoroughly mixed; beat till smooth, and stir in the white of the egg beaten to a stiff froth. Beat briskly for two or three minutes, and bake in two round pie plates. For the filling you require two good-sized oranges, a heaping tablespoonful of flour, two tablespoonfuls of water, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, and the yolk of one egg. Grate the yellow rind from one orange and put aside till needed. Peel the oranges, remove all the white rind, and cut them into small pieces, cutting out all the center pith and removing the seeds. Put the oranges in a bowl and set in a dish of boiling water, and when it is hot stir in the flour mixed to a smooth paste with the water.

If too stiff to stir smoothly add a little more water. When it thickens it should be stirred constantly. Beat the yolk of an egg to a cream with the sugar, stir it in, and cook two or three minutes. Remove from the fire, and, if not pleasantly tart, add a little lemon juice or a tiny pinch of tartaric acid and stir in half the grated peel. When the mixture and cakes are both cold, put the orange between the cakes, beat the white of the egg to a stiff froth, and add two even tablespoonfuls of sugar; beat well, stir in the remainder of the grated peel, and spread over the top of the cake, which should be placed for two or three minutes in a hot oven to brown lightly. It requires close watching and frequent turning, that all sides may brown alike. A grated pineapple is a delicious substitute for the orange.—Emily Hayes, in Household.

MOUNT BLANC PUDDING.—Boil six or seven large apples as you would for sauce, stir in two ounces of butter, a little sugar, and the grated rind and juices of half a lemon. Cover the edge of a baking dish with a layer of puff paste, well butter the inside of the dish, and line it plentifully with fresh bread crumbs. Fill it with the apple mixture, and cover well with more bread crumbs. Scatter little bits of butter over the top, and a sifting of sugar, and let it be in the oven until the paste is done, and the top of the pudding slightly browned. Whip the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth, and pile them roughly in spoonfuls over the bread crumbs at the top of the pudding, but not over the border of paste; sift a spoonful of white sugar over it, and put it back into the oven just long enough to set the eggs without coloring them.

BEEF STEAK WITH OLIVES.—Take a piece of rump steak, cut it in slices three-eighths of an inch thick, and trim them into shape. Melt plenty of butter in baking-tin, lay the fillets of beef in this, and let them stand in a warm place for an hour or so; then sprinkle them with pepper and salt, and fry them in some very hot butter, turning them to let both sides take color. Stone a quantity of olives and parboil them. Fry some onions a brown color in butter, add a little flour, and, when that is colored, as much stock as you want sauce, with pepper, salt and spices to taste. Let the sauce boil, then strain it, add the olives and serve when quite hot, with the fillets in a circle round them.

LEMON PICKLE.—Peel very thinly six lemons; take off the white, cut the pulp into slices, remove the seeds. Put the peel and pulp into a jar, sprinkling with two ounces of salt; cover the jar and let it stand three days; then boil in a quart of vinegar six cloves, three blades mace, two or three shalots and two ounces of bruised mustard seed; pour it boiling hot over the lemons in the jar, and when cold tie over. In a month strain and bottle the liquor and use the lemon as pickle. This is a nice sauce for veal cutlets and minced veal.

CUCUMBER CATSUP.—Take one dozen large, ripe cucumbers; make a bag of thin muslin; put them in it and hang them up to drain over night; chop two or three onions, two or three green peppers, add a tablespoonful of salt, and the thin substance left in the bag; one quart of the best vinegar is needed.

Lodge Locals.

Recorders are invited to correspond. Lodges may also find space for notices here for a limited time.

OUR CITY LODGES.

Washington, No. 60.

District Deputy Grand Master Carroll, assisted by District Deputies Danforth, McKay and Lemont, and Past Masters Wilson of Spartan, No. 36, and Farless of Fidelity, No. 136, visited this Lodge Thursday evening, the 13th ult., and installed Bro. John Stock as Foreman, and Bro. B. N. DeLeon as Overseer. This duty being completed they proceeded to

Sts. John, No. 73.

Where the M. W. Degree was conferred in a very creditable manner. They report themselves as having had a very pleasant time at each of these Lodges, and were well pleased with their reception. It was on the programme to have visited Unity, No. 27, and Hercules, No. 53, on the 25th and 28th ults., respectively. We hope to get notes concerning these visits for our next issue.

Olympic, No. 127.

Olympic, No. 127, celebrated her fourth anniversary Tuesday evening, the 11th ult., by a very pleasant social party at their hall on Eddy street. Dancing was the order of the evening. Bro. Georges, of Sherman & Clay's, superintended the music, which is a guarantee that it was good. For refreshment, there was a bountiful supply of ice cream and cakes. The party was largely attended, and all present enjoyed themselves in most approved style.

Silver Spray, No. 3. D. of H.

The fifth anniversary of this Degree of Honor Lodge was celebrated by a most successful and pleasant party given at B. B. Hall, Eddy street, on the evening of Friday, the 14th ult. The evening was devoted to dancing to the fine music of Coggin's band. Good refreshments were served. A large number were in attendance and testified their complete enjoyment. The officers of the Lodge acted as the committees for the various purposes. Silver Spray has over 100 members in good standing, most of whom are also members of Valley, No. 30.

ALAMEDA COUNTY.

California, No. 1.

An entertainment in aid of a brother afflicted with paralysis, was given by this Lodge at Hansen's hall, West Oakland, on Thursday evening, 13th ult. The attendance was good. Recitations, songs and duets pleasantly filled up about two hours, evidently to the great enjoyment of the audience, and at 10 o'clock the floor was cleared for dancing, which was kept up with much enjoyment till a late hour. Mr. Strachauer gained an encore for a flageolet solo, as did J. M. J. Kane for reciting "Little Meg and I," to which he responded with "McLaine's Child." Mr. Henry Aveling also had to respond to a well-merited applause for his fine rendition of "Phrynes' Husband," a poem by G. R. Sims; his second selection was entitled "The Little Hatchet Story," as was told, with interruptions, to a five-year-old child. Mr. Aveling's reputation as an actor is well-known, and he fully sustains it on the platform. A novel feature was a whistling duet by Mr. and Mrs. Poulter. Past Grand Master W. H. Barnes and a number of others helped fill out the very interesting programme.

Pacific, No. 7.

Being present with this Lodge last Thursday night, we found its membership progressing as usual. One candidate received the J. W. degree and one member was received by deposit of card. Pacific now, we understand, has the largest membership in good standing of any Oakland Lodge, being considerably over 200. To their credit be it said that on Assessment No. 12, not one member was declared delinquent—each member paying up for himself before the 28th of the month.

Berkeley, No. 10.

On Tuesday evening, the 25th ult., we turned our steps toward the classic shades of Berkeley, and on arriving, hunted up Bro. Payne, the Recorder, who informed us that there would be no Lodge meeting that night, and that there had not been any since the first meeting night of the month; that owing to their scattered and small membership, meetings were only held occasionally, and most of the business was transacted through the recording officers. We are informed at the Grand Recorder's office that their business affairs are in fair shape, but that the spirit of fraternity is at a low ebb. We are sorry to hear this, and hope that matters will so adjust themselves soon that Berkeley, No. 10, may have a revival of interest.

University, No. 88.

Saturday, the 22d ult., found this pleasant and thriving Berkeley Lodge on our visiting programme. University numbers about forty members, of whom a fair percentage were in attendance. The J. W. Degree was conferred in good style upon one candidate. Adolph Kschieschang is M. W. and J. G. Wright, Recorder. Among interesting remarks from several under the head of "Good of the Order," we noticed one feature that is a commendable one, and is being followed by many Lodges, i. e., the reading of timely selections from the WATCHMAN by the Recorder. Brother Thos. Hann remarked that it was about time for Alameda county to be set apart as a separate Beneficiary Jurisdiction as they now had over 2,000 members. Another brother wanted to amend the suggestion by including San Francisco. University Lodge has never had a death.

Ashler, No. 165.

From the Alameda Encinal of the 26th ult., we take the following interesting account of a "Ladies' Jinks" recently held by Ashler: Ashler Lodge-room was comfortably filled last Tuesday evening, in response to invitations to an entertainment especially arranged for the ladies. Upon entering the hall each lady was presented with a ticket giving her an interest in a budget of prizes, of more or less value and significance. The entertainment commenced with a minstrel programme, similar in make-up and detail to that given by the Ashlers, some months ago, at the Park Opera House. The orchestra—a good one—was composed of Messrs. Duffie, violin; R. Gibbons, flute; Theo. Poindexter, cornet; R. Frank Clark, violincello; J. E. Baker, guitar; T. Kellogg, piano. The vocal parts were filled by Messrs. F. A. Harnden and G. H. Mastick, tenors; J. E. Baker, basso; W. D. Littleton, baritone. Mr. A. F. Cornell was master of ceremonies and Mr. Littleton the interlocutor, with Harry B. Wheaton and A. S. Cheminant at the ends. Thus arranged, the audience waited for the music, when, just as the baton was about to be raised, Mr. J. B. Vosburgh, who has a poetic vein in his composition which will crop out, stepped to the front and read a characteristic production, filled to the brim with "points" and hits at his fellow members, which were heartily applauded by the audience. Then came an overture by the orchestra, and then Mr. Littleton sang "Wait Till the Clouds Roll By," followed by Harry Wheaton's "St. Patrick's Day Parade;" then "Hour of Sweet Repose," by Mr. Baker, followed by "Norine Maurine," by Mr. Harnden; closing with "Over the Ashler Wall," a sharp paraphrase on "Over the Garden Wall," by Mr. Cheminant. Throughout this first part jokes, conundrums and well put sallies of wit fell thick and fast, the audience being kept in perpetual good humor. "Brown had a Mule," and that mule ended the first part. Then came upon the stage the Three Musical Cupids, Messrs. Hand, Wheaton and Littleton, whose olio of melody and mirth-provoking antics were as enjoyable as the best performance given by professionals in the same line. This finished, the grand drawing of prizes was announced, for which a huge wheel of fortune—as honestly constructed as that of the great Kentucky Lottery Company—was brought forth, manned by Messrs. Vosburgh and Baker. A grain sack, of huge dimensions, was extended its full length against the wall at the rear of the stage, which Mr. Wheaton, who acted as manager of the drawing, said contained "a pig in a poke." The wheel, at the word of the manager, was vigorously turned and a number handed up. A call for its duplicate elicited no response, everyone not in the secret fearing the perpetration of a huge joke upon the holder of the corresponding number. Finally, after three trials, Capt. Thomson Collie responded to a number and got a prize from the depths of the mysterious looking sack. Thereafter there was but little trouble in getting hands up as the numbers were called, each recipient of a prize being honored with a short "address" from the manager. The prizes being exhausted, the "what-you-call-'em" in the sack struggled for release from its confinement; but it was useless to struggle—strong hands, belonging to Mr. E. R. Anthony, grabbed the dispenser of prizes, Mr. Cheminant, by the neck, and with a stout cord tied him securely in the bag. Then the manager called for ticket No. 1, which was held by Mrs. C., who led her prize away amid hilarious laughter. Thus closed the "Ladies' High Jinks," and all present voted it a grand success, and as we descended the stairs to the street the old, old song came freshly to our mind, "We hold it one of the wisest things to drive dull care away."

Last Tuesday night a delegation numbering about forty from Fidelity, No. 136, paid Ashler Lodge a visit in return for one received some time before. It was somewhat in the nature of a surprise party, and did not find as many Ashlerites at home as might have been the case otherwise, but those who were present bravely entertained their visitors, and a pleasant evening was the result. Addresses were made in behalf of the visiting brethren by Deputy Grand Master Wilson, Bro. Stewart, M. W. of Fidelity, and Bro. E. M. Reading, Secretary of the Guarantee Fund Association. Music was interspersed by hosts and guests in the shape of piano solos, songs, quartettes, etc., and good fellowship reigned supreme.

COLUSA AND BUTTE COUNTIES.

Butte City, No. 206.

Deputy Grand Master Wilson, District Deputy Danforth, and Bro. E. M. Reading, Secretary of the Guarantee Fund Association, visited this Lodge in the interest of the Order Saturday evening, 15th ult. They were met by Bro. W. C. Craig, P. M. W. of this Lodge, at Norman station, 18 miles away, and conveyed in good style by that gentleman's team to their destination. Bro. Craig also deserves especial commendation for his efforts in behalf of the cause by placing himself and fine turnout at the disposal of these brethren during their entire stay in the county. At the Lodge session the secret work was exemplified by Bro. Danforth, after which the Lodge was closed, and the members repaired to the public hall, which was crowded with the families and friends of the members. The meeting was called to order by P. M. W. Hartley, who introduced respectively Bros. Wilson, Danforth and Reading. During the addresses, which were listened to with unusual attention, a delegation from Nelson, 14 strong, having ridden 20 miles, entered the hall. The meeting closed with a general good time socially, and refreshments. Although a young Lodge in a sparsely settled district, the Lodge numbers 45 members, alive to their duties. Morgan Alberty is Master Workman, and D. R. Watkins, Recorder. Bro. Wilson was called home from this point. They next visited Maxwell, No. 170.

At the town of Maxwell, on Tuesday evening, 18th ult., where nearly the whole town turned out to meet them. Bro. Weeks, M. W., presided at the public meeting there held. After the addresses, the floor was cleared and dancing kept up till nearly midnight, when supper was announced. After regaling themselves at this bounteous spread the company returned to the hall, where the light fantastic was resumed till gray dawn. At this point Bro. Danforth received a telegram announcing the death of his intimate friend, Alexander Weed—the Sir Knight who was injured in the recent Templar celebration—and returned home immediately. Maxwell numbers 65 members—live men. Bro. Reading then proceeded a distance of 12 miles to Princeton, No. 201.

In the town of the same name, where he addressed the Lodge at length, Wednesday evening, 19th ult. Princeton has a membership of 22, although quite scattered. Master Workman J. B. Hankensen is the earnest teacher of the place. From this place at the hour of midnight Bro. Reading returned to Butte City on his way to Nelson, Butte county, arriving Thursday afternoon, the 20th ult.

Nelson, No. 202.

Delegations at this place were in attendance from Butte City, Durham, Maxwell, Live Oak, and Biggs Lodges—the latter delegation being accompanied by a brass band. Their beautiful and tastily arranged hall was packed to repletion. Master Workman Paxton presided, assisted by the Past Masters of several of the visiting Lodges. Bro. Reading addressed the crowd, after which the party formed in procession, headed by the band, and repaired to the hotel under the management of Bro. McIntosh, where a most excellent supper was served. After this agreeable incident, the party repaired to the celebrated $12,000 public school building of the town, where in a convenient hall dancing occupied the time until morning. Nelson numbers 32 members, and as may be judged from the foregoing, they will compare favorably with any interior Lodge of the size in the State.

LAKE COUNTY.

Anchor, No. 16.

The unpleasant tidings comes from this Lodge at Lower Lake to us through one of its officers, as follows: "We have not had a meeting of the Lodge for several months. I wish the Grand Lodge Officers would stir our officers up a little or else demand a surrender of our charter." Since receiving the foregoing we have met Bro. Levy, the Receiver of the Lodge, and he thinks there is a fair prospect of reviving affairs and putting them once more on a good foundation. The cause of the running down of the Lodge was the removal of a number of members caused by the shutting down of the Sulphur Bank mines near there. They now number 29 members, and there is no necessity of their breaking up. Bro. Watson, Deputy Grand Recorder, contemplates going up to revive them soon.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

Santa Ana, No. 82.

In a letter received from Bro. Geo. E. Freeman, Recorder of this Lodge, he says that the Lodge is flourishing, and gives us the name of the new M. W., L. Goepper, which will appear in correct form in our Lodge Directory, next issue.

San Fernando, No. 214.

The following lecture, together with the accompanying explanatory note, is received from San Fernando Lodge, No. 214:

EDITORS WATCHMAN:—I inclose you a lecture delivered Sept. 15, 1883, by Senor Don Romualdo Pico. Mr. Pico is the only living representative of that gallant soldier, statesman, patriot and genial gentleman, General Don Andreas Pico, whose fame and reputation are not confined within the bounds of the United States. We who lived as his neighbors knew him only to love him, and we revere his memory as a just and true man, without an enemy. He died at a ripe old age, and was universally mourned. Vale, vale, old friend; we loved you in life, and in death respect and honor your memory. Yours, VETO.

Master Workman and Brothers: By special request of our brother, Mr. Wright, I will say a few words concerning our grand and much beloved Order. It is well known through the world, brothers, that our Order stands high to-day, and inferior to none. From the standpoint of our past prosperity, the view beyond is hopeful and grand, and we can take renewed encouragement for the future of our Order in this jurisdiction. The active, earnest zeal with which the brotherhood enters upon the work, and their faithful practice of its precepts, cannot but impress society with a favorable opinion of our institution, and lead good and intelligent men to desire and seek a more intimate knowledge of its intrinsic excellence. Therefore we cannot fail to see and recognize in these lessons which are so instructive, that by just such a spirit of energy with us, and unconquerable devotion, sustained by the favor and blessing of God, have we grown into thousands; from a feeble germ to a great tree, whose branches now reach the ends of the entire continent, and there is no doubt in my mind but that in a few years they will reach the ends of the earth.

The reason is that we have a splendid institution, and its capacity for good is scarcely known to ourselves, much less so to the general public. I feel the force of this truth, and am convinced in my own mind that we will stand in the future above all, because the high aim of our Order is to elevate the character of man, help the distressed brother and succor the heart-broken widow and orphans. Each one of you knows that in the constitution and by-laws of this Order are few words—words that concentrate the truth. To embrace and give protection to all classes and all kinds of labor, mental and physical; to strive earnestly to improve the moral, intellectual and social condition of its members; to endeavor by wholesome precepts, fraternal admonitions and substantial aid to inspire a due appreciation of the stern realities and responsibilities of life. To this end, brothers, let us work to elevate our Order and properly discharge our duty to God and our fellow men. Let us be united in will for elevation. Let us fervently hope that our Order may be increased a hundred fold, and not suffered to become less by inertness or the want of expansive exercise, but that each successive year may open up to the brotherhood new paths of duty and nobler labors of love; and that there may be given to them a spirit that will know no chill, and that will finally overcome all evil influences and lead us upward to the crowning summit of humanity. Let us work while it is the day in the proper discharge of this duty, for the night of death comes in which no man can work.

Let us so live out our appointed time that the world will be the better for our having lived in it; laying up for ourselves a good foundation against the time to come, that when the dreaded summons shall come to us—as come it will—we may be prepared for the life beyond the grave, and be admitted into the Celestial Lodge above, and our reward will be to hear the great King and Judge say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

SACRAMENTO COUNTY.

Union, No. 21.

On Saturday evening, Sept. 15th, the WATCHMAN representative had the pleasure of visiting Union Lodge, No. 21. It being Fair week, there was not a large attendance, but the meeting was a very pleasant one. The feature of the evening was comprised in the favorable discussion of affairs concerning their Degree of Honor Lodge. Past Masters Simpson, Jordan, Roth, Gregory, Magann and Martin, and Recorder Bradley, all made enthusiastic speeches, the tenor of which was to immediately take steps to buy a piano for the Lily of the Valley Lodge, No. 11, Degree of Honor, and the Lily will probably soon get her piano.

SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY.

Stockton, No. 23.

The representative of the WATCHMAN in attendance at the Stockton fair visited this Lodge, Friday evening, 21st ult. Although on account of outside attractions the attendance was light, the members present showed themselves fully alive to their duties as Workmen. The Lodge numbers 225 of the representative men of that city, and is fully abreast, if not ahead of any other fraternal organization in that county. Bro. J. R. Hall is Master Workman, and Bro. H. W. Taylor, Recorder. Stockton, No. 23, has under its protection a flourishing Degree of Honor Lodge—Eureka, No. 25.

STANISLAUS COUNTY.

Refuge, No. 15, D. of H.

Bro. S. V. Porter, Recorder of this Lodge, says: "I am instructed by the Lodge to send you a list of the officers elected and installed on our first meeting night in August, it being postponed until the new law governing the same should come into effect." [The list is published elsewhere.—EDS.] 'Great interest is taken in the work by the sisters, and at our next meeting we expect to start the beneficiary ball rolling. Our membership is from a scattered farming community, but we are much pleased with the new work and expect to do better in the future.'

IDAHO.

Institution of Hailey Lodge, No. 1.

From the Wood River Times we learn that this Lodge was instituted at Hailey, on the 17th ult., with 24 charter members. This first Lodge of the Order in Idaho was instituted by J. W. Kinsley, Grand Master Workman of Nevada jurisdiction, assisted by the following acting by proxy as Grand Officers: T. E. Picotte, formerly of River Lodge, No. 6, of Dayton, Nev., as Past Grand Master Workman; N. J. Brown as Grand Foreman; Thomas Bell as Grand Overseer; W. T. Hall, of Hercules, No. 53, San Francisco, as Grand Guide; H. Ward, of Bodie, Cal., No. 135, as Grand Watchman; John Fitch, of Industry, No. 78, of Missouri, as Grand Recorder; H. Z. Burkhardt, of Valley Lodge, No. 30, San Francisco, as Grand Receiver; George A. Dyson, of Linn Lodge, No. 22, Brownsville, Oregon; J. Williams and W. F. Thrall, of Oswego, Kansas, and M. S. Osterhout, P. M. W. of Yerba Buena Lodge, No. 14, of San Francisco. The following officers were unanimously elected: T. E. Picotte, P. M. W.; Dr. N. J. Brown, M. W.; G. M. Parsons, Foreman; Thomas Bell, Overseer; H. L. Pound, Recorder; Jos. M. Burkett, Receiver; J. J. Tracy, Financier; E. H. Hendrick, Guide; W. B. Scott, Inside Watchman; E. Heckethorn, Outside Watchman; W. T. Riley, J. H. Bacon and E. A. White, Trustees; Drs. Brown and Miller, Medical Examiners. The fees for admission of new members were placed at $20. The same paper speaks of the probability of the institution of a Lodge at Bullion in the same Territory at an early date.

UTAH.

Good Fellowship, No. 6.

Bro. J. N. Louder, Recorder of this Lodge, sends us the following cheering news concerning his Lodge: "Our Lodge has acquired 32 additional members within the 30 days preceding Aug. 15, '83. We are progressing in a most satisfactory manner, and, in fact, all our sister Lodges in this and adjoining territory within this jurisdiction, appear alive to the benefits of our Order."

A. O. U. W. Chitchat.

Triumph, No. 180, has changed its place of meeting from Red Men's hall to Parker hall, in the Odd Fellows building, Montgomery street.

We understand that an unusually interesting meeting of Hercules, No. 53, was to have been held Friday evening last. Reports hereafter.

Bro. Ernst L. Fischer, deceased, of Mountain View Lodge, No. 59, a notice of whose death appears in the Relief Assessment for October, was the victim of a cowardly murderer, a discharged employee.

In several cases, reports of Lodge elections sent have evidently failed to reach us, which accounts for any lack of changes in our Lodge Directory. In several other cases we fear that Recorders have not taken enough interest to send us a report, and consequently their Lodge cards also remain uncorrected.

An incident that is not easily classified in the Lodge Locals, owing to the number of Lodges concerned, is here reserved for the Chitchat column. Last Tuesday night a delegation from Hercules, No. 53, headed by Past Master Veasey, paid a visit to Olympic, No. 127, and after a short and pleasant stay, the two Lodges doubled teams and proceeded over to Unity Lodge, No. 27, and there paid a surprise visit, which was well appreciated.

Other Jurisdictions.

The Nevada Grand Lodge Jurisdiction includes 16 Lodges in Nevada, 11 in Utah, 18 in Montana and 3 in Wyoming, making a total of 47 Lodges, 23 of which were instituted during the past year.

In St. Louis there are thirty-three A. O. U. W. Lodges with a total membership of 2,780. We think this a pretty good showing and one which speaks well for the standing of the Order and its influence in this community.—Overseer.

The leading Lodge in East Baltimore initiated twenty-three candidates during July, notwithstanding the hot weather, and they have got twenty-six more in pickle. They are wise—

"Like unto those who make their hay
In the glad some shine of a summer's day."
—Protector.

Truly the above is a creditable exhibit, but we would suggest the propriety in the case of those twenty-six, of—

Delaying not, lest rust and time
Should season them too much with brine.
And the twenty-six that now doth tinkle,
Might get in some other Lodge's pickle.

Then while the hay-day sun doth shine,
Send forth the Workman light sublime,
And of these twenty-six make brothers,
And set your pickle for twenty-six others.
—Sunday Courier.

AN official report just made on the Suez canal is a strong indictment of the French administration, and it is shown conclusively that the French mail packets had an advantage of twenty-four hours on an average of getting through the canal ahead of the English steamers.
